MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I thank you very much for your letter of January 21 and beg to advise that at the meeting of the Upper Carolina Association in Columbia, S. C., held in the hall of the house of representatives and being full of members of the State legislature and of members of the committees of the said association and of public-spirited and high-minded citizens, your letter was read and many expressed regret that you could not be present in person. I also regretted that Mr. Walters could not go. However, Mr. N. A. Winston, of the Soil Erosion Service, was present and made a most splendid presentation of that Service.

We also had present, representing the Chief Forester, Mr. J. C. Kircher, and also the regional forester, Mr. H. M. Sears. We also had Mr. J. C. Capt, representing the Rural Rehabilitation Service of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

The association adopted a set of resolutions, of which I hand you a copy; and I shall be happy to have the privilege of calling upon you in person at a very early date to present this cause to you more specifically. Probably there will accompany me at the time I call the special committee of five members of the association appointed yesterday for the purpose of contacting Federal officers and Members of Congress in behalf of the association. They are the Honorable D. A. G. Ouzts, of Greenwood, S. C.; the Honorable W. D. Douglas, of Winnsboro, S. C.; Hon. Lewis H. Gault, of Union, S. C.; Mr. J. B. Douthit, of Pendleton, S. C.; and Mr. I. E. Davis, of Greenwood, S. C.

We have a very definite program that we believe will meet the recommendations of the National Resources Board 100 percent, and also meet the recommendations of the President 100 percent by offering to the unemployed useful service in the following particulars:

1 Greatly increase and extend the work of the Soil Erosion Service.

2. At least double the number of C. C. C. camps engaged in soil-erosion work and in reforestation.

3. Enlarge and extend the Enoree National Forest and the Long Cane National Forest.

4. Increase and enlarge the Nantahala National Forest eastward across the mountains to and include Hogback Mountain in Spartanburg County.

5. Develop at once the waterpower at Buzzards Roost on Saluda River, at Lyles Ford on Broad River, the upper Saluda River near Greenville, S. C., and perhaps other projects that have been surveyed by the United States engineers and found to be feasible.

6. Set up at once farm marketing centers at or near Greenville, S. C., and at Spartanburg, S. C., to take the fruit, vegetables, milk, cream, eggs, chickens, hogs, and cattle, and miscellaneous farm products from the farmers near to Greenville in the following counties, to wit: Greenville County, Pickens County, Oconee County, Anderson County, and Laurens County; and next at Spartanburg, S. C., to serve the farmers of Spartanburg County, Cherokee County, Chester County, Fairfield County, and Union County.

7. To employ a large number—perhaps 50—educated and trained men now unemployed, entirely belonging to the "white-collared class", to go among the farmers at once and to tell them to plant standardized crops of vegetables and be prepared to supply the demands of the canneries at said farm marketing centers and also to tell the farmers what our program is to enable them to get away from the one-crop system of cotton which has impoverished them, being on the very fringe of the Cotton Belt.

8. Push the work of rehabilitation of stranded families in the cities and industrial centers by putting them out on the farms. Personally, I have about 700 acres of uncultivated farm lands and my close relatives have at least 1,000 more acres which we would be willing to lease to the Government for 5 years for just enough rental to pay the taxes; and on this land at least 25 or 30 families could be placed to begin farming. We would give an option on this land at a very low price, averaging, perhaps, not over $12.50 an acre, so that if the Government decided to buy it and to give these families a chance to acquire homes from the Government on long terms, whatever work they do within the 5-year period would not be lost to them but they would get the benefit of it if they subsequently bought the land.

9. Assist and encourage those who are now upon the land, but as tenant farmers and are prosperous as such, so that they may buy homes while land is now cheap and may buy the same on long terms and at low rates of interest. For illustration, within the last 5 years I have bargained to sell several farms to industrious, hard-working families and allow them as long as 15 years to pay the principal and also charge a low rate of interest. I am proud to say that they are all up with their obligations and some of them have anticipated their payments. This is a splendid work that the Government can do to help the tenant class to become landowners and thus become independent and substantial citizens.

10. Assist counties in the procurement of terracing machinery with which to terrace the lands of the farmers at the actual cost of such work whereby the original cost of the machinery may be refunded to the county. Most of the counties are now financially too weak to buy such machinery, which would cost only $4,000 or $5,000 per county.

I enclose clipping from my remarks of January 8, describing a plan of section-wide soil-erosion-control service, said plan being devised by Dr. T. S. Buie, in charge of the soil-erosion work at Spartanburg, S. C., and I hope that you will consider this very carefully, and assist us by advising Mr. Hopkins or whomever else may be put in control of this particular kind of work, to go forward with this great program.

I am pleased to tell you that yesterday on two or three different occasions I spoke in the strongest terms of endorsement concerning the work and the report of the National Resources Board, and a number of the gentlemen will be writing for copies of this report, in order that they may become familiar with its details.

I again call your attention to the fact that this Upper Carolina Development Association was organized on November 10, before the report of the National Resources Board came out, and to the remarkable fact that the organization and committees appointed by that association parallel their set-up with complete harmony the work and the report of the National Resources Board. I think, therefore, that our section, being thus beforehand and being so wide-awake and prepared to cooperate so fully as manifested by the enclosed resolutions, that we ought to have something of a priority in the way of assistance and encouragement and cooperation.

Therefore, Mr. Secretary, I trust that after you have had a chance to read this long letter you will have your secretary telephone me when it will suit you to have a short personal conversation with me about this splendid enterprise of the wide-awake citizens of upper Carolina.

With great respect, I am,

Yours most sincerely,

J. J. McSWAIN.

[Enclosure]

A resolution by Upper Carolina Development Association

Whereas the President of the United States has recommended to the Congress the appropriation of $4,000,000,000 to be used in giving useful employment to the unemployed of the United States by the construction of projects that will be socially and economically beneficial to the people of the United States for the present generation and succeeding generations; and

Whereas it is practically certain that such appropriation will be made for said purposes; and

Whereas the Upper Carolina Development Association was organized at Spartanburg, S. C., on November 10, 1934, with various subcommittees, for the promotion of projects in harmony with the report of the National Resources Board for the development and employment of water power and rural electrification and for the reforestation of worn-out and badly eroded lands and for the conservation of soils by soil-erosion control and by the devoting of submarginal lands to reforestation treatment, and by the setting apart of mountain lands for the conservation of wildlife and the amusement and diversion of the congested industrial populations: Now, be it

Resolved by the said Upper Carolina Development Association, meeting in the hall of the house of representatives at Columbia, S. C., on January 23, 1935, That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress be memorialized to cooperate with us in presenting to the President of the United States, and to his agents and representatives in the several departments and emergency administrations having in charge the wise and the useful employment of said $4,000,000,000, our plans for economically useful projects.

Resolved further, That we hereby pledge ourselves collectively as an association and individually as citizens to cooperate with all representatives and the agencies of the President and of his administration in carrying forward the program of conservation, development, and employment of the natural resources of soil, water, forests, mineral, and human, in the Nation at large, and in South Carolina in particular; be it further

Resolved, That a special committee of five persons be appointed by the chairman of this meeting to keep in constant touch and contact with the South Carolina delegation in Congress and with the President of the United States and his various administrations and agencies to the end that the unemployed in South Carolina may have the opportunity to earn a support and that the natural resources of soil, water, forest, mineral, and greatest of all, human beings, may receive a full and just share of this enormous expenditure of Federal funds to relieve unemployment, to revive business, and to restore prosperity.

Resolved further, That the diversification of crops is necessary to the economical conduct of farms and that crop diversification is practically impossible without adequate and convenient markets for such diversified products, and that the setting up of farm, marketing centers, with Federal aid, wherever possible, including canneries, creameries, cold storage, poultry, and eggs, assemblying plants and miscellaneous farm products, are hereby urged to be established by cities, counties, or other municipal corporations especially chartered by the general assembly, including parts of counties or several counties, with power to set up and operate such farm-marketing centers.

Duly adopted.

A concurrent resolution by house of representatives to memorialize Congress to provide the means for adoption of some plan providing insurance to the unemployed

Whereas in recent years the problems confronting the people of our country by reason of unemployment of those who are ready and willing to work but by reasons beyond their control are unable to secure employment have become great in magnitude; and

Whereas such problems affect our whole national and economic life and should be met and combated by the Government of the United States of America in such a way as to reduce the evils thereof to a minimum; and

Whereas it is felt that the safest and sanest way to minimize the effect of the unemployment is by the adoption of some plan of unemployment insurance: Be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the United States Senators and the Members of the United States House of Representatives from South Carolina be, and they are hereby, requested and urged to make every effort to have some plan of unemployment insurance adopted by the Government of the United States of America.

CLAUDE A. TAYLOR,
Speaker.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Columbia, S. C., January 22, 1935.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives and concurred in by the Senate of South Carolina.

JAMES E. HUNTER, JR.,
Clerk of the House.

SUGGESTED OUTLINE FOR THE EXTENSION OF THE SOIL-EROSION-CONTROL PROGRAM IN THE PIEDMONT SECTION OF SOUTH CAROLINA WITH THE SOIL EROSION SERVICE, THE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION SERVICE, AND THE FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION COOPERATING

Since the watershed demonstrations of soil-erosion control located in Spartanburg, Greenville, and York Counties have advanced to the point where practical control measures have been developed, the following outline of procedure is presented as a method of immediate extension of erosion-control measures throughout the Piedmont in response to urgent demands from farmers for such service. Such an expansion of the work is made possible because of the availability at this time of a considerable number of men who have had some specialized training in erosion-control methods, as well as a limited number of men who have had experience in soil classification and land use while employed with the land-use-survey project, and who are at this time without employment.

1. The soil-erosion service is to be responsible for all technical training and supervision of technical personnel.

2. The Extension Service, through the local county agent, will be responsible for educational, publicity, and contact work with the individual farmers of the respective counties and will select the farms or areas for demonstration.

3. All costs of county personnel and the necessary supplies and equipment, other than that furnished by the cooperating farmers, will be borne by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. The cost of training and supervision of technical work will be borne by the soil-erosion service.

4. The work will be organized on the county-unit basis, employing the following personnel: One experienced local man to be known as the "cooperating agent" and be selected jointly by the soil-erosion service, the Extension Service, and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration; four assistants, one to be especially trained in soils, agronomy, farm management, agricultural engineering, and forestry.

These assistants will be selected, subject to the approval of the local Federal Emergency Relief Administration authorities, by the soil-erosion service. The training and experience of these men must be such that they are capable of directing the work in their respective fields. As the program develops it may be expanded as the need arises, provided trained personnel is available.

5. The procedure followed will be to select representative farms or fields ranging in size from 10 acres to 100 acres as demonstrations. These selections are to be located in several sections of the county as the county agent and cooperating agent may see fit.

6. On these selected demonstration farms a complete program of erosion control will be put into effect, which will include soil and erosion classification, proper land utilization, diversification of crops, terracing as needed, terrace outlets, controlled waterways, agronomy and forestry plantings, and woodlot management.

7. The cooperating agent, under the direction of the county agent, will keep such records as to cost and accomplishments as may be mutually agreed upon. The results of such demonstrations will be available for use and publication by each of the cooperating agencies.

8. The working plans for each demonstration will be developed by representatives of the soil-erosion service and the Extension Service. The soil-erosion service and county agent shall have supervision over, and be responsible for, the carrying through of the working plans thus formulated on these demonstration farms.

9. Each county unit will arrange with the local Federal Emergency Relief Administration authorities to use the maximum amount of common labor possible. This will be employed in surveying terrace lines, construction of terrace outlets, preparation of controlled waterways, and in making plantings for erosion control.

10. The cooperating farmer will be required to supply all labor and material required in excess of that made available by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration or other source.

11. The three directing agencies named herein will develop and carry out this program in full cooperation with the State agricultural college, the State experiment station, the State forest commission, and all other conservation and educational agencies interested in the welfare of agriculture.

Estimate of cost, county unit

| | Amount | Percent |
|---|---|---|
| Personnel: | | |
| 1 cooperating agent, 6 months, at $150 | $900 | |
| 4 technical men, at $100 per month each | 2,400 | |
| Total, supervisory personnel | 3,300 | 19 |
| Estimate use 40 men, 24 weeks, at 30 cents per hour | 11,520 | 65 |
| Total, labor and supervision | 14,820 | |
| Travel, 1 at $50 and 4 at $25 | 900 | 5 |
| Equipment: | | |
| 4 horse-drawn terracers, at $75 | 300 | |
| 1 level and other surveying equipment | 100 | |
| 6 drag pans, at $10 | 60 | |
| 4 terracing plows, at $20 | 80 | |
| Miscellaneous tools | 100 | |
| Total equipment | 640 | 4 |
| Supplies: Wire, cement, etc., $200 per month | 1,200 | 7 |
| Grand total per county | 17,560 | 100 |

SOUTH CAROLINA, THE IODINE STATE

The State of South Carolina for several years conducted a food-analysis laboratory under the direction of a most eminent chemist, and his work was checked and rechecked by some of the most distinguished and scientific men of the Nation and of other nations. They have all agreed that the reports of the South Carolina Food Laboratory are correct, and upon that basis a comparison of the mineral content of vegetables and milk produced in upper South Carolina is most instructive. For the information of the Congress I am printing herewith a table showing such comparison, and it is manifest that in the case of iodine, iron, and manganese the South Carolina vegetables contain from 10 to 50 times as much of these most important health-preserving and health-restoring minerals as vegetables produced in other parts of the country.

[Dry basis]

| | Iodine | Iron | Copper | Manganese |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | P. p. b. | P. p. m. | P. p. m. | P. p. m. |
| Gerber's vegetable soup | 50 | 240 | 6.8 | 23.0 |
| Clapp's baby soup | 40 | 85 | 11.1 | 12.0 |
| Campbell's vegetable soup (sample 784) | 17 | 185 | 14.4 | 8.4 |
| Campbell's tomato soup (sample 789) | 15 | 327 | 13.8 | 8.0 |
| If these vegetables had been selected from the Piedmont section of South Carolina the analysis would have been | 490 | 658 | 20.0 | 108.0 |

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PEYSER, for today, on account of being confined to his home with a cold.

To Mr. HENNINGS (at the request of Mr. COCHRAN), indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] is unavoidably absent on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, owing to the lateness of the hour, and at the request of many Members, I wish to announce that the caucus that was to meet this evening at 7:30 will be postponed until Tuesday evening at the same hour.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell us what the program will be for tomorrow?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The Ways and Means Committee has a small bill which is unobjectionable, and they are going to bring it up tomorrow morning. It will take about an hour or an hour and a half. The Post Office and Treasury Departments appropriation bill will then be taken up for general debate. General debate will continue for the rest of the day. I hope the House will then adjourn over until Monday.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the action taken by the House today, I move that we adjourn sine die.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, January 25, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

BUSINESS TRANSACTED AS IN LEGISLATIVE SESSION

During the executive session the following legislative business was transacted by unanimous consent:

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the two joint resolutions submitted by me yesterday, being Senate Joint Resolution 44 and Senate Joint Resolution 45, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the joint resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 44

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to intoxicating liquors

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 3. The twenty-first amendment to the Constitution is hereby repealed."

Senate Joint Resolution 45

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to intoxicating liquors

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Congress shall have power to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes and to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 2. In the event of legislation by Congress to carry out this article the States shall have power to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes within their respective areas or to enact legislation in aid of that enacted by Congress to carry out this article. In the absence of legislation by Congress to carry out this article, the power to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes within their respective areas is reserved to the several States.

"SEC. 3. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 4. The twenty-first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

REPORT OF SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report covering the results of the Commission's investigation of stock-exchange government, together with its recommendations, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

INVESTIGATION OF PUBLIC-UTILITY CORPORATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate letters from the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 83, Seventieth Congress, first session, authorizing an investigation of public-utility corporations, two surveys, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Chapter XII, being a survey of State laws and regulations regarding utilities and their holding companies, with five supporting legal studies; and

Chapter XIII, setting forth the present extent of Federal regulation of utility holding companies and the need and feasibility of its enlargement, with two supporting studies.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the petition of Local No. 79, Stove Mounters' International Union, of Battle Creek, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation taxing 10-cent cigarettes $2.70 per thousand, with 15-cent and other higher-priced cigarettes to be taxed $3 per thousand, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NORBECK presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 1

(Introduced by Mr. Slocum)

A concurrent resolution relating to the proposed forest shelter belt in the Great Plains States

Whereas President Roosevelt has planned the establishment of a forest shelter belt, to be planted by the Federal Government in the Great Plains area of several Western States, including South Dakota, with the object of minimizing the destructive action of hot winds and to conserve the natural moisture of this section; and

Whereas experience has shown that trees exert an appreciable influence in modifying effects of climate as well as being of practical value in many ways; and

Whereas, due to the prolonged and unusual drought, many of the forest plantings of the original settlers have perished: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to enact the proper legislation necessary to carry the President's shelter-belt plan into effect; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is directed to supply copies of this resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

ROBERT PETERSON,
W. J. MATSON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented the following concurrent resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House File No. 83

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress to enact legislation to protect American industry and the employees thereof against cheap foreign labor and products

Whereas the State of Minnesota and the city of Cloquet are directly interested in the manufacture of matches through the employment of several hundred persons in that city in this industry, and through several hundred farmers of Carlton, St. Louis, Lake, Itasca, Cook, Crow Wing, Aitkin, Cass, Koochiching, and Pine Counties; and

Whereas there is now pending before the President of the United States a reciprocal treaty with Sweden whereby an attempt is being made to lower the duty now imposed on matches and to increase the quota of matches that Sweden be permitted to ship into the United States; and

Whereas the greater part of the match business is found in the competitive manufacturing of the strike-on-box match rather than in the sale of the same to the ultimate consumer; and

Whereas the labor cost incurred in the manufacturing of said match in the American industries, always relatively higher than the labor cost of the foreign match, has been increased in the American industry under the N. R. A. to an even higher relative level, to wit, 11 cents per gross higher than the former American rate, while the returns from sales have increased only 2.7 cents per gross; and

Whereas the consequences of the resulting unfair competition between the American industry and the foreign industry has meant that in the Cloquet factory, and in a similarly owned and operated factory at Dixfield, Maine, the total gross sale and production has decreased during 1934 by 1,153,847 gross boxes, or 23.84 percent, with an estimated loss of employment to 2,300 American workers; and

Whereas foreign match manufacturers have been guilty of unscrupulous practices by coloring the splints and so reducing the duty paid to one-third or less of the amount intended by Congress; and

Whereas to include in the said reciprocal treaty with Sweden provisions lowering the tariff and increasing the quota of matches that Sweden be permitted to ship into the United States would seriously threaten unemployment to the approximately 850 people employed in the Cloquet (Minn.) match factory and to the approximately 300 contractors, each employing from 1 to 10 men, which contractors are farmers of Carlton, St. Louis, Lake, Cook, Itasca, Crow Wing, Aitkin, Cass, Koochiching, and Pine Counties, and who were paid for wood during the year 1934 many thousands of dollars: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the senate concurring therein), That we hereby respectfully petition and urge the President of the United States not to include in the proposed reciprocal treaty with Sweden any provisions lowering the tariff or increasing the quota of matches that Sweden be permitted to ship into the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk be instructed to forward a copy hereof to the President of the United States, Secretary of State Cordell Hull, and Assistant Secretary Francis B. Sayre, and to each of the Minnesota Senators and Representatives in Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) making additional appropriations for the Federal Communications Commission, the National Mediation Board, and the Securities and Exchange Commission, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 25) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 1068) to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, concluded April 24, 1934, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 26) thereon.

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs is authorized and directed to investigate the facts leading to the court martial, as well as the court-martial proceedings and all the findings, in the case of former Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, United States Engineer Corps, and report to the Senate.

THE COTTON TEXTILE INDUSTRY OF NEW ENGLAND

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask leave to print in the RECORD a resolution pending in the Rhode Island House of Representatives. This resolution concerns the seriousness of the cotton-textile difficulties in New England and petitions Congress to adopt remedial legislation.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the unsatisfactory conditions in the textile industry are a cause of great distress in Rhode Island, and the lack of work imposes a heavy burden upon the relief agencies in the State; and

Whereas Federal legislation is needed to correct the conditions in the textile industry and to ameliorate suffering: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the general assembly respectfully requests the Senators and Representatives of Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to take such steps as will remedy the conditions now existent in the State; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the Senators and Representatives of Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I also send to the desk a very illuminating article by Mr. Clarence L. Linz, published in the New York Journal of Commerce on January 24, 1935, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEXTILE TRADE PLANS PROTESTS OVER LOSS OF EXPORT MARKETS—TO CITE DIP IN PAN AMERICAN, CUBA, PHILIPPINE DEMAND FOR UNITED STATES MERCHANDISE—FAILURE OF FILIPINO BILL TO BE PUT UP TO MURPHY—LOOK TO GOVERNOR GENERAL TO EXPLAIN MEASURE'S LOSS—HULL, DERN FIGURE IN TARIFF DISPUTE

By Clarence L. Linz

WASHINGTON, January 23.—Protest against the policies of the Roosevelt administration which have resulted in alleged losses of market opportunities for American textiles in the Philippine Islands and Cuba, and generally throughout Central and South America, is expected to be carried to Senate committees investigating the causes for the decline in our export trade, it was revealed today.

Besieged by their constituents who already have lost, or who face loss of employment in the New England textile mills, Senator JESSE H. METCALF, Rhode Island, and Representatives EDITH NOURSE ROGERS and JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Massachusetts, among others, are proposing a conference of those interested, with a view to carrying the situation to these committees.

SENATE STUDY ON

One group studying the loss of our export trade is a subcommittee of the Senate Commerce Committee, under the chairmanship of Senator BAILEY, North Carolina, with Senators BACHMAN, Tennessee, and WHITE, Maine, as members. The other group will be headed by Senator SMITH, South Carolina, who has called a conference for January 30 of bankers and lint-cotton exporters, at which the textile situation also will be discussed, although not as a major feature.

Members of Congress from textile centers hope to have an opportunity to learn from Governor General Murphy why the bill proposed to be put through the Philippine Legislature never got beyond the discussion stage. Under the proposed measure, increases of 100 percent to 800 percent in the tariff rates on textiles, among other commodities, would have been provided as a means of giving preferential treatment to our own products there.

Secretary of State Hull, in response to a letter of inquiry from Representative MARTIN, said that neither the State Department nor any other department of the Government "took any part in this controversy or sought to intervene in it." He explained that in accordance with practice, the American Government had been asked to comment upon the proposed tariff legislation and that the State Department and other agencies of the Government came "independently to the same conclusion, and as a result the War Department transmitted to the Governor General the considered judgment * * * that comprehensive tariff legislation in the Philippine Islands could best be considered after further study of all the factors involved, and in connection with the development of an inclusive plan for continued relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands."

HULL VIEWS EMPHASIZED

Secretary Hull also said he considered it desirable "to have an early definition of the future trade relations between the United States and the Philippines." He declared that the Department had offered no objection to temporary measures designed to give protection or relief to the American textile trade in the Philippines during the period in which a general program is being worked out. That action, however, rests with the Philippine Government. Nevertheless, Representatives from the textile States attribute failure of the bill to Washington influence, as shown from the Hull letter.

Statistics showing the losses suffered by our trade in the various areas under discussion have been furnished by Walter S. Brewster, president Textile Export Association, New York.

"There are certain markets that have always—and rightfully—been considered American markets", he asserted. "We have a right to expect our Government to take any and all proper action necessary to protect the position of the American manufacturer in such logical markets as the Philippines, Cuba, Haiti, and other Central and South American Republics."

He showed that whereas 90,000,000 square yards of cotton goods had been exported to the Philippines annually (average) during the period 1925–27, the first 10 months of last year found the figure to have dwindled to 40,000,000 square yards. He declared that the hopelessness of any attempt by American cotton manufacturers to compete in world markets with Japanese textiles is clearly indicated by the merest summary of the methods used to develop the Japanese industry.

TEXT OF REVISION

Members of the New England delegation have been led to look into the situation surrounding the reported disapproval by the Secretary of War of the Philippine tariff revision proposed last August. The text of this revision was cabled to the War Department on August 9 for the consideration of the Secretary and his Bureau of Insular Affairs, the former having veto powers over matters of this sort.

The proposal as to textile rates was as follows: Textiles, plain and without figures, weighing 16 kilos or more per 100 square meters, having (a) up to 16 threads, kilo, 25 cents; (b) from 17 to 21 threads, kilo, 35 cents; (c) from 22 to 26 threads, kilo, 38 cents; (d) from 27 to 31 threads, kilo, 40 cents; (e) 32 threads or more, kilo, 45 cents.

Where the weight is less than 16 kilos per 100 square meters, the rates were: 30 cents, 38 cents, 42 cents, 46 cents, and 55 cents, respectively, in the counts above referred to. In the case of textiles, twilled or figured in the loom, or woven with colored yarns, weighing 20 kilos or more per 100 square meters, the rates proposed are: 30 cents, 36 cents, 41 cents, 49 cents, and 59 cents, respectively, and where weighing less than 20 kilos per 100 square meters, 35 cents, 42 cents, 49 cents, 58 cents, and 62 cents, respectively. Additional rates are provided to cover cotton textiles further advanced in production.

In the 1909 tariff law of the islands, plain textiles, for instance, weighing 8 kilos or more per 100 square meters, were given the following rates per kilo: Up to 18 threads, 10 cents; 19 to 21 threads, 14 cents; 32 to 38 threads, 20 cents; 39 to 44 threads, 26 cents; and finer, 32 cents. Lighter goods in the same counts were given the following rates: 18 cents, 27 cents, 34 cents, 40 cents, and 50 cents, respectively.

OTHER VARIETIES LISTED

Twilled or figured in the loom, weighing 10 kilos or more per 100 square meters, in the same counts, 14 cents, 18 cents, 24 cents, 30 cents, and 34 cents. Lighter weights of the same, 24 cents, 32 cents, 42 cents, 52 cents, and 60 cents, respectively. Piques of all kinds 38 cents per kilo.

Corresponding increases were proposed for other textiles, including silk, rayon, etc., and manufactures thereof.

Extent to which American manufacturers had hoped to benefit from the proposed tariff increases may be realized from the fact that the Hawley-Smoot tariff law provides that "all articles, the growth or product of manufacture of the United States upon which no drawback of customs duties has been allowed therein, shall be admitted to the Philippine Islands from the United States free of duty."

Under the Philippine independent nation, our exports would pay the same rates of duty as other countries. Nevertheless, it also is provided that at least 1 year prior to that time there shall be held a conference of representatives of the United States and of the islands for the purpose of formulating recommendations as to future trade relations between them.

THE WORLD COURT

The Senate resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, the pending question being the amendment of Mr. NORRIS, which is as follows:

At the end of the resolution add the following:

"Resolved further, That the adherence of the Government of the United States to said protocols and statute is upon the express condition and understanding that no dispute or question in which the United States Government is a party shall be submitted to said Permanent Court of International Justice unless such submission has been approved by the United States Senate by a two-thirds vote."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we have had some trouble this morning to secure a quorum. A Senator has suggested to me that it is because it was known I was going to address the Senate this morning, but I do not take it in that way; I think it is on account of the weather. We younger Senators ought not to complain of the old men who find it difficult to get here on time. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am thoroughly convinced that every Member of this body is going to cast a conscientious vote not only on the proposed reservation which is pending but upon the original resolution itself. I am as thoroughly convinced as I have ever been convinced of anything that those who are opposed to the proposed reservation are just as conscientious as I am. It seems to me this debate and the consideration of this question have shown that all the Members of this body have been moved by a conscientious desire to do what is right, by a conscientious desire to do everything possible to alleviate the horrors and sufferings of war and to bring about a world peace. So, Mr. President, whatever I shall say in favor of the reservation now pending, I do not want it to be misunderstood by anyone that I am in any way impugning the motives or questioning the conscientious convictions of any Senator who is opposed to its adoption.

The pending amendment to the resolution of adherence being, in effect, a reservation, provides that before any dispute or controversy in which the Government of the United States is a party shall be submitted to the World Court the submission of the question shall have the approval of the Senate by a two-thirds vote. I have put into the reservation the two-thirds-vote proposition because the agreement to submit is in the nature of a treaty. As I shall show, if I do not forget to do so, all such submissions, as a rule, even to the Hague Court, have been made after the submission of the question has been approved, the same as in the case of a treaty. A treaty, however, if we must enter into one for the submission of any controversy, would take more time and be perhaps more difficult and less practical, as I see it, than though we should adopt the reservation which does not require negotiations and entering into a treaty, which requires no notice whatever of what the other government party to the controversy may do in order to bring about the submission; but it does provide that in this country, before a question is submitted to the Court, the President must have the concurrence of the Senate by a two-thirds vote just as he does in the matter of the approval of a treaty.

I have been opposed to the League of Nations. I am opposed to going into the World Court without any reservation or, to make it more clear, without this particular reservation or something that means in substance what I believe this reservation means. I am not willing to submit everything to the World Court. I am not willing to say in advance just what kind of controversy we shall be willing to submit to the World Court because in the very nature of things it is impossible now to know what controversies may arise in the future.

It is known that the President of the United States is opposed to this reservation. In the last few days it has been intimated to me, and I have noticed it has been said in the public press, that the adoption of this reservation would be an affront to the President of the United States. Of course, I do not need to tell the Senate that I would not be a party to anything involving an affront to the President. I am satisfied no Senator would be. More than that, there is, in my opinion, no justification whatever for anyone to think for a moment that this reservation is or should be considered an affront to the man who occupies the White House. I should like to talk particularly to some of my Democratic friends on that point.

Naturally Democratic Senators feel, and properly I think, that they would under any ordinary circumstances like to carry out the wishes of the President, in whom they have and I have almost unlimited confidence. We believe in his sincerity. But, Senators, we are taking action here that will have its application, if the reservation shall be adopted, to Presidents long after we have gone, after we have passed away. If we reject the particular reservation which I am discussing it will have the effect of throwing the matter into the hands of Presidents whom you do not know and whom I do not know, whose sincerity probably would be as unquestioned as that of the present President; but we do not know that to be so. In other words, we ought to consider the reservation without thinking of any particular man who is or may be President of the United States.

I do not believe the reservation can be construed as doing any injustice or offering any affront to any President if we say by it, "Before you submit a controversy to the World Court you must have the approval of the Senate of the United States, just as you have to have its approval of a treaty." We did not make the Constitution. We have lived under it and acted under it and enacted laws under it. We have lived under it for many years with the provision all the time in the Constitution that a two-thirds vote of the Senate is required for the approval of any treaty submitted by the President of the United States. In other words, the Constitution was framed on the theory that the Senate is a part of the treaty-making power of our Government.

We may have a President in the future who, let us assume, is perfectly honest and perfectly sincere, but who may have what his countrymen may think a one-sided view on some particular question that becomes a matter of controversy between our country and some other country, a man in whom, perhaps, we have the utmost confidence, but by whose judgment on that particular subject we would not be willing to abide. The adoption of this reservation will, I believe, place in the hands of the Senate the constitutional treaty-making power, a safeguard which will obviate any possible danger that might arise because of some abrupt or ill-considered action on the part of some man who may become President of the United States.

President Roosevelt is not going to be President forever. President Roosevelt will probably not be in the White House more than 6 years longer; and if he is to let the Postmaster General continue to "Farleyize" his administration, he may not be there more than 2 years longer. Whatever may happen, this reservation, if adopted, cannot do any harm to any conscientious President or to any other nation.

I have read in the public press that the reservation puts the matter in politics, that the Senate is a political body, and that it ought not, because it is a political body, to have the power to refuse a submission in case the President wants to submit a question to the World Court. That may be true. Insofar as the Members of the Senate are elected by the people, they are political; but does not the same principle apply to the President? He is elected, the same as we are, by the people of the United States. If it is objectionable because the submitting power proposed would be somewhat political, then the objection would still remain if we defeat the reservation. In fact, I think it leaves the situation much worse, because if the reservation should be adopted we would have, in the case of the submission of a question to the World Court, not only the judgment of the President but the judgment of two-thirds of the Senators.

It may be that our Constitution ought to be amended and that we ought to approve treaties by a majority vote. There are those who so believe, but the Constitution now provides that a two-thirds affirmative vote is required. Personally, I am rather inclined to believe that the care taken by our forefathers when they adopted the Constitution was fully justified. While I think I have an open mind, I do not believe, as I see it now, that I would support an amendment to the Constitution which would make it possible for the Senate to approve treaties by a majority vote. We are dealing with many questions which are not of great importance. A great many submissions will be made to the World Court, if we go into it, which probably will not be of great importance; but we do not want to close our eyes to the fact that there may be submitted some question of major importance, and it might take but one such instance to bring almost ruin upon the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I think it is no reflection upon the President to hold that we want to pass on each question that is to be submitted before it is submitted. There is no reflection upon any other country that may be in the World Court.

I do not want to entangle my country in European questions. I am conceding very frankly that they may be just as honest as we are, just as able, just as conscientious, but they are living in a different world and are a part of another form of civilization. I wish them no harm. If I could be of assistance in the settlement of any dispute involving them, I would gladly do so. But I am not willing to take my country into a world court where the judges are men who have lived under different conditions, who have different ideas of society, who have different ideas of government, who come in the main from different kinds of governments than that under which we live.

I say this with due respect to them. They are entitled to their forms of government, to their views, to their civilization, to their society; but it does not follow that we necessarily have to go into the World Court and have questions settled by men of that kind who have grown up and lived under a different form of civilization and therefore would probably be biased on some questions to which the Government of the United States might be a party if submitted to the World Court.

Mr. President, we do not even have to believe, because we are not willing to go into the World Court, that the judges are not honest and able and that they will not do what they think is right; but, in his judgment and in his action and in his conduct and in his heart and in his soul, a man is influenced to some extent by the environment and civilization and society in which he grew to manhood. That fact influences man and becomes a part of him. He may be perfectly honest, able, and conscientious, and yet have a viewpoint which is entirely different from ours. Questions will arise and controversies may come about between our kind of government and another of which such men are a part, and it seems to me it would necessarily and naturally follow, if such a question arose, that the Court would be against us, and probably be against us conscientiously.

So, Mr. President, I am not willing to submit a controversy to the Court until its submission has been as solemnly considered as we would consider a treaty; and that is virtually what is provided for by this reservation.

It has been said in the public press that if this reservation should be agreed to, the other powers would reject it. I do not know why. This reservation was one of the reservations adopted heretofore, and, as far as I know, no complaint was made about it. While the other powers did not accept all our reservations, they did not reject the protocol on account of this particular one; and why should they care? We will not care what method is adopted by a country with which we are in dispute or disagreement before it agrees to a submission. We can have no objection if its laws, its rules, its regulations, provide that a controversy affecting it shall be submitted by a king, and by a king alone. Neither would we object if the king, in order to get consent to submit the question to the Court, had first to submit it to his parliament. That is nothing to us, and this reservation is nothing to the other countries. They will not care about it. They have no right to care. It is a matter entirely within our control.

But, Mr. President, suppose conditions were such that our adherence would be rejected by foreign governments because of this reservation: Would not that be the best reason in the world why we should stay out of the Court altogether? If they should reject our adherence because we had required the Senate to agree to submission of a question to the Court, then it seems that they would be trying, even before we adhered to the Court, to control the action of the American Government, which we could not agree to under any circumstances or conditions. If that would constitute an objection on the part of the other powers, then, in my opinion, it would be a sufficient reason why we should not go into the Court.

Mr. President, we have followed this procedure in the main from the beginning of our Government. It is not something new. We have submitted a great many controversies to The Hague when we have had disputes with other countries, and the submissions have been passed on and approved by the Senate before the cases were submitted.

When the former Roosevelt occupied the White House and Mr. Root was Secretary of State, that administration initiated the negotiation of quite a large number of arbitration treaties. Some were concluded in 1909 and others in 1908. The treaties provided for the settlement of particular questions that were stated and were submitted to The Hague; and I think in every case, without a single exception, that submission had the approval of the Senate of the United States by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is entirely correct. They had to be thus submitted, because the basic convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes required it.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and that is all I desire to do by this reservation.

Let me read the language of one of those treaties.

While the former Roosevelt was President, part of article II of one of the treaties I have mentioned reads as follows:

> In each individual case—

That means in the case of each submission—

> the high contracting parties, before appealing to the Permanent Court of Arbitration, shall conclude a special agreement—

And so forth. That special agreement was to set up what the matter in dispute was; and the very next paragraph reads as follows:

> It is understood that such special agreement on the part of the United States will have to be made by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

I have not examined all the treaties, but I think an examination will disclose that all of them had that identical language in them. That is what I propose to do here.

I know it can be said, "Here is some little dispute that does not amount to much. There is no danger of war, no question of race, no question of immigration, no question of that kind arising. We might just as well submit it to the Court at once. If we should not adopt this resolution, the President could submit it to the Court without taking up the time of the Senate; or it might arise in recess." Of course, if it did, if the question were sufficiently important the President could call the Senate in special session at any time to consider it. I concede that that might occur; but it must be conceded also that some question of vast international importance might arise in the same way, and might be submitted to the Court by the President when it was known that the country and the Senate would not agree to such a submission.

So, while the adoption of this reservation might be the cause of delaying consideration by the Court of some question of minor importance, which I am willing to admit is the case, that is more than counterbalanced by the fact that it would also, in the case of questions of great importance, give the Senate and the country the right to discuss them, to debate them, to suggest amendments, or to refuse their submission to the Court if it should be thought proper.

If we do not adopt this reservation, I think we shall have to concede that it would be possible—I am not saying that it will happen; I hope it will not happen; I am not thinking of any particular President we have ever had, nor of the President we have now—but it might happen that the country would be plunged into war, perhaps, on account of hasty action taken by the President when the Senate was not in session, and when no debate occurred, no discussion occurred anywhere, almost as a result of a secret arrangement.

So, Mr. President, I submit this reservation. I ask Senators to consider it fairly, and to remember that its effect may be far-reaching. No injury can come if it is agreed to; and I think the Senate ought to agree to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is rather amusing to hear the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] say that the failure of Senators to appear in the Chamber prior to the meeting of the Senate today has been attributed by some one to lack of interest of Senators in what he might say. Of course, I think that was a humorous allusion, not intended to be taken seriously; but, like some of my own jokes, it needs explanation or qualification.

The Senator from Nebraska and I are habitually so serious in the performance of our duties, and in attempts to perform them, that sometimes what we say in light vein is taken quite seriously by those who hear us.

There is not anyone here whose remarks are listened to with more interest and appreciation than those of the Senator from Nebraska. His long service in this body, his courage, and his ability command the respect, not only of his colleagues, but of the people of the country generally.

Let me say, however, to those who favor adherence to the World Court, that I regard the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska as of controlling and vital significance. Let it be added that, in my opinion, no Senator who wishes to make the resolution of adherence really effective will vote for the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska.

Of course, we all admit the good faith of those who oppose entry into the World Court. Sometimes it is difficult for me to understand their arguments, but it may be equally difficult for them to understand my own.

I propose now to give a brief statement of why I think the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska should be rejected. I am speaking, of course, from the standpoint of a Senator who in good faith believes that our efforts to adhere to the World Court should be made in such form and manner as will give some substantial effect to the resolution when it is adopted.

The first reason that I assign as an argument, justifying those who favor adherence, in rejecting the resolution is that it merely perpetuates the controversy we are now in, a controversy which has lasted for 11 or 12 years; and it permits a renewal of that controversy on the part of those who oppose our entry into the World Court every time a proposal is made in the Senate to refer a question to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Does anyone who hears me imagine that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], with all the record of his years of opposition to the Court behind him, will abate or discontinue his opposition when this resolution is agreed to, if it is agreed to? It is no reflection on him to say that I think he is sincere, and that he will be just as much opposed to referring a case to the Court to which he is opposed as he is to adherence to the Court under the resolution now before the Senate. So, if we wish to accomplish something really effective in adopting the resolution, we must reject the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska.

I do not wish, every time the Senate is asked to refer to the Permanent Court of International Justice a controversy or dispute between this Government and another government, to have this old straw threshed out again. Neither do I think it is wise for those who believe in the Court as an agency for the settlement of controversies between nations to place it in the power of one-third of the Senate, plus one, to prevent the peaceful composition of controversies through the agency of the Court. That is exactly what will result if the resolution of my friend, the Senator from Nebraska, should be agreed to.

It is entirely true that on previous occasions in dealing with this subject we have required reference to the Court of a controversy to be made by treaty, and it is entirely true that the treaty of 1907 for arbitration by the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague required agreements for reference to be submitted to the Senate, which, of course, acts upon the matter by a two-thirds vote. However, I point out the fact that while there are some precedents to that effect, there are also numerous precedents to the contrary, and I propose to cite some of them.

A second reason, which I think should have some force in this assembly for opposing the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska is that, whether designedly or not, the effect of the resolution is to transgress upon the jurisdiction and authority of the President as defined by the Constitution. I realize that there are some who say that the Congress has frequently during recent months given extraordinary power to the President; I realize that there are some who say that the Congress has abdicated its jurisdiction and responsibility and that this would be a kind of a means of balancing up—give away something, they say, that we ought not to give away, and then take something that we ought not to have, and everybody ought to be happy, and the Government would then be properly administered. However, I do not concede that sort of an argument, and I have no patience with that conclusion.

The truth of the matter is, as I think all lawyers in the Senate will agree, that under the Constitution there are only two limitations of the power of the President to conduct our foreign relations. The first is that in any instance where an appropriation may be required to effectuate a settlement that might be made, it is necessary to submit the matter to the Congress.

The second is that where a treaty is required to effectuate a settlement it is necessary to submit the matter to the Senate for its advice and consent. But in all other cases, under the Constitution the President has the power without the advice and consent of the Senate, and without the approval of the legislative department, to conduct our foreign relations, including the settlement of disputes that may arise with other governments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I did not understand the first proposition which the Senator stated as a limitation.

Mr. ROBINSON. The first proposition is that if the proposed settlement involves an appropriation by the Government of the United States, it is necessary to submit it to the Congress, because the appropriation cannot be made except through the action of the Congress. I do not mean to say that a tentative agreement could not be entered into even in that case for submission to the Congress. On the contrary that is what I mean to say, that before the agreement can be finally carried out, whether through the exchange of notes, or by Executive agreements, it must be submitted to the Congress of the United States. That has always been done.

I now wish to ask the Senate to listen for just a moment to some of the authorities on which this assertion is based. Willoughby on The Constitution of the United States contains the following paragraph:

> By virtue of the power exclusively vested in him to conduct diplomatic negotiations between this and foreign countries, the President has, since early years, entered into numerous agreements with foreign chancellories for the settlement of claims made by American private citizens against foreign governments. In a considerable number of cases these claims have been settled by means of arbitration agreed upon between the foreign offices concerned. * * *
> In no case has the President attempted, without consulting the Senate, to adjust finally claims brought by foreigners against the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Those were instances in which the President was negotiating in the interests of private citizens and not to bind his Government.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; or instances in which the President was negotiating in the interests and on behalf of the Government of the United States, in which instances there was no contemplation that the Government should pay any amount to the other party. I will cite the precedents a little later on.

Crandall states that—

> Agreements for the adjustment of settlement of pecuniary claims of citizens against foreign governments, which meet with the approval of the claimants, and by which no obligation, except to relinquish the claim, is assumed on the part of the United States, are not usually submitted to the Senate.

There is another authority whose remarks I think will address themselves with force particularly to those of the opposition to the Court. Mr. John Bassett Moore, who is admittedly an authority on international law, says:

> * * * As the Executive is forbidden to bind the Government of the United States to the payment of money in the absence of authority of law, the President has never undertaken to settle claims against the United States except by means of a treaty, or by means of an agreement concluded ad referendum to Congress.

Mr. President, I have already said that there are instances in which the Senate has required submission to be made in form of a treaty, notably including the treaty of 1907 relating to The Hague arbitral tribunal. There are also cases in which the Senate imposed that condition and in which the President, or the Secretary of State acting for him, have refused to exchange the ratifications. However, there are numerous instances in which the issue has never been submitted to the Senate and in which the Executive, under his general authority to conduct foreign relations, has referred cases to arbitration.

There has been prepared, at my request, a memorandum by the State Department showing some 40 cases in which the United States has submitted, through an exchange of notes or by Executive agreement or otherwise, controversies with other nations or with their nationals, and in which cases the subject matter has never been brought before the Senate. Some of these cases are of very great importance. I do not know that I should take the time of the Senate to read them all.

Among the most celebrated international arbitrations to which the United States has been a party, that have been conducted under agreements not submitted to the Senate, may be included the case of the Canada (United States) against Brazil, in which an award of over $100,000 was made; the case of the Colonel Lloyd Aspinwall (United States) against Spain, in which an award of $20,000 was made; the arbitration of claims of citizens of the United States against Spain for losses suffered in Cuba, under the agreement of February 11 to 12, 1871, whereby the United States recovered over $1,250,000; the Masonic (United States) against Spain, whereby the United States recovered over $50,000; the Van Bokkelen case (United States) against Haiti, where $60,000 was awarded; the case of Cheek (United States) against Siam, where $200,000 was allowed; the case of Robert H. May (United States) against Guatemala, wherein nearly $150,000 was awarded the claimant.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Arkansas is correct, and I think he is, that the President would not have any authority to make an agreement where there was to be money paid, or where there might be a judgment rendered against or in favor of this country for money—if that contention be correct and the President would not have authority to submit such a case without the consent of the Senate, does it not follow that the cases which the Senator is citing would be cases in which the President had exceeded his authority?

Mr. ROBINSON. Not at all. These were cases of claims either of the Government or of some citizen or corporation against a foreign government or against the nationals of a foreign government.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it that it might require an appropriation by Congress to give effect to the decision after the decision was made.

Mr. ROBINSON. No. That is the distinction——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, permit me to ask the Senator a question with respect to a recent case. I do not believe that the dispute in that case was submitted to the Senate. It was a case which was decided recently, the case of the Canadian boat——

Mr. VANDENBERG. The I'm Alone.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the I'm Alone. As I remember it that case was not submitted to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think not.

Mr. NORRIS. And the judgment required the payment of money by the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not recall the terms and conditions under which the I'm Alone case was submitted, but it certainly did not contemplate, when the case was submitted, payment by the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, I think so. I think the Senator is wrong about that. But the judgment did require, among other things, an apology.

Mr. ROBINSON. The award was against the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Would that not be a case then in which the President had exceeded his authority?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think not. The form in which the case was submitted did not on its face involve the payment of any amount. That is my recollection.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I take the liberty to intimate to both the distinguished Senators, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the leader on this side [Mr. ROBINSON], that sometime ago in the House of Representatives this question which the Senator from Arkansas is now presenting with conciseness, was very greatly elaborated by Henry Winter Davis, Member of Congress from Maryland, serving at that time as the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and the distinction was made there, as I believe the debate will show, as to how far the President had to have the cooperation of Congress, and there it was stated that he would only have to have such cooperation where he was dealing with a subject matter that went to the private benefit of some individual claimant, but that cooperation would involve nothing more than an appropriation.

Here I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he will not be good enough to tell the Senate how far was it the Senate went on the very contention he is making in supporting President Harding, who made the same claim the Senator from Arkansas is now making in behalf of the present President? I think it will be observed that the Senate supported President Harding in the contention that he had complete jurisdiction in all such matters.

Mr. ROBINSON. The question has frequently arisen as to the conflict of jurisdiction between the legislative department and the executive department. I take it that no Senator wishes to transgress upon the jurisdiction of the Executive. President Harding in 1923 sent to the Senate this World Court protocol. As I remember, there was no action taken on it until 1926. The Senate then, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, adopted a resolution requiring that submissions be by treaty. I think that was erroneous; I think it was subversive; it was destructive of the wholesome aim of the adherence resolution.

I cannot state now from memory the many instances in which questions have arisen as to whether the Senate is transgressing upon the Executive or the Executive is trespassing upon the functions of the legislative department. Those questions have frequently arisen. Some of them I can recall in some detail, but I am not now proposing that the Senate shall yield its jurisdiction; I am only suggesting in this part of my argument that the Senate respect the President's jurisdiction, and my effort is to define what that jurisdiction may be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the I'm Alone case, to which the Senator from Nebraska referred, I understand the State Department will now be under the compulsion to ask the Congress for an appropriation to pay the award. Would the Senator feel that Congress was free in any degree to consider that request upon its merits or is not the Congress bound?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should vote for the appropriation, the case having been submitted, but I do not find anything repugnant to me in that. I think it was far better to settle the case by arbitration, even though we may not have expected, in the beginning, an award to be made against us.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I quite agree; but I am asking the academic question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have answered it; I said, "Yes; I should vote for the appropriation."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well. Then, does not the existence of the moral obligation, which is more or less of a compelling nature, travel back to the original situation and rob us of that authority which the Senator from Arkansas previously was describing, to take jurisdiction on its merits in any international dispute which involves an appropriation?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not agree with that at all, for this reason: The power of appropriation is not vested exclusively in the Senate, and the Senate has not the right to inaugurate but it has the province of determining when an appropriation may be made. The power of appropriation is vested in the two Houses of the Congress, and the matter should go to the two Houses rather than to the Senate exclusively.

Let me proceed now with some of the instances in which the United States has referred to arbitration cases without the advice and consent of the Senate. There was, following the case I mentioned, the fisheries claims against Russia, in which awards in excess of $100,000 were made to American claimants;

The Boxer Rebellion claims;

The Pious Fund claim (United States) against Mexico, wherein the claimants were awarded nearly $1,500,000, together with certain annual payments;

The United States-Venezuelan claims, decided by a commission established under the protocol of February 17, 1903, which commission awarded more than $2,000,000 to American claimants;

The Alsop claim (United States) against Chile, in which the United States secured an award of 2,275,375 bolivianos;

The claims of the United States against Panama, arising out of the riot at Panama City July 4, 1912, settled by arbitration in 1916, of the Minister of the Netherlands;

The Landreau case, United States against Peru, in which an award of $125,000 was made;

The Sino-American Joint Commission of 1928 and 1929, which made awards in the amount of nearly $450,000;

The claim of Charles J. Harrah (United States) against Cuba, where a settlement of $350,000 was procured after arbitration in 1930;

The claim of Percy W. Schufeldt (United States) against Guatemala, also arbitrated in 1930, where an award in favor of the claimant was made in the amount of over $225,000;

The Tripartite Claims Commission, United States, Austria, and Hungary, which Commission made awards in excess of $500,000;

The Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, established under the special agreement of August 10, 1922, which commission has made awards of more than $265,000,000; and

The recent United States-Turkish Claims Commission, which brought about an agreement with Turkey for the payment of $1,300,000 to American nationals.

I attach hereto a list of 40 executive agreements, exchanges of notes of protocols or arrangements not submitted to the Senate under the terms of which the United States agreed to submit a claim or claims to international arbitration.

Without taking the time to read all these 40 claims, I am going to ask that they be printed as a part of my remarks. I think there is no wholesome end to be accomplished by reading them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FORTY AGREEMENTS FOR ARBITRATION MADE BY THE UNITED STATES WITH FOREIGN POWERS NOT SUBMITTED TO THE SENATE FOR ITS ADVICE AND CONSENT

1. Brazil-United States, agreement of October 1842: The American schooner John S. Bryan was seized in the Province of Para, Brazil, in June 1836. On October 15, 1842, commissioners were appointed by the Government of Brazil and the Legation of the United States at Rio de Janeiro, respectively, pursuant to an agreement made in that month, to determine the amount of loss and damage suffered by the schooner in consequence of her seizure and detention. June 12, 1843, the commissioners awarded the sum of 26 cantos of reis, to be paid by the Imperial Government as "indemnification in full of the value of the schooner John S. Bryan, her cargo, freight, wages, expenses, ordinary and extraordinary, exchanges, interests, etc." (5 Moore, International Arbitrations (1898) 4613.)

2. Salvador-United States agreement of May 4, 1864: The claim of Henry Savage, an American citizen, for damage suffered on account of losses when the sale of gunpowder was by decree in 1852 made a monopoly of the Government of Salvador, the claimant having a large quantity of gunpowder for sale at the time of the decree, was arbitrated under an agreement of May 4, 1864. The arbitration, arranged by the American Minister, Mr. Partridge, with the approval of the Department of State, resulted in an award in favor of the claimant in the amount of nearly $5,000. (2 Moore, (1898) 1855, 1857.)

3. Brazil-United States, signed March 14, 1870: The case of the Canada was referred to the arbitration of Edward Thornton, British Minister, under the terms of a protocol signed at Rio de Janeiro, March 14, 1870, by the Governments of the United States and Brazil. The United States was awarded over $100,000 as a compensation to the owners of the vessel with which the Government of Brazil had wrongfully interfered. (2 Moore, op. cit. (1898) 1733; 5 ibid. 4687.)

4. Spain-United States, agreement of May 25–June 16, 1870: On May 25, 1870, Secretary of State Fish proposed to Mr. Lopez Roberts, the Spanish Minister in Washington, that the claim of the owners of the steamer Colonel Lloyd Aspinwall for damages on account of the seizure of that vessel by a Spanish man-of-war, and her subsequent detention at Habana, should be arbitrated in New York, each power to name a commissioner, who in turn should name the arbitrator. On June 16, Mr. Roberts informed Mr. Fish of the acceptance by the Spanish Government of his proposition for arbitration. Johannes Rösing, consul of the North German Union at New York, selected arbitrator in the manner described, gave his award, November 15, 1870, allowing the claimants $19,702.50 in gold. (2 Moore, op. cit. 1007, 1014.)

5. Spain-United States, agreement of February 11–12, 1871: The agreement for the settlement of certain claims of citizens of the United States on account of wrongs and injuries committed by authorities of Spain in the island of Cuba, concluded at Madrid, February 11–12, 1871, was not submitted to the Senate (2 Malloy, Treaties, Conventions, etc. (1910) 1651). Over one million and a quarter dollars were awarded by this Commission. (2 Moore, op. cit. (1898) 1051.)

6. Colombia-United States, agreement signed August 17, 1874: The case of the Montijo (United States) v. Colombia, was referred to arbitration by the two Governments, pursuant to an agreement signed at Bogota, August 17, 1874, under the terms of which two arbitrators and an umpire were selected. The umpire, Mr. Robert Bunch, British Minister to Bogota, made an award July 25, 1875, in favor of the American claimants in the amount of more than $33,000. (2 Moore, op. cit. 1421; 5 op. cit. 4698.)

7. Haiti-United States, protocol signed May 28, 1884, extended by the additional protocol of May 20, 1885: The claims of Antonio Pelletier and A. H. Lazare, citizens of the United States, were arbitrated before William Strong, formerly an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, as sole arbitrator, under the terms of the protocol of May 28, 1884, as extended. Judge Strong awarded Pelletier nearly $60,000, and Lazare $117,500. (I Malloy, Treaties, Conventions, etc. (1910) 932.)

8. Spain-United States, exchange of notes, November 17–25, 1884: By notes of November 17 and 25, 1884, between the American Minister at Madrid, John W. Foster, and the Spanish Minister of State, J. Elduayen, it was agreed that the claim of the United States on account of the wrongful detention and sale of the Masonic in 1878–79 by the Spanish authorities at Manila, Philippine Islands, under a mistake of fact, should be referred to arbitration. (1885 Foreign Relations of the United States 678, 681, 682.) The arbitrator appointed, Baron Blanc, Italian Minister at Madrid, made an award in favor of the United States in the amount of $51,674.07, with interest. (2 Moore, op. cit. 1055, 1060, 1062.)

9. Haiti-United States, protocol of May 24, 1888: The claim of Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, against Haiti was arbitrated under the terms of the protocol of May 24, 1888, between the United States and Haiti. An award was made in favor of Van Bokkelen in the sum of $60,000. (I Malloy, op. cit. (1910) 935; 2 Moore, op. cit. 1813.)

10. Portugal-United States and Great Britain, June 13, 1891: The protocol signed at Bern June 13, 1891, for the arbitration of the claim of American and British nationals arising out of a concession granted by Portgual to the Lourenço Marques Railroad was not submitted to the Senate. Under the terms of that protocol the Swiss Confederation appointed three arbitrators, who awarded 15,314,000 francs in favor of the American and British claimants. (II Maloy, op. cit. (1910) 1460, 1462.)

11. Mexico-United States, protocol of March 2, 1897: The protocol concerning the claims of Oberlander and Messenger, citizens of the United States, against Mexico was signed by the United States and Mexico at Washington March 2, 1897. (I Malloy, op. cit. (1910) 1180.) The protocol of agreement was not submitted to the Senate. The arbitrator, the Argentine Minister at Madrid, Señor Don Vicente G. Quesada, disallowed these claims. (Ibid. 1181.)

12. Siam-United States, protocol of an agreement July 26, 1897: The claim of Marion A. Cheek for indemnity on account of the wrongful interference by the Siamese Government with his property, including a concession for the working of teak forests in Siam, together with the counterclaims of the Government of Siam, were submitted to arbitration by the Governments of the United States and Siam, under the terms of a protocol of agreement signed July 26, 1897, by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of His Majesty the King of Siam and John Barrett, Minister resident and consul general of the United States at Bangkok. (1897 Foreign Relations of the United States 479.)

Under the terms of the agreement, Sir Nicholas J. Hannen, Her Britannic Majesty's chief justice and consul general at Shanghai, was appointed arbitrator. On March 21, 1898, the arbitrator made an award in favor of Cheek in the amount of 706,721 ticals, equivalent to $200,000 in gold. (2 Moore, op. cit. 1908; 5 Moore, op. cit. 5068, 5069.)

13. Dominican Republic-United States, agreement of February 1898: The claim of Henry W. Thurston, an American citizen, against the Dominican Republic, arising on account of a concession to build and operate a bridge across the Ozama River in Santo Domingo City, was settled by arbitration under an agreement reached by Gen. U. Heureaux, President of the Republic of Santo Domingo, and American representatives in Santo Domingo in February 1898. The President of the Dominican Republic agreed to purchase the bridge at its value in 1895. Alfred Noble, of Illinois, appointed arbitrator to determine the amount that the Dominican Republic should pay in settlement of the claim, awarded the claimant the sum of $74,411.17 in gold, with interest from 1895. (1898 Foreign Relations of the United States 274.)

14. Peru-United States, protocol of May 17, 1898: The protocol of an agreement for the arbitration of the amount of damages to be awarded in favor of Victor H. MacCord, a citizen of the United States, signed in Washington May 17, 1898, together with the supplemental protocol, signed June 6, 1898, were not submitted to the Senate by Secretary of State William R. Day.

The arbitrator, Sir Samuel Henry Strong, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, made an award in favor of MacCord in the amount of $40,000. (II Malloy, op. cit. (1910) 1443, 1445.)

15. Haiti-United States, protocol of an agreement signed October 18, 1899: The protocol of an agreement between the United States and Haiti for the arbitration of the claim of John D. Metzger & Co. (United States) v. Haiti was not submitted to the Senate. On September 27, 1900, Hon. William R. Day made an award in favor of the claimant in the amount of $23,000. (I Malloy, op. cit. (1910) 936, 939.)

16 and 17. Guatemala-United States, protocol of an agreement submitting to arbitration the claim of Robert H. May against Guatemala, and the claim of Guatemala against May, signed at Washington, February 23, 1900; supplemental protocol to the agreement of February 23, 1900, signed at Washington, May 10, 1900: Robert H. May, an American citizen, claimed damages from the Guatemalan Government on account of its wrongful interference with his operation of the Guatemala Northern Railroad under the terms of a contract with the Guatemalan Government. The claim was referred to the arbitration of Mr. George Francis Birt Jenner, British Minister and Consul General to the Republics of Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Salvador, who, on November 16, 1900, made an award in favor of the claimant in the total sum of $143,750.73 gold. (I Malloy, op. cit. 871, 873).

18. Nicaragua-United States, protocol of March 22, 1900: The protocol of an agreement for the arbitration of the amount of damages to be awarded Orr and Laubenheimer and the Post Glover Electric Co., signed at Washington, March 22, 1900, was not submitted to the Senate by Secretary of State Hay. The arbitrator, Gen. E. P. Alexander, made awards in favor of each of the claimants in his decision of June 16, 1900. (II Malloy, op. cit. (1910) 1290, 1292).

19. Russia-United States, protocol of August 22 and September 8, 1900: The claims of the United States against Russia, on behalf of the schooners, James Hamilton Lewis, C. H. White, Kate and Anna, and the Cape Horn Pigeon, on account of their alleged wrongful detention or seizure, were submitted to arbitration under the terms of the claims protocol, signed August 22 (Sept. 8), 1900. The protocol was not submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. (II Malloy, op. cit. (1910) 1532).

Awards were made in favor of the claimants in an amount in excess of $100,000, on November 29, 1902. (Ibid, 1534.)

20. China-United States, final protocol, September 7, 1901: The final protocol entered into between the plenipotentiaries of the various powers at the conclusion of the so-called "Boxer" troubles in 1900 in China, signed September 7, 1901, by representatives of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Spain, France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Russia, the United States, and China, under the terms of which the powers were to receive 450,000,000 Haikwan taels, was not submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. (II Malloy, op. cit. 2006.) Two American commissioners were appointed by the Department of State, without the advice and consent of the Senate, to pass upon the American claims, together with those of their servants. Their awards were approved by the American Minister to China, and in turn approved by the Department of State, prior to the distribution of the Boxer indemnity fund paid into the Treasury of the United States.

21. Salvador-United States, protocol of December 19, 1901: The claims of the Salvador Commercial Co. and other citizens of the United States, stockholders in the El Triunfo Co., Ltd., were submitted to arbitration under the terms of the protocol for the arbitration of certain claims against Salvador signed December 19, 1901. (II Malloy, op. cit. (1910) 1568.) This protocol was not submitted to the Senate. On May 8, 1902, the arbitrators, Henry Strong, Don M. Dickinson, and José Rosa Pacas, rendered their award in favor of the claimants in the amount of $537,178.64 (Ibid. 1570).

22. Salvador-United States, agreement of February 1902: The claim of Rosa Gelbtrunk (United States) against Salvador for $22,654.63 was also agreed to be arbitrated by these Governments before the same arbitrators as those selected under the protocol of December 19, 1901, pursuant to an agreement arrived at by an exchange of correspondence in February 1902. The claim was disallowed by the arbitrators. (1902 Foreign Relations of the United States 873, 876.)

23. Dominican Republic-United States, convention of April 28, 1902: The claim of Madam Emilia C. de Sala, as surviving partner of J. Sala & Co. (United States), against the Dominican Republic was submitted to arbitration under the convention signed at Santo Domingo April 28, 1902. The arbitrators, the Honorable Frederick Van Dyne and Señor Don J. M. Ceballos, made an award, April 30, 1904, in favor of the claimant in the amount of $215,812.95. (MSS., Dept. of State.)

24. Mexico-United States, protocol of May 22, 1902: The protocol for the adjustment of certain contentions arising under what is known as "the Pious Fund of the Californias", signed by the Governments of Mexico and the United States May 22, 1902, at Washington, by Secretary Hay and M. de Azpiroz, was not submitted to the Senate. The arbitration was held under the general provisions of the Hague Convention of 1899, and an award was made at The Hague in favor of the United States in the amount of $1,420,682.67, together with certain perpetual annuities. (I Malloy, op. cit. 1194, 1198.)

25. Brazil-United States, protocol submitting to arbitration the claim of George C. Benner et al., signed September 6, 1902: The claim of George C. Benner and others against the Government of Brazil was agreed to be submitted to arbitration under the terms of the protocol of September 6, 1902, which protocol was not submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. (I Malloy, op. cit. 152.) The claim was referred to the Swedish Minister as arbitrator, but withdrawn from his consideration November 28, 1902, for want of evidence. (Ibid. 154.)

26. United States-Santo Domingo, protocol of January 31, 1903: The arbitration protocol, signed January 31, 1903, by the Government of the United States and the Dominican Government for the arbitration of the claim of the San Domingo Improvement Co. (United States) against Santo Domingo, was not submitted to the Senate. (I Malloy, op. cit. (1910) 414.)

The board of arbitrators named by the two Governments to settle the claim made an award July 14, 1904, providing for the redelivery of various properties of the company to the company, and for the payment of over $4,000,000 to the company, in stipulated annual payments. (Ibid. 417.)

27. Venezuela-United States, protocol of February 17, 1903: The protocol with Venezuela of February 17, 1903, submitting to arbitration American claims against Venezuela, under the terms of which awards in favor of the United States were made in an amount of more than $2,000,000, was not submitted to the Senate The commission appointed under the terms of the protocol sat at Caracas. (II Malloy, op. cit. (1910) 1870.)

28. Venezuela-Great Britain, Italy, United States et al., protocols of May 7, 1903: The protocols of agreement between Venezuela, Great Britain, and Italy, to which the United States and other powers are parties, respecting the reference of the question of the preferential treatment of claims to the tribunal at The Hague, signed at Washington, May 7, 1903, were not submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. (II Malloy, op. cit. 1872.)

The dispute was submitted to a tribunal organized under the provisions of the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, signed at The Hague in 1899. The decision was made February 22, 1904. (Ibid. 1878.)

29. Venezuela-United States, claims protocol, February 13, 1909: The claim of the Orinoco Steamship Co. (United States) v. Venezuela (which had previously been heard and decided by the Umpire Barge under the terms of the 1903 protocol between the two countries), was submitted to the arbitration of three jurists selected from the panel of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague, under the terms of the claims protocol of February 13, 1909. (II Malloy, op. cit. 1881.) An award in favor of the American claimants was made at The Hague, October 25, 1910, in the amount of approximately $75,000.

30. Chile-United States, protocol for the arbitration of the Alsop claim, December 1, 1909: The claim of Alsop & Co., an American corporation, for $2,803,370.36, was referred to the arbitration of His Britannic Majesty Edward VII (succeeded by George V) as amiable compositeur, under the terms of the protocol of December 1, 1909, between Chile and the United States (3 Redmond, Treaties, Conventions, etc. (1923) 2508). The award, made July 5, 1911, allowed the claimants 2,275,375 bolivanos on account of property losses. (1911 Foreign Relations of the United States 38.)

31. Panama-United States, protocol providing for the determination of the amount of damages caused by the riot at Panama City, July 4, 1912, signed at Panama, November 27, 1915: Under the terms of the protocol of November 27, 1915, claims of the United States against Panama were submitted to the arbitration of His Excellency W. L. F. C. van Rappard, Minister of the Netherlands to the Governments of the United States and Panama. The protocol was not submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. Seventeen claims, in the total amount of $35,000, on behalf of Americans for the injury or death of American enlisted men or civilians during the affray of July 4, 1912, at Panama City, were presented by the United States. The arbitrator allowed $12,350 in his award of October 20, 1916. (3 Redmond, op. cit. 2778; 1916 Foreign Relations of the United States 918.)

32. Peru-United States, protocol for the arbitration of the Landreau claim against Peru, signed at Lima, May 21, 1921: The claim of John Célestin Landreau (United States) v. Peru, for payments due on account of guano discoveries notified to the Peruvian Government, was arbitrated in London under the terms of the protocol of May 21, 1921, between the Governments of Peru and the United States, which protocol was not submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. The commission, composed of three members, made an award October 26, 1922, in favor of the claimant, in the amount of $125,000. (3 Redmond, op. cit. 2797; MSS., Dept. of State.)

33. Germany-United States, special agreement of August 10, 1922: The agreement, signed at Berlin August 10, 1922, for a mixed commission to determine the amount to be paid by Germany to the United States, in satisfaction of Germany's financial obligations under the treaty concluded between the United States and Germany on August 25, 1921, was not submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. (Treaty Series No. 665; 3 Redmond, op. cit. 2601.)

Under the terms of this agreement the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, met at Washington October 9, 1922, and has not yet terminated its labor. As of June 15, 1933, the Commission had made awards in 6,823 cases, in the total amount of $265,939,068.37.

34. Turkey-United States, agreement of December 24, 1923: The agreement for the examination of American claims against Turkey was effected by an exchange of notes on December 24, 1923, and February 17, 1927, by which it was agreed that a claims committee should be established at Istanbul to consider the claims. This committee met at Istanbul in 1933–34 and arrived at an agreement October 25, 1934, whereby the Government of Turkey agreed to pay $1,300,000 to the United States in settlement of the claims of American nationals.

35. Austria and Hungary-United States, agreement signed at Washington November 26, 1924: The agreement signed at Washington November 26, 1924, by the United States and Austria and Hungary for the determination of the amounts to be paid by Austria and by Hungary in satisfaction of their obligations under the treaties concluded by the United States with Austria on August 24, 1921, and with Hungary on August 29, 1921, was not submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. (Treaty Series No. 730.)

The Tripartite Claims Commission, established pursuant to this agreement to adjudicate claims of American nationals against those two countries for losses sustained during the World War, met in Washington in January 1926 and completed its work in 1929. In 374 cases awards were made against Austria in the amount of $370,032.14, and in 724 cases awards were made against Hungary in the amount of $172,619.70.

36. China-United States, exchange of notes, March 30, 1928: The Sino-American Joint Commission, organized for the settlement of American claims arising out of the unrestrained acts of Chinese soldiers at Nanking, March 24, 1927, met at Shanghai, August 27, 1928, and concluded its work March 13, 1929. This commission was established pursuant to an exchange of notes of March 30, 1928, between the United States and China. This Commission allowed $443,588.79 United States, in 130 individual claims. (MSS., Dept. of State.)

37. Spain-United States, agreement of June 20, 1929: By an arrangement between the United States and Spain, effected by an exchange of notes, signed August 24, 1927, May 13, 1929, and June 20, 1929, the two Governments agreed that all outstanding claims between them should be taken up by representatives appointed by the two Governments. (Executive Agreement Series No. 18.) The representatives were appointed in April 1931, and had begun a series of informal conferences in Washington, when the Spanish representative was recalled on account of conditions in Spain. The matter is in abeyance at the present time, pending the appointment of a Spanish representative.

38. Cuba-United States, agreement signed at Habana, October 1, 1929: By an agreement of October 1, 1929, the Governments of the United States and Cuba agreed to submit to an arbitral commission the claim of Charles J. Harrah, an American citizen, against Cuba for the wrongful destruction of Harrah's property by Cuban authorities. (Arbitration of the claim of Charles J. Harrah, Memorial of the United States, etc. (1929) 49, Arbitration Series No. 1, mss., Dept. of State.) The arbitrators met in Cuba, December 2, 1929. They held that the Government of Cuba was liable, but failed to reach an agreement as to the amount of damages. Subsequently, the two Governments agreed that Cuba should pay $350,000 in full settlement of the claim. (Press release, Dept. of State, July 2, 1930.)

39. Guatemala-United States, exchange of notes, November 22, 1929: Under the terms of an exchange of notes of November 22, 1929, the Governments of Guatemala and the United States agreed to refer to the arbitration of Sir Herbert Sisnett, Kt., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of British Honduras, the claim of P. W. Shufeldt, an American citizen, for damages on account of his losses arising from the alleged illegal cancelation of a concession for the extraction and exportation of chicle. The arbitrator made an award July 24, 1930, in favor of the claimant in the amount of $225,468.38. (Shufeldt claim, arbitration between the United States and Guatemala (1932) 9, Arbitration Series No. 3, Dept. of State.)

40. Egypt-United States, agreement between the United States of America and Egypt, signed January 20, 1931: Under the terms of the agreement of January 20, 1931, the Governments of the United States and Egypt agreed to arbitrate the claim of George J. Salem against Egypt, a claim growing out of the alleged violation of extraterritorial privileges and denial of justice by the mixed courts of Egypt. (Executive Agreement Series No. 33.) This agreement was not submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. The Arbitral Commission met in Vienna in November–December 1931 and disallowed the claim.

Mr. ROBINSON. I repeat that the limitation on the Executive power is that it cannot bind the Government to make appropriations, or make appropriations; and, second, that if a treaty is required to carry out a settlement which he negotiates, it must be submitted to the Senate of the United States under the Constitution.

Going back now for just a moment to the merits of the proposition, and waiving the question of the relative rights of the two departments of the Government, I repeat that the friends of the resolution of adherence should not be deceived into supporting the pending amendment merely because the Senate made a mistake on a former occasion and incorporated it substantially in the resolution of adherence. It is subversive of the purposes of the adherence resolution; it will obstruct the peaceful settlement of international disputes through the Court. A majority of the two Houses of Congress can declare a state of war, and it is implied by the Senator from Nebraska in his remarks that the President, during the vacation of Congress, or during the session of Congress, for that matter, may commit the Government to acts which result in war, but here we have the situation of Senators who profess themselves to be devoted to peaceful methods of settling disputes who propose to make it as hard as possible to use peace machinery, thus making more probable the employment of force. I conclude my argument with the declaration that the friends of the World Court had best vote down the pending amendment to the resolution of adherence.

Mr. President, before taking my seat I should like to return to something that was said a while ago about the I'M Alone case. The settlement of the I'm Alone case was under a treaty of January 1924 between the United States, Great Britain, and Canada, which treaty gave the United States the authority to board vessels suspected of rumrunning.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I find myself unable to agree with the argument just concluded by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments while I most respectfully present the reasons for my dissent.

Before I attempt to make that presentation, Mr. President, I want to observe, inasmuch as I have not heretofore discussed this resolution, that I am one of those who favors American adherence to the World Court. I shall not undertake to state the reasons for my attitude in full, but will summarize those reasons by saying that, in my opinion, civilization must organize for peace and not for war. It should employ every means to substitute law for force in the settlement of differences between nations. I feel America cannot afford to withhold permanently its support and approval of any system of international relationships which even suggests a rule of reason and justice.

Having these opinions I would be very happy if I could find myself in accord with the major premise of the Senator from Arkansas and the argument which he has just concluded against the pending amendment. He said, in effect, that if it were desired to make the pending resolution of adherence really effective it would be impossible to vote for the Norris amendment. In my humble judgment, Mr. President, the exact reverse of that proposition might be maintained. I feel that, in order to remain in the Court and to keep American sentiment in a condition favorable to the Court, it is far better from the standpoint of one who is a friend of adherence that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska be agreed to.

I have not until now heard any argument presented against the principle involved in the proposal made by that Senator; indeed, a rather similar reservation or understanding was a part of the resolution of 1926. I refer to the provision which stipulates that recourse shall not be had to the Court for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other state except by special or general treaty. I appreciate that the two proposals are not identical. I have merely said they are similar in principle. The same proposal was added as an understanding and reservation to the resolution brought upon the floor of the Senate in 1932 by the late Senator Walsh, of Montana, and by the former Senator Fess, of Ohio. That resolution preserved all the reservations to the resolution of 1926, save only those that had been agreed to by the signatory powers in the protocol of accession. Now for the first time the Committee on Foreign Relations has presented to the Senate a resolution of adherence which has abandoned at least three of those reservations and understandings meant for the safeguarding of American interests.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], by his argument against the pending amendment, seeks to justify the elimination of that reservation which provides that there shall be no recourse to the Court for the settlement of American disputes except by treaty, special or general. He states, in effect, the reservation ought to be rejected because, first, it would tend to perpetuate a controversy every time in the future that a question is to be submitted to the Court, and, second, that the proposal transgresses upon the authority of the President. I want to refer briefly to both propositions.

It is true, as I think the Senator from Nebraska might concede, that those who are opposed to the World Court and to our adherence to that Court might well find occasion to object to the submission of questions in which we have or may claim an interest or of disputes to which we are a party. But, Mr. President, why should that be regarded as an argument against the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska? It is not to be assumed that an objection superficially made or based merely upon prejudice against the tribunal would find favor with the great body of the Members of the Senate.

I prefer to assume the Senate would consider the proposal upon its merits and even those who oppose adherence to the Court, in response to a patriotic desire to perform their duties as Senators, would consider the matter upon its merits. But if it is to be assumed that objection to the tribunal would deter Senators from considering any proposal upon its merits, then I ask what would be the effect in case the Senate defeats this amendment, and in case, in the future, the President of the United States should himself be opposed to adherence to the World Court? Would not a greater difficulty be then presented?

It seems to me there is an equal danger in failure to incorporate the reservation in the resolution of adherence than there is in its incorporation, because it is quite conceivable that a future President, in the exercise of the great authority which the Constitution confers upon him, if he be opposed to the determination of an American question by the World Court, would refrain at all times from the submission of that question.

Moreover, the attitude of the State Department or the attitude of the President with respect to the submission of a question is not a matter which is brought out into the forum of open discussion. The country might never know why the Executive at some time in the future would refrain from submitting a question.

It might be assumed it was because of the President's opposition to the World Court as a tribunal, but we would never know; whereas if the matter is brought before the Senate where there is debate in open executive session, the people immediately would be informed of the fact.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. STEIWER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. A moment ago the Senator observed that Senators who are really opposed to entrance into the World Court would still support the submission of questions to it. In other words, the Senator from Oregon believes that a Senator who is now opposed to submitting any question to the World Court would then be willing to submit some questions to the World Court?

Mr. STEIWER. My regard for my colleagues is such that I think I am prepared to say that any Member of this body, even though he votes against adherence to the Court, would consider upon its merits any question that might be brought here in event the pending reservation is adopted.

Mr. CONNALLY. But when a Senator has considered it on its merits, being a Senator who honestly and conscientiously believes no question should be submitted to the World Court, then after he has considered it on its merits the Senator does not think he would still vote against submitting any question?

Mr. STEIWER. I do not think so. I think most Senators have in their hearts and minds a sufficient amount of sportsmanship and are actuated by sufficiently high motives to justify them in voting for submitting a question to the Court if it should be a question capable of judicial determination.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then why does not the Senator vote for adherence to the World Court?

Mr. STEIWER. I cannot answer why other Senators do not vote for it; but unless the Senate shall defeat the essential safeguards, I propose to vote for adherence.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator has suggested that there might come a time when there would be a President who would be so prejudiced against the World Court that he would not submit any question to it. The resolution or reservation of the Senator from Nebraska would not remedy that situation. The reservation does not permit the President or the Congress or anyone else to submit a question. If the President, under the Norris reservation, desires to submit a question to the Court or agree to its submission, it is not permitted unless approved by two-thirds of the Senate; but if he chooses never to exercise the authority under the resolution of adherence, even with the reservation, then neither would function. If we really want the power vested in Congress or someone besides the Executive to submit any question, we will have to have a new treaty.

Mr. STEIWER. I think it is true, as suggested by the Senator from Nevada, that a President might be so opinionated in his objection to the World Court that he would decline to submit a question to the Senate for its consideration. I agree that the proposed reservation submitted by the Senator from Nebraska does not wholly protect against that possibility. But, on the other hand, the Executive might submit questions which the Senate and the country would not submit.

Mr. President, what was the other argument advanced by the Senator from Arkansas in opposition to the Norris reservation? As I understood it, the second proposal was that the adoption of the reservation would transgress upon the authority of the President with respect to his constitutional authority to negotiate agreements with foreign nations.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds further may I submit another question for his consideration?

Mr. STEIWER. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. Even if the treaty or the reservation should attempt to place in the Senate by a two-thirds vote, or in Congress by a majority vote or by a majority vote or by a two-thirds vote, the power to negotiate a treaty by which a question would be submitted, it would be unconstitutional, because if there is one constitutional provision upon which we all agree it is that the negotiation of treaties is exclusively within the power of the Executive.

Mr. STEIWER. That is true, and yet I cannot agree with the Senator that the proposal would be unconstitutional. I shall refer to that in a moment.

The argument made by the Senator from Arkansas was supported by the reading into the RECORD of a list of authorities disclosing cases where arbitrations have been resorted to by our Government and where a final award had been made and no action had been taken by treaty or otherwise by the Senate of the United States. I am not familiar with all the instances referred to in those different precedents. I listened very attentively to the reading of the list, and I say without hesitation that as to most of the cases in the list, if not, indeed, as to all of them, the controversy consisted of the assertion of a claim by the American Government or by an American national against some foreign government. Therefore there was not involved the possibility of an appropriation by Congress and there was no necessity, either under the requirement of the Constitution or otherwise, for the matter to be submitted to the Senate for its approval in advance.

In those cases, of which I was able to understand the nature of the controversy by the references made by the Senator from Arkansas, the award was made in favor of the American Government or an American national upon whose behalf the claim was being presented. Therefore, nothing remained for the Congress to do.

It seems to me that those cases are not at all in point upon the proposition that the retention by the Senate of authority to deal with the submission of questions to the Court transgresses the power of the President or in any other sense is violative of the Constitution of the United States.

In furtherance of that idea let me make this suggestion for the consideration of those who are interested in this immediate proposal. The reservation offered by the Senator from Nebraska does not contemplate that the President shall be sheared of his authority to negotiate with respect to these matters. It merely provides that before a question is submitted to the Court the Senate must act.

Moreover, if the resolution of adherence, which is pending before the Senate, and the reservation of the Senator from Nebraska, both are agreed to, and the United States adheres to the Court under the Robinson resolution, as amended by the reservation offered by the Senator from Nebraska, still the President will retain all the power which he now has under the Constitution with respect to the negotiation of treaties and the settlement of international controversies, because submission to the Court is in no sense compulsory. The President can still negotiate and still refer matters to arbitration, and still adjust them through the exchange of notes without arbitration if that mode of procedure is desired. He still retains his constitutional power.

The only effect of the proposal now before the Senate is that if a matter is to be submitted to a certain tribunal to which we are to adhere by methods which are in every essential regard the same as a treaty, then, and only then, before final action is had, there must be concurrence by the Senate by a two-thirds vote.

Inasmuch as nothing is taken from the President, there is no sound ground upon which to predicate the idea that the reservation offered by the Senator from Nebraska transgresses any authority of the President of the United States.

In order more adequately to present what I conceive to be the true question before the Senate, I desire to detain the Senate a moment longer to consider what it is that we seek to do by the pending resolution.

Senators know that it is already possible for controversies in which the United States is interested to be submitted to the World Court by agreement. Senators know that the proposal embodied in the pending resolution is not for a complete or unqualified adherence. At no time since the beginning of the consideration of this question has any friend of the World Court occupying a high place in the councils of our country suggested that we should completely and fully adhere to the Court. Every suggestion that I know is a suggestion for partial adherence. That is true of the resolution of 1926. That is true of the proposal recommended by the present Chief Justice when he was Secretary of State. It is true of the resolution brought before the Senate from the Foreign Relations Committee in 1932, at the time the report to which I alluded a little while ago was made by the late Senator Walsh, of Montana, and former Senator Fess. In every case there has been a reservation that we do not agree to the optional provision for compulsory jurisdiction. In every case there has been a reservation against the rendering of advisory opinions without our consent.

Thus, we have sought to write into every resolution of adherence a reservation which stands as a bar to the jurisdiction of the Court against the rendition or consideration of any advisory opinion touching a question or dispute in which the United States has or claims an interest.

That being true, Mr. President, we may well now inquire what it is that is sought to be accomplished by this resolution of adherence. It is not, I say, to bring about a complete identification with the Court. It is merely once again to offer to bring the United States into the Court by a partial adherence, under the terms of the four reservations agreed to by the powers signatory, as expressed in the protocol of accession of 1929, and under the provisions which are expressly stated in the pending resolution of adherence.

It is interesting to note that the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], in expressing his opinion upon this subject, made a very clear declaration. I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I read it. In this report, in which the Senator was speaking for the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations, he said:

> It is not proposed that the United States should agree, by the ratification of these protocols, to confer upon the Court any jurisdiction over disputes to which the United States may be a party. The ratification of the three Court protocols would not bind the United States to make any use of the Court or to go before the Court at the instance of any other state. The proposed ratification involves for the United States the single obligation to contribute to the expenses of the Court.

With the negative propositions contained in this statement I am in agreement. I think it is literally true that this resolution does not propose to confer jurisdiction; that it does not bind the United States to submit questions for determination; that it does not require our Nation to go before the Court at the instance of any other state. With respect to the last proposition, in which it is stated that the proposed ratification involves the United States in the single obligation to contribute to the expenses of the Court, I am also substantially in agreement.

The fact of the matter is that the statute of the Court, which now permits the United States to appear before it as a party litigant, provides that in the event of such appearance the Court may require the contribution by the litigant of a fair amount for the payment of the expenses of the Court. That is to say, if we should elect, without adherence, to submit a question to the Court, we immediately would be charged with a payment and contribution for the expenses of the Court's administration. So it is that by adherence we merely change the form in which the payment might be made.

By adherence we create against ourselves an obligation to contribute to the Court's expenses, whether or not we submit a question. Without adherence we contribute only in the event we submit a question.

If we obligate ourselves to contribute whether or not we are parties litigant before the Court, it puts us in the position of agreeing to the payment of some stated sum. It is a little like paying a lawyer an annual retainer, as distinguished from paying him for each case as the work is performed. There might be no difference in the amount expended under the two systems. They merely provide two different modes of making the payment.

So, Mr. President, the statement made in the committee's report and brought upon the floor by the Senator from Arkansas should not be construed to mean that adherence creates the necessity for payment which might not otherwise exist. It merely creates an obligation on the part of the United States to keep up a continuing contribution to the expenses of the Court; and that, unfortunately, is about all that is involved in this resolution so far as our international relationships are concerned; for, as I said a while ago, we could in any event appear before the Court as litigants. We can in any event refrain from appearing before the Court as litigants. So apparently our sovereignty and the integrity of our national purpose is still in our own hands; and this long discussion, which has detained the Senate now for a considerable time, and which will detain it at least into the next week, involves, by the declaration of the Senator from Arkansas, with which I am substantially in accord, merely the question as to whether we shall assume a continuing obligation to contribute to the expenses of the Court.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I suggest that probably there is one other change in the conditions as they now exist. As the conditions now exist, the Court may entertain a request for an advisory opinion over our objection, without our consent, touching a question in which we have or claim an interest. If this resolution shall be adopted and our adherence shall be accepted, that danger at least will be removed; and I may say that that was the greatest danger that I ever conceived was possible under our adherence, because, as the Senator has stated, the Court is open to us now.

The President of the United States may agree to submit a dispute either upon his own initiative or at the request of another government; but no matter how many objections the President might make against the Court rendering an advisory opinion against our objection, they could do it now. It was for that reason that I never could support adherence without reservation no. 5, which I now hold is a part of our adherence.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I suggest to my friend from Oregon and my friend from Nevada that they are both demonstrating now that there is not anything at all in our action in going into this so-called "World Court." The Senator from Oregon has demonstrated, I think, completely that the statement made by the committee in relation to our obligations if we enter the Court, the only obligation being the payment of expenses, is really a chimerical one; that it does not differ, indeed, from the situation that exists today. The Senator from Nevada now shows that adherence to the Court amounts to nothing at all, anyway.

So we stand here today with these gentlemen saying to us, "If we go into this Court it does not mean a single, solitary thing to the United States of America, and there is no obligation that we assume save that in relation to money that already is assumed by us." Therefore, from their arguments we may conclude that all the things that have been said and all the reasons that have been quoted are of no consequence, for we are doing nothing at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, while I think the Senator from California very correctly expresses the opinion of the Senator from Oregon, I rose for the very purpose of differing from the Senator from Oregon as to his limitations upon the effect of our adherence by calling attention to the fact that at the present time the Court could give an advisory opinion contrary to our policy, affecting what we call our domestic interest, if you please, and we could not prevent it.

Mr. JOHNSON. And now we can.

Mr. PITTMAN. But if this adherence is accepted by the other governments, the Court will not have jurisdiction to render an advisory opinion over our objection touching any question in which we have or claim an interest. Therefore I do not state that our adherence will accomplish nothing.

Mr. JOHNSON. So we go into the Court, then, for what—for what, I ask the Senator? Will the Senator state that to me? If we do not go in upon the theory merely of paying a part of the expenses, and if we do not go in for any other purpose, and we are not going in under any circumstances anyway, what are we doing, and why are we talking here in respect to the matter?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, without attempting to make answer to the question just propounded by the Senator from California, but in order to proceed to a conclusion of what I am trying to suggest, I desire to refer briefly to the suggestion made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

I think my statement was somewhat too inclusive. I agree with the Senator from Nevada that with respect to advisory opinions—not with respect to the statutory jurisdiction of the Court, but with respect to advisory opinions—the Senator from Nevada is entirely correct, and that in the resolution of 1929, in the resolution that came from the committee in 1932, and again in the resolution which is now pending before the Senate, there is a provision which actually, or, at least, potentially, protects America against the submission of an advisory opinion against the wish of our Government. I might note with respect to that, however, that the resolution of 1929 contained language that would prevent the Court from taking jurisdiction of an advisory question in which we had or claimed an interest without the affirmative consent of our Government, whereas the pending resolution offers a bar against jurisdiction of the Court to consider rendering an advisory opinion regarding a matter in which we have or claim an interest if we make objection to such consideration.

There is, I take it, a very vital difference in the two propositions; but I did not rise to discuss that difference, and so far as I am personally concerned, my desire for adherence is such that I am not disposed to quarrel over the substitution of the proposition of protest for the original proposition of consent.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. Is not the distinction that in the first instance the consent of the United States is required—in other words, it takes the affirmative act of the United States to confer jurisdiction upon the Court—while in the present case the form of the resolution presupposes a jurisdiction which can be taken from the Court only by what I will call a plea to the jurisdiction by the United States?

Mr. STEIWER. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will admit that that is true—that under the pending resolution there must be an objection to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain a request for an advisory opinion. When the first reservation was adopted by the Senate, it was in the form that the Court could not consider such a request for an advisory opinion except with our consent. The so-called "Root-Hurst protocol" provided machinery by which our Government should be notified of all applications for advisory opinions, or all intentions to ask for advisory opinions. Then we were to determine for ourselves whether it was a question affecting our interests. Otherwise, we could not know what the question was that was to be submitted to the Court until after the Court had commenced to act, and there was no provision then by which we could go into Court and divest it of its jurisdiction, as the consent possibly did not touch the jurisdiction of the Court.

Nevertheless, I claim that there is an advantage in the present situation, first because we must be notified of every attempt by the Council of the League of Nations to ask for an advisory opinion, no matter by what government it may be initiated. I think that is an advantage. In the second place, there will be ample time for the United States to study the request for an advisory opinion, and to see whether or not we claim an interest in it; and if we do that, we object.

As the Root protocol was written, there was great doubt as to whether our objection would prevent the Court from taking jurisdiction. I did not believe it prevented the Court from taking jurisdiction; therefore I insisted on reservation 5. But having objected after knowing the questions that are to be brought up, there is no question that our objection eliminates the jurisdiction of the Court to render an opinion.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, may I interrupt? And it has to be a challenge of the jurisdiction affirmatively made by the United States in order to divest the Court of the jurisdiction.

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly; and before that we never knew what the question was, because they never gave us notice of it.

Mr. WHITE. To interrupt once more. Was it not true under the original reservation that the Court had no jurisdiction without our express consent? In other words, in the first instance they got their jurisdiction from the affirmative consent of the United States. And is it not true that in the present situation that is precisely reversed, and the jurisdiction is presumed to exist and can be challenged only by what I will call a plea to the jurisdiction?

Mr. PITTMAN. May I answer that in my own way?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the Senator from Maine and I agree substantially in this, that we might never know of a request of the Court.

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Court might proceed and render an opinion, and while it might not be legally binding upon us, because no advisory opinion is legally binding, the moral effect upon the world and upon us might injure us greatly. We could then claim that the question being one that did affect our interest, the decision was void, and the decision would be void if it affected our interests. But the unfortunate part is that after the opinion was once rendered the contention that it was void would not aid us any.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I find myself in the happy position of agreement in substance with the views just expressed by both the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Personally I would prefer the original requirement of consent to the subsequent requirement of objection in the terms of the protocol, but I agree with the Senator from Nevada that there is a distinct advantage to our Government in providing the machinery that is provided under the Root formula, and a very distinct advantage in having an assurance that notice will be made to us in advance, and that we will have opportunity in a peaceful and friendly way to negotiate with respect to our claims in the premises.

I feel, moreover, Mr. President, that the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations in writing the reservation to which we are now alluding into the pending resolution is important, and that the committee ought to be commended for doing it, because, although we may place our own construction upon the Root formula, the fact is that very distinguished authorities in some part of the country have not taken the view which I believe the Senator from Nevada and which I myself have with respect to it. Some of them have said that the Root formula merely provides an alternative right; first, the right to withhold consent, and then the right to withdraw from the Court, and that it destroys our veto power; that is to say, it destroys our opportunity to offer an absolute bar to the jurisdiction of the Court.

Inasmuch as that question is controverted, and inasmuch as it introduces ambiguity into the consideration of this matter, I think it is wholly wise that the resolution of adherence should contain language of understanding as is reported to us from the Committee on Foreign Relations, that there may be no question but what if we insist upon our objection we raise a bar to the jurisdiction of the Court in any matter in which we have or claim an interest.

However, Mr. President, conceding the safeguarding element of this statement of understanding, conceding that it protects our Government against the improvident submission of a question for an advisory opinion, I insist that the fact remains that so far as this resolution of adherence is concerned, that the statement made by the committee in its report is substantially correct, and speaking now with respect to the general jurisdiction of the Court, this resolution of adherence does not accomplish a thing in the world except to create the obligation upon the United States to contribute to the expense of the Court.

But does it do something else? Mr. President, I took the floor today because of my deep belief that it does do another thing, more important perhaps than its effect upon the international relationships of our country. It seems to me that when this resolution of adherence drops out of consideration the safeguarding reservations and understandings of the earlier resolutions of adherence, it accomplishes a great deal by way of transferring authority from the Senate of the United States to the State Department. One of the resolutions of understanding which has been written upon all resolutions of adherence heretofore, is as follows:

> Resolved further, as a part of this act of ratification, That the United States approves the protocols and statute hereinabove mentioned, with the understanding that recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other state or states can be had only by agreement thereto through general or special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute.

Mr. President, the obvious effect of this important understanding is that we reserve to ourselves the purpose never to go to that Court except that we go by special or general treaty. It means, Mr. President, that if we are to abandon our former methods of arbitration, if we are to yield up settlement of international differences by negotiation, if we are to leave behind us 150 years of the traditions of our Government in order to have recourse to a Permanent Court of International Justice, we shall do it in one way, and in one way only, and that way shall be one that will leave to the Executive his constitutional right of negotiation, but reserve to the Senate the duty and the authority to advise and to consent to the proposition which is being undertaken. It ought not to be necessary in an American parliamentary body to urge the advantages of that kind of a system. Obviously it would mean that the American people would understand something about their national affairs. Obviously the questions would be debated here. Obviously the press would carry to the country the story of the effort being made to submit a question before this important international tribunal.

And I say, Mr. President, that there is nothing in the fact of partial adherence that is half as important to the people of America as the preservation of our form of government. There is nothing that we can gain merely by fixing upon ourselves an obligation to contribute to the expense of the Court, that means as much to the generations to come as the insistence by the Senate upon the retention of its constitutional powers and functions, and by our adherence to the well-established system of bringing our international controversies out into the open that we may have open covenants openly arrived at; that we may get away from the secret diplomacy as practiced in some parts of the Old World.

To me this question is so serious that I find it difficult to give my vote for adherence to the World Court unless the principle of the pending amendment or the provision of the earlier resolutions can be written into this resolution, so that we may know that we are adhering to the Court in the right way and not in the wrong way.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator as to the importance of this resolution when we are thinking about the Court as a court, but how would this resolution work and how would it be effective when we are dealing with the advisory jurisdiction of the Court, which is not under the control of other nations at all but wholly under the control of the League of Nations? How would you have a treaty or an agreement in regard to this matter? We have an advisory jurisdiction. The League calls upon the Court for advice and opinion. Great Britain does not call upon the Court for an opinion. France does not call upon the Court for an opinion. The League calls upon the Court for an opinion. However, how would this resolution, which the Senator is advocating with great force, and properly, protect us with reference to the advisory jurisdiction?

Mr. STEIWER. It would not, Mr. President. It would protect us only as to the other jurisdiction of the Court. As to the advisory jurisdiction of the Court we are obliged to rely upon the understanding expressed in the resolution that there shall be no request entertained for an advisory opinion over our objection. So that we have two questions of jurisdiction, and we have two kinds of protection; one to protect us in one case and one in the other.

Mr. President, I want to conclude what I am saying. I want to conclude by stating again without being dogmatic, and merely expressing my own humble opinion, that I feel that it is better, all things considered, for the United States to take whatever unavoidable risk may be involved in this situation in order to make our Nation a party to the establishment of a permanent court of justice in the world. I feel that we owe it to ourselves.

I make no plea that we should adhere because of our duty to other nations, but I think we owe it to ourselves as a civilized nation to help organize the world for peace and not to insist that the world be organized only for war. Strongly as I feel, it seems to me that it is of the utmost importance that those of us who are the friends of adherence should insist that we adhere in a right way and not in a wrong way; that we should not defeat and destroy the very best traditions of our country; that we should not add to the concentration of power in the Executive; that we should not leave entirely to the second or the third or the fourth assistant Secretary of State the determination of our foreign policy. It is too easily conceived that the day will come when the President of the United States may not find it possible to pass judgment upon the questions which are to be presented by the notices of requests for advisory opinions. The day may come in the lives of all of us when matters of that sort will be turned over entirely to the State Department and not even the Secretary of State will be sufficiently interested to perform his functions with respect to them.

We do not know, Mr. President, to whom we are giving this power to make or withhold objection; we do not know to whom we are leaving the determination of great questions which may involve our country even to the extent of war; we do not know when we yield up this power into whose hands the power is to fall. But we do know if the pending amendment fails the Senate loses its power to protect American interests against ill-advised Executive action.

I protest against adherence in an improvident way, and appeal to Senators, and more particularly to those who are in favor of adherence, to use the great influence that is theirs to insure that our adherence is consummated in a way that will safeguard and protect American interests, that we shall not destroy our domestic structure in our effort to do something for ourselves abroad.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, there are one or two things that have just been said in the argument which has preceded to which I wish to call attention. Both of the very eloquent Senators who have addressed the Senate said, in substance, that all that was being done by our adherence to the so-called "World Court" was in the one instance, the payment in another form of the expenses that we would have to pay in any event if we had cases before the Court; and, in the other instance, as I understood the Senator from Nevada, if we went into the Court we would be far better protected than if we should stay out, because of the reservation respecting the advisory opinions. I hope that I state accurately, in substance, what was said by my two friends.

O Mr. President, is all the propaganda with which we are familiar in this country today, based upon asking us to perform an act to which there is no substance and from which no good would flow? Are all the orators and the writers of all the books that have been published by the many gentlemen who are upon the pay roll at so much per month as propagandists outside engaged in asking, begging, bludgeoning the United States Senate into doing an utterly futile act from which no good would flow to this Government and from which humanity would derive no benefit at all? If so, there is no justification for any action on our part, but I think my senatorial friends either misapprehend or unduly minimize the importance of what we are doing.

Sir, do you know what it was that started the great World War? What was it that put into that war the great British Empire that fought the great fight for years upon European soil? It was, sir, as Earl Grey said at the time they went in, the moral obligation under which Britain felt herself by reason of what had transpired between France and Britain; and to me, as I recall, too, the words of President Wilson long ago in the debate on the League of Nations, a moral obligation, sir, is as strong and as powerful as any legal obligation, and when we go into this particular organization we go under the moral obligation to do our part.

Sir, let me recur for just an instant to a remark that was made this morning when the Senator from Arkansas asked if a question came before the Senate as to the submission of a controversy to the Court what would the Senator from California do? Would he not then endeavor to delay submission so as to render the Court nugatory. Not so, sir, with the Senator from California. If this country enters into an engagement with other countries and undertakes to do its part, I will do mine as a Senator of the United States, and any questions that might come before us in relation to matters that may be submitted to the Court would be decided upon the merits of the particular question alone. I have an opinion of the Senate of such character that I believe if questions came to us to be determined and we had undertaken the moral obligation that rested upon us as a member of the Court, every man here would stand up and do his full duty, render his decision upon the particular question presented and not upon any original or initial opposition to the World Court itself.

It is like the argument in behalf of the Court presented to us by some of our friends here to the effect that we need not go in if we do not wish and we may stay out if we desire, "a convenient instrumentality to which we may go but to which we cannot be brought."

I cannot tolerate, sir, any such argument with regard to any activity on the part of my country. If we join the World Court, we will do our duty; if we go into it we will go in with our heads high, and with the moral obligation upon us to do our part; and no man would do it more readily than would the individual who detests this Court and is now speaking to the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is there any question touching the interests of the United States that the Senator today would vote to submit to the World Court?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know. I know there are some questions I would not vote to submit to the Court, but I cannot tell the Senator that there is any question that should be submitted. I am not clear; but certainly today, before we enter the Court, I would not vote to submit any question to the Court, of course.

Now let me say to the Senator that there is something in which he is interested as well as am I, something that our friends from Oregon and our friends from Washington are interested in. They are interested in questions of immigration and questions of land tenure out in their sections. Ah, the time may come, if we go into this Court—I do not say that ultimately it will come—when we will be asked to submit not alone the question of oriental immigration that affects us so vitally in the West, but we will be asked to submit as well the question of our agricultural-land protection there concerning which there has been so much dispute and controversy. No less an advocate of the Court than the late Senator Walsh of Montana himself long ago in the discussion conceded that very fact concerning immigration. The Chinese Exclusion Act had been in force for some time—I utilize that rather than the other illustration because there is no particular controversy about it at the moment—and the late Senator Walsh in discussing the subject said in the Senate—and Senators can find it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 21, 1925—that—

> If a Chinaman should contend that he was excluded from the United States, but that he was entitled to enter by provision of that treaty, it would be a matter of international concern and not a question of domestic concern.

Any question of international concern of the character indicated the World Court would take cognizance of and have jurisdiction concerning. I would not submit what the State of California has done in relation to the Chinese question or the oriental question to any Court that sits across the sea. As my friend from Nevada will remember, within the past few years on several occasions Japanese representatives have presented to the League of Nations and the Council of the League the very questions concerning which I am now speaking, and in presenting those questions they met with a sympathetic audience.

I cannot subscribe to the idea that has been presented here that we are in exactly the position outside the Court that we would be in if we were within the Court. That I cannot for an instant concede. It violates every conception of logic which I have when it is asserted that we are in exactly the like situation so far as liability might be concerned or so far as possible injury might happen when we stay out of the Court as when we go into the Court. That is, in my opinion, something that ought to be perfectly plain to any mentality. In the Court, with the moral obligation resting upon us, we are in a totally different situation from that in which we are when we are out of the Court, and action may be taken in the one case or the other. There is an entirely dissimilar proposition presented.

So, Mr. President, I am not patient with the arguments that are made here minimizing what we are doing today. Some of our friends who sit on the other side of the aisle know full well what is in their minds. I honor them for their candor, their frankness. They are going to take us into the League of Nations, as is their right, and they avow that purpose definitely, openly, and aboveboard. That is what this proposal is intended to accomplish—to take us into the League of Nations—and that is what I do not want to happen under any circumstances.

That the Senate, if questions are presented to it under this resolution, will determine in accordance with a preconceived idea about the World Court, I again say I cannot for an instant concede. I have the idea of the Senate—it may be simply the idea of one who has grown old in service here—that has been expressed in the past. I believe in the Senate. I know that it has done its duty in days gone by. I have seen it under fire and I have seen it come forth unscathed. I believe there are men in the Senate of the United States, who, no matter what power may be exerted, no matter what influence may be brought to bear, no matter what may be the ephemeral gusts of popular favor, will risk all for the welfare of their country. I repeat the words of Daniel Webster, uttered years and years ago concerning this body:

> This is a Senate—

Said he—

> a Senate of equals, of men of individual honor and personal character, and of absolute independence.

Sometimes we forget that, perhaps, and sometimes, by specious argument, we endeavor to alibi ourselves concerning our independence; but, after all, in the last analysis, when our country's interests are at stake, we have, I insist, the independence that Americans should have in acting for the preservation, the happiness, the prosperity, and the welfare of our people. Webster continued:

> We know no masters; we acknowledge no dictators.

I speak for no man on this floor but myself; I acknowledge no human master in all this world, and no individual can dictate my course, political or otherwise, in the Senate. I believe there are many others here who have exactly the like feeling; and those who have that like feeling, if they believe as I do, that this sort of thing that we are asked now to undertake bodes ill for the welfare of the American people, will join with me in the contest that is to be made on Monday. Rather than take the risk of harm to the Republic that all of us love, rather than to peril for a single instant the country that is ours, let us unite with the rest of those who have made this fight during the past few days in keeping this Nation free and untrammeled and independent in its judgments in the days to come.

The reservation submitted by the Senator from Nebraska simply preserves the prestige and the honor and the traditions of the American Senate. Why should we legislate the Senate out of the right to pass upon what is substantially a treaty and say we will delegate it to some other power or to some individual? If I were delegating power today I would rather delegate it to the gentleman who sits in the White House than almost any other man I know. But I am here free and independent. I am here, in the language of the great Senator from Massachusetts, recognizing no master, no dictator of any kind or any character. I am here a United States Senator believing that the obligation resting upon me is equal to the obligation that rests upon any human being in official position in all this world. So I would preserve, by the reservation of the Senator from Nebraska, what is the undoubted right of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. PITTMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Byrnes | Frazier | McCarran |
| Ashurst | Capper | Gerry | McGill |
| Austin | Caraway | Glass | McNary |
| Bachman | Carey | Gore | Maloney |
| Bailey | Clark | Guffey | Metcalf |
| Bankhead | Connally | Hale | Minton |
| Barkley | Coolidge | Harrison | Moore |
| Bilbo | Costigan | Hastings | Murphy |
| Black | Couzens | Hayden | Murray |
| Bone | Cutting | Johnson | Neely |
| Borah | Davis | Keyes | Norbeck |
| Brown | Dickinson | King | Norris |
| Bulkley | Dieterich | La Follette | Nye |
| Bulow | Donahey | Lewis | O'Mahoney |
| Burke | Duffy | Logan | Pittman |
| Byrd | Fletcher | Lonergan | Pope |
| Radcliffe | Sheppard | Townsend | Walsh |
| Reynolds | Shipstead | Trammell | Wheeler |
| Robinson | Smith | Truman | White |
| Russell | Steiwer | Vandenberg | |
| Schall | Thomas, Okla. | Van Nuys | |
| Schwellenbach | Thomas, Utah | Wagner | |

Mr. LEWIS. I again make the announcement of absences of Senators as on a previous roll call, and add that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska, to the resolution of adherence.

Mr. MCNARY and Mr. ROBINSON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who is necessarily detained from the Senate. If he were present, my understanding is he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], and the Senator-elect from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] are necessarily detained from the Senate in performance of their duties as members of the special committee to investigate conditions in the Philippine Islands.

I also announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is necessarily detained from the Senate. I am advised that if present he would vote "aye."

I regret to announce that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] are detained from the Senate on account of illness.

Mr. AUSTIN. My colleague Mr. GIBSON is absent on the business of the Senate in the Philippines. He has a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. I am not informed how either Senator would vote on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 47, as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Donahey | Murphy | Thomas, Okla. |
| Bone | Frazier | Murray | Townsend |
| Borah | Gore | Norbeck | Trammell |
| Capper | Hale | Norris | Vandenberg |

| Carey | La Follette | Reynolds | Wheeler |
| Couzens | McCarran | Russell | White |
| Cutting | McGill | Schall | |
| Davis | McNary | Shipstead | |
| Dickinson | Metcalf | Steiwer | |

NAYS—47

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Byrd | Harrison | Pittman |
| Ashurst | Byrnes | Hayden | Pope |
| Bachman | Clark | Keyes | Radcliffe |
| Bailey | Connally | King | Robinson |
| Bankhead | Coolidge | Lewis | Schwellenbach |
| Barkley | Costigan | Logan | Sheppard |
| Bilbo | Dieterich | Lonergan | Smith |
| Black | Duffy | Maloney | Thomas, Utah |
| Brown | Fletcher | Minton | Truman |
| Bulkley | Gerry | Moore | Van Nuys |
| Bulow | Glass | Neely | Wagner |
| Burke | Guffey | O'Mahoney | |

NOT VOTING—10

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Barbour | Gibson | Long | Overton |
| Copeland | Hastings | McAdoo | Tydings |
| George | Hatch | | |

So the amendment of Mr. NORRIS was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of adherence is open to further amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, under the agreement that has been entered into, I am about to ask that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business; but first I shall ask for the consideration of nominations on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first nomination on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles B. Faris, of Missouri, to be United States circuit judge for the eighth circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

CUSTOMS SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Austin J. Mahoney to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 8, Rochester, N. Y.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The reading clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That completes the calendar.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably over 1,400 routine promotions in the Army. To print them in the usual way would require about 45 pages of the Executive Calendar and an expense of something like $100. I ask that they be confirmed by unanimous consent, without printing, with four exceptions which we have referred to a subcommittee, as a matter of custom, on account of their importance. The report of the committee is unanimous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas spoke to me about the matter, and I have made some investigation in the interest of economy. I find that there are a number of precedents for the action that is proposed, because these are merely routine promotions in the Army; and under those circumstances I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Senate return to legislative session.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation expires on the 31st day of January. In view of the fact that there are only about 6 days remaining, it is very important to pass at this time Senate bill 1175, extending for 2 years the life of the Corporation.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1175.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1175) to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years; to authorize loans or renewals or extensions to mature not later than January 31, 1945; to empower the Corporation to buy railroad obligations, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in aid of railroad reorganization and in certain other circumstances; to empower the Corporation (a) to aid the mortgage situation generally by the purchase of nonassessable stock in mortgage-loan companies and similar financial institutions, and to authorize the sale of stock, capital notes, or debentures purchased by the Corporation; and (b) to purchase any portion of the assets of closed banks under certain conditions; to increase the authorized investments in preferred stock and capital notes of insurance companies, or loans thereon, from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000; to continue the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Banks of Washington, D. C., as agencies of the United States; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, so many of us have not had an opportunity to read the bill that I suggest that it be read in extenso from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am compelled to ask for order. It is very necessary that the purport of this bill be understood by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries will please preserve order. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That until February 1, 1937, or such earlier date as the President may fix by proclamation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform under law, and the liquidation and winding up of its affairs as provided for by section 13 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, are hereby postponed during the period that the functions of the Corporation are continued pursuant to this act.

SEC. 2. (a) Except as provided in section 9 of an act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes", approved June 19, 1934, no funds shall be disbursed on any commitment or agreement hereafter made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make a loan or advance, subscribe for stock, or purchase capital notes or debentures, after the expiration of 1 year from the date of such commitment or agreement; but within the period of such 1-year limitation no provision of law terminating any of the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall be construed to prohibit disbursement of funds on commitments or agreements to make loans or advances, subscribe for preferred stock, or purchase capital notes or debentures.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, disbursement may be made at any time prior to January 31, 1936, on any commitment or agreement heretofore made by the Corporation to make a loan or advance, subscribe for preferred stock, or purchase capital notes or debentures.

SEC. 3. Notwithstanding any other provision of law limiting the maturity of obligations taken by it to shorter periods, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make loans or advances or renewals or extensions thereof to authorized borrowers or by other suitable agreement permit them to run so as to mature at such time or times as the Corporation may determine, not later than January 31, 1945: Provided, That in respect of loans or renewals or extensions of loans or purchases of obligations under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as heretofore and herein amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), to or of railroads, the Corporation may require as a condition of making any such loan or renewal or extension for a period longer than 5 years, or purchasing any such obligation maturing later than 5 years from the date of purchase by the Corporation, that such arrangements be made for the reduction or amortization of the indebtedness of the railroad, either in whole or in part, as may be approved by the Corporation after the prior approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah, who asked to have the bill read, permit me to interject a question here?

Mr. KING. Certainly; I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], if he understands that under this provision the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may go into the market and buy the securities of any railroad?

I ask that question particularly because it has been reported in the press that it is the contention of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that they should be permitted to go into the open market and buy depreciated railroad securities. I confess that I was at the committee meeting and I did not ask the chairman of the committee if that was the proper interpretation of the bill. I should like to have the chairman of the committee advise me whether or not he contemplates such authority being granted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not understand that it was intended to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to go into the open market and buy railroad securities. It is my understanding that only in case of emergent reorganization, or something of that sort, would they be authorized to buy such securities for the purpose of effecting transactions in the interest of the reorganization. I do not understand that the bill simply authorizes the Corporation to go into the open market and deal or speculate in railroad stocks or bonds.

Mr. COUZENS. I think that is the interpretation which the committee put on the bill; but I observe that the language on page 3, in the section just read, is rather broad, because it authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase such obligations "maturing later than 5 years from the date of purchase by the Corporation." It does not place any limitation on how they will purchase such obligations, unless the last sentence of the paragraph may be construed as a limitation. That is to the effect that they must first have the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which in itself, I assume, is the obligation implied.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I think that is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not quite satisfied with the information which has been imparted to the Senate. That is perhaps my own fault.

I should like to inquire whether it is the intention of this bill to provide a cushion for all the railroads of the United States, to furnish unlimited credit to the railroads of the United States, to buy their stocks and bonds, to aid in consolidations; and if consolidations occur which call for large credits, to supply the same.

There have been some criticisms of certain loans made to certain railroads. I do not pretend to say that the loans were improvidently made or that the criticisms were warranted; before voting for this bill I desire to know the commitments which are being made, not only to industry generally, but particularly to railroads.

I look with a good deal of apprehension upon a movement of no small proportions which contemplates the Government of the United States taking over and owning the railroads. It is possible that if the Government loans to the railroads hundreds of millions of dollars, the day may come when it may be compelled to take over some of our railroad systems.

Quite recently the Reconstruction Finance Corporation stepped in, doubtless very properly, and, if it did not take over a branch of one of the railroads, it at least has assumed an important part in the management of the railroad.

I shall be glad to be advised as to the limitations that this bill imposes upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the matter of loans to corporations, and particularly to railroads.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, in reply to the Senator's question, no additional funds are provided in this bill for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They are authorized, under this section, as follows:

Within the foregoing limitations of this section—

That is, the limitations which have heretofore been provided in the law—

the Corporation, notwithstanding any limitation of law as to maturity, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, including approval of the price to be paid, may, to aid in the financing, reorganization, consolidation, maintenance, or construction thereof, purchase for itself, or for account of a railroad obligated thereon, the obligations of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, including equipment trust certificates, or guarantee the payment of the principal of, and/or interest on, such obligations.

There are one or two situations in which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has already carried on negotiations with respect to the possible purchase of a portion of a railroad, for instance, a portion between St. Louis and St. Paul-Minneapolis, Minn. I understand that a tentative agreement has already been reached by which one road will purchase a certain part of that mileage, another one a certain part, and another one another certain part. The road is probably one which should never have been built, but which is serving some practical purpose and ought not to be entirely abandoned. Under this section the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, instead of lending money to the railroad in order to enable it to purchase a part of this particular line, may guarantee any obligations that are outstanding with respect to its financial structure or set-up, and the amount to which such obligations are guaranteed must be deducted from the total sum available under the R. F. C., which would reduce its working capital to that extent. In other words, this section will permit the R. F. C. to guarantee certain obligations without going into the Treasury and using the credit of the Government to sell bonds in order to get money to turn over to the R. F. C. for the purpose of making loans to railroads.

It is not contemplated at all to go out into the general field to purchase railroad securities or to engage in any respect on a wholesale basis in the consolidation or reorganization of railroads; but the provision is placed there in general language to enable the Corporation to deal with two or three situations in a way which they think—and I think the committee was convinced—would be desirable and advisable. It does not amount to any increase at all in the obligations of the Corporation, but it enables it, without bothering the Treasury, to do what would be similar to making a loan by guaranteeing some outstanding obligation.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to ask the Senator if he construes this bill to place any limitation upon the amount that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may guarantee?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; there are two limitations: First, that whatever they do in that respect must be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and, in the next place, their general limitation is the amount of money which is available to them to make loans.

Mr. COUZENS. Does that apply on the guaranty as well as with respect to the matter of loans?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it applies on the guaranty, because the extent to which they guarantee any obligation is to be construed as a loan in determining the amount available to the R. F. C. for future loans.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator wants that distinctly understood—that the guaranty remains within the limit of the total appropriation made for R. F. C. purposes?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; absolutely. It was put there to save two transactions, one by the Treasury and the other by the R. F. C. It was specifically provided that the guaranty should be regarded as a loan, so that the amount of the guaranty would be deducted from the total amount of the funds available.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the Senator another question, so long as he is discussing the bill?

I observe, on the next page, which we will come to later, a limitation of appropriations for the purpose of rehabilitating the mortgage market to $100,000,000. It occurs to me that, on page 5, at the end of line 21, we should put in a proviso that not more than $100,000,000 could be used for this purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is language which is not necessary in the present measure, because it is a repetition of what is on the preceding page.

Mr. COUZENS. No; that is not what I am referring to. I ask the Senator from Kentucky whether or not there should be some limitation in the act on the amount of money that the R. F. C. may expend for financing railroads and for the purpose of guaranteeing railroad loans?

Mr. BARKLEY. That question was not raised in the committee——

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; I recall that.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I presume there might be the same reason for that as there might be for the elimination of the $100,000,000 that we placed in the bill as to mortgages.

The Senator will realize that there are only two or three cases that the R. F. C. have in mind to which this provision will apply, or to which they intend it to apply. I do not know what sort of limitation would be proper. If we put the same limitation here that we do in the mortgage section, it might be regarded as a minimum. Sometimes a maximum is regarded as a minimum, and it might be regarded as an intimation on the part of Congress that they could go that far. In view of the fact that it is only expected that this provision will cover a small territory, and with respect to two or three railroads, I believe it would be better not to put in a limitation, because there might be others who would take advantage of the limitation and come in and say, "Well, you have $100,000,000, or $50,000,000, and, therefore, you ought to make this loan", or "you ought to make this guaranty."

Mr. COUZENS. With all due deference to the Senator from Kentucky, I think the same thing would apply to the limitation placed on mortgage loans.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will realize that that is a new departure so far as the R. F. C.'s loaning ability is concerned. It was thought desirable to put in a limitation. This is really not a new field. It is a new departure. The R. F. C. has already made many loans to railroads. The main object of this section is to permit the R. F. C. to engage in refinancing without actually going into the market for the sale of Government securities in order to obtain cash in order to make loans to the railroads; and there is a little broader power there with respect to making loans or guaranties for reorganizations or consolidations.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the chairman of the committee if he would have any objection to putting in a proviso limiting the amount to $100,000,000 and letting the bill go to conference in that form and consulting with the R. F. C. officials as to the wisdom of the limitation?

I am not convinced of it myself, and I admit that there was no discussion in the Committee on Banking and Currency about providing such a limitation, but since then I have gotten the impression that there ought to be some limitation on the R. F. C. using its money to finance railroads.

While I am on my feet, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to say that it is not enough to say that there are no further appropriations made for these activities, because, in effect, all the repayments—and there have been over $2,000,000,000 in repayments made to date—are available for this purpose. So the amount available may be very much in excess of the unexpended balances of the R. F. C. to date.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order to have the picture properly before the Senate, it ought to be stated that out of the available funds at the disposal of the R. F. C. the President has already withdrawn $500,000,000 for relief purposes, and he expects to withdraw $500,000,000 more, which will make a total of a billion dollars withdrawn from the available funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, leaving them only about $370,000,000, plus the repayments, which, of course, we cannot figure on to a nicety. So their total lending ability is very considerably diminished by the withdrawals for other purposes.

Mr. COUZENS. What the Senator says about the withdrawals for relief purposes is correct; but no one can contemplate how much of the loans that are still outstanding will be paid, and they run into billions of dollars. I do not want to be arbitrary about the matter, and I therefore ask about inserting a proviso limiting the loans and allowing the measure to go to conference to determine whether or not the limitation is a correct one. I ask that because, frankly, the matter was not discussed in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection, permit me to make a statement. Suppose we provide a maximum of $100,000,000. I think it within the bounds of reason to say that under the present provision the loans which the R. F. C. now has the intention to make, or the guaranties it would now make, in all likelihood would not exceed $10,000,000. If we raise the limit to 10 times as much as the R. F. C. probably expects to loan, we open the field for all sorts of requests and pressure to make loans up to the limit of the amount fixed in the bill. There is the danger, it seems to me, and it opens the door to pressure to be brought on the R. F. C.—not that the members would succumb to it, but they ought not to be embarrassed by it.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator is very optimistic about the amount being $10,000,000, because there have been mentioned the Colorado & Southern and the New York Central and several other railroads which in all probability will come in during the calendar year 1935 and run the requests that even now are in prospect much in excess of $100,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the R. F. C. already has authority to make loans like that to the railroads—the New York Central and these others—and it does not get any additional authority under this section.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; it has additional authority with respect to railroad-equipment trusts, and so on. I think there should be no objection to placing a limitation on the amount and letting the matter go to conference.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, we are rather premature. We are crossing this bridge before we get to it. We are now in the midst of reading the bill. I think we ought to finish that.

Mr. COUZENS. I accept the admonition from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then we will take up the propositions as we get to them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of a statement made by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I rise for the purpose of obtaining information. I understood him to say that from payments made to the R. F. C. the President of the United States has withdrawn $500,000,000 for relief purposes and will withdraw $500,000,000 more, making $1,000,000,000 of Government funds—which it was supposed would be returned to the Treasury by the R. F. C.—which will be applied by the President of the United States to relief for unemployment. I inquire as to the authority for this withdrawal, and also whether this sum will be in addition to the $4,880,000,000 carried in the bill which, as I understand, was under consideration by the House of Representatives yesterday?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not seen the $4,000,000,000 bill as it passed the House, but it is my understanding that it is an additional sum; that the billion dollars—half a billion already withdrawn and the half a billion contemplated to be withdrawn from the funds of the R. F. C.—are not included in the $4,000,000,000 bill that has been passed by the House.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think I can answer the first inquiry as to the authority under which the President makes his withdrawals. It is under the provisions of the last deficiency appropriation bill, which included the $525,000,000 drought relief and the additional funds which the President was given authority to impound for relief purposes.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Colorado whether he understands that we are now to appropriate $4,880,000,000 under the proposed general-relief and public-works program, and also validate or approve the appropriation of $1,000,000,000 taken from this revolving fund in the hands of the R. F. C.?

Mr. ADAMS. There is no occasion for validating the taking of the money, because the authority was given for that. So far as what we propose to do is concerned, the matter is now pending before a committee of this body.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess that when a measure of such importance as this is brought before us so hastily and efforts are made to rush it through the Senate within a few minutes, I am somewhat concerned as to its provisions and desirous of some explanations. Few members of the Senate are familiar with its terms and have had no opportunity to study its provisions.

I had supposed that we were to be called upon to pass a bill which merely continued the life of the R. F. C. for 2 years more. I am sure that those who have had any contact with the R. F. C., and who know those who have directed its operations, have experienced a feeling of security and have rested in the belief that the interests of the Government were being protected. We all know Mr. Jesse Jones and the great work which he has done in connection with the R. F. C. We have absolute confidence in him and have a high regard for his associates on the Board. However, I am interested in knowing how much we are appropriating, what obligations the Government assumes, what the guaranties are, what authority is conferred upon the Board, and how much may be invested under the authority given to the purchase of securities for railroads or trust companies or any private or corporate business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I said a while ago, there is not an additional dollar made available to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It must operate after the passage of this act on the revolving fund it already has available, less the billion dollars which has been and will be withdrawn for relief purposes. So this bill does not in any way increase the amount of credit that can be extended in the aggregate by the R. F. C. to all those who may borrow money from it. We are not increasing, in the aggregate, the available capacity of the R. F. C. to make commitments to the railroads or any other enterprises in this country. Out of the funds available they must make all these loans. Every time they might guarantee, say, a million dollars on any obligation of a railroad that needed to be refinanced or any obligation which might be turned over or assumed by one railroad that might take a part of some other railroad which was being split up among a member, that amount would be deducted from the total available funds of the R. F. C. as if they had made a loan; and it all must be done with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Utah that this bill was introduced last Friday and was printed on that day? It went to the Banking and Currency Committee. That committee had its regular meeting on Tuesday, and took it up in regular order. We had hearings on it Tuesday and Wednesday; Wednesday afternoon I reported it to the Senate, and the written report has been here ever since. Every opportunity has been given to Senators to read the bill and understand its provisions. It is not complicated at all; in fact, it is a very simple bill. The main thing is to extend the functions of the R. F. C. for 2 years.

It is said that the word "guarantee", as inserted in this measure, is new legislation, but, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has explained, that means simply saving another step in conducting negotiations and entering into contracts, by avoiding having to go to the Treasury, and all that sort of thing. The guaranty is charged up as if a loan had actually been made at the time. So the extension of the authority and powers here are very limited, and there is no new money called for by the bill.

I think it is a very simple proposal all the way through, and I had not contemplated any great difficulty about it in anyone's mind or any extended discussion. The printed report is here, and if any questions are desired to be asked, they will gladly be answered. The committee devoted 2 days to the consideration of the bill and hearing the representatives of the R. F. C. and others who were present and explained it.

Mr. BARKLEY. In addition to that, I will say that the hundred million dollars, which is the maximum that might be loaned to mortgage-loan companies to unfreeze the real-estate-mortgage situation, has all got to come out of the total amount heretofore made available to the R. F. C. They are not given any additional funds for that purpose. We are increasing here their capacity to make loans of funds to insurance companies from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000. They have already loaned $36,000,000. The additional amount that is earmarked for the insurance companies must likewise come out of the original funds available. So it seems to me, as it seemed to the committee, that every safeguard against any increase in the aggregate amount of money that might be loaned or might be loanable by the R. F. C. has been provided for in this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the statements made by the Senator from Kentucky and the chairman of the committee, of course, give assurance to those of us who have heard them as to the provisions of the bill and as to the obligations which the Government assumes. The members of the committee which held 2 days' hearings and listened to Mr. Jones and others may have a very complete, and doubtless do have a very complete, knowledge of the terms of the bill and the obligations assumed by the United States; but only a few Members of the Senate are members of the Banking and Currency Committee; and, moreover, while the committee was conducting hearings upon this bill, other Senate committees, among them the Committees on Finance, Judiciary, and Interstate Commerce, have been holding hearings on important measures. If one of these committees to which I have just referred had offered a bill 2 or 3 or 4 days ago, certainly the Senator from Florida would not be chided because he had not had an opportunity to read the bill or the report accompanying it. So he must not chide some of us who have not read the report and are not familiar with the bill, because we have not had an opportunity, owing to the pressure of other work upon committees.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not mean to chide anyone. I was simply explaining that it was not a complicated measure and we are not attempting to hurry it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, although the Senator from Utah is not a member of the committee, his mind is so keen and his perception is so accurate that even with our halting explanation he can thoroughly understand this bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the bottom of page 5, as follows:

SEC. 4. Section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is further amended by striking out all of the third sentence of the third paragraph thereof through the first colon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Within the foregoing limitations of this section, the Corporation, notwithstanding any limitation of law as to maturity, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, including approval of the price to be paid, may, to aid in the financing, reorganization, consolidation, maintenance, or construction thereof, purchase for itself, or for account of a railroad obligated thereon, the obligations of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, including equipment trust certificates, or guarantee the payment of the principal of, and/or interest on, such obligations, including equipment trust certificates, or, when, in the opinion of the Corporation, funds are not available on reasonable terms through private channels, make loans, upon full and adequate security, to such railroads or to receivers or trustees thereof for the purposes aforesaid: Provided, That in the case of loans to or the purchase or guarantee of obligations, including equipment trust certificates, of railroads not in receivership or trusteeship, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, in connection with its approval thereof, also certify that such railroad, on the basis of present and prospective earnings, may reasonably be expected to meet its fixed charges, without a reduction thereof through judicial reorganization, except that such certificate shall not be required in case of such loans made for the maintenance of, or purchase of equipment for, such railroads: And provided further, That for the purpose of determining the general funds of the Corporation available for further loans or commitments, such guaranties shall, to the extent of the principal amount of the obligations guaranteed, be interpreted as loans or commitments for loans."

SEC. 4a. Section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is further amended by striking out at the end of the third paragraph thereof the colon and the proviso, "Provided further, That the Corporation may make said loans to trustees of railroads which proceed to reorganize under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act of March 3, 1933", and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

SEC. 5. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is further amended by inserting after section 5b thereof the following new section:

The first amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 6, line 3, after the word "may" and the comma, to strike out "upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury"; in line 18, after the word "institutions" and the period to insert "The total face amount of loans outstanding, nonassessable stock subscribed for, and capital notes and debentures purchased and held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under this section shall not exceed at any one time $100,000,000"; and in line 24, after the word "may" and the comma, to strike out "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and"; so as to make the section read:

"'SEC. 5c. To assist in the reestablishment of a normal mortgage market, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may, with the approval of the President, subscribe for or make loans upon the nonassessable stock of any class of any mortgage loan company, trust company, savings-and-loan association, or other similar financial institution, now or hereafter incorporated under the laws of the United States, or of any State, or of the District of Columbia, the principal business of which institution is that of making loans upon mortgages, deeds of trust, or other instruments conveying or constituting a lien upon real estate or any interest therein. In any case in which, under the laws of its incorporation, such financial institution is not permitted to issue nonassessable stock, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized, for the purposes of this section, to purchase the legally issued capital notes or debentures of such financial institutions. The total face amount of loans outstanding, nonassessable stock subscribed for, and capital notes and debentures purchased and held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under this section, shall not exceed at any one time $100,000,000. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe (which regulations shall include at least 60 days' notice of any proposed sale to the issuer or maker), sell, at public or private sale, the whole or any part of the stock, capital notes, or debentures acquired by the Corporation pursuant to this section, and the preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures acquired pursuant to any other provision of law.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 6, on page 8, as follows:

SEC. 6. Section 5e (a) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is amended (1) by inserting in the first sentence thereof after the words "the assets" and before the words "of any bank" the following: ", or any portion thereof,"; (2) by inserting in the second sentence thereof after the words "such assets" and before the words "held for the benefit" the following: ", or any portion thereof,".

SEC. 7. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, Commodity Credit Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware as an agency of the United States pursuant to the Executive order of the President of October 16, 1933, shall continue, until April 1, 1937, or such earlier date as may be fixed by the President by Executive order, to be an agency of the United States. During the continuance of such agency the Secretary of Agriculture and the Governor of Farm Credit Administration are authorized and directed to continue, for the use and benefit of the United States, the present investment in the capital stock of Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Corporation is hereby authorized to use all its assets, including capital and net earnings therefrom, and all moneys which have been or may hereafter be allocated to or borrowed by it, in the exercise of its functions as such agency, including the making of loans on agricultural commodities.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 14, to strike out "$50,000,000" and insert "$60,000,000", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. Section 1 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to subscribe for preferred stock and purchase the capital notes of insurance companies, and for other purposes", approved June 10, 1933, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14, sec. 605e), is amended by striking from the last sentence thereof "$50,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$60,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of line 14, on page 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington, D. C., banking corporations organized under the laws of the District of Columbia as agencies of the United States, pursuant to Executive orders of the President, shall continue, until June 16, 1937, or such earlier date as may be fixed by the President by Executive order, to be agencies of the United States, and in addition to existing charter powers, and without limitation as to the total amount of obligations thereto of any borrower, endorser, acceptor, obligor, or guarantor at any time outstanding, said banking corporations are hereby authorized and empowered to discount notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt for the purpose of aiding in the financing and facilitating exports and imports and the exchange of commodities between the United States and any of its Territories and insular possessions and any foreign country or the agencies or nationals thereof, and, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to borrow money and rediscount notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt for the purposes aforesaid. During the continuance of such agencies, the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce are authorized and directed to continue, for the use and benefit of the United States, the present investment in the capital stock of said banking corporations.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 14, to strike out the following section:

SEC. 10. No obligations, contingent or absolute, shall be incurred for the expenditure or other disposition of funds heretofore, hereby, or hereafter appropriated, or otherwise obtained for the carrying out of functions of Reconstruction Finance Corporation unless within estimates of such obligations and expenditures approved by the Director of the Budget; and, to the extent that the Secretary of the Treasury may consider practicable and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, there shall be maintained on the books of the Treasury Department such accounts as may be necessary to give full force and effect to this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the reading of the bill and action on the committee amendments. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to offer two or three amendments which I think will provide a little better arrangement for the bill.

On page 4, line 4, after "Sec. 4", I move to insert in parentheses the letter "(a)."

Mr. BARKLEY. On page 5, line 14, there is section 4 (a).

Mr. FLETCHER. I propose to move to change that to "Sec. 4 (b)." The amendment now offered is, on page 4, line 4, after "Sec. 4", insert "(a)." It is an unimportant change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 5, line 13, I move to change the period to a colon. That does not change the substance of the language or intent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that would be proper if he proposes to have in line 14 a new paragraph which appears as "Sec. 4 (a)"?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I was going to move, on page 5, line 14, to strike out "section 4 (a)" and insert "(b)."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the colon is necessary after line 13, because in the original act there is some language that has been omitted in this bill and that was overlooked.

Mr. FLETCHER. And I am asking, instead of having it read "section 4 (a)", to insert "(b)", which will connect it up with the other paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish also, Mr. President, to amend the title. It is very long and cumbersome as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the title will come after the passage of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; I will do it later. Those are all the suggestions I have to make at this time.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 10. (a) The first sentence of section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is amended by adding after the words "fishing industry" the words "and any business operating ferryboats or other craft solely on inland tidal waters."

(b) The second paragraph of section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is amended by striking out "1935" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1937."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in reference to those amendments, I think the last one is already covered in extending the functions of the Corporation for 2 years, but I have no objection to the amendment. It is probably just as well to make that change. The first part of the amendment refers to loans to business of operating ferryboats, and that sort of thing; and, while I have no particular objection to it, it is a matter entirely within the discretion of the R. F. C. whether they will make loans on business of that kind or not; and, of course, security will have to be given as the bill provides. I do not particularly object to the amendment.

Mr. KING. It is not intended, is it, that this is to be mandatory but merely within the sound discretion of the R. F. C., and loans are to be made upon adequate security?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say that the authorities at the R. F. C. have felt that the present law would cover cases of this kind, but their legal counsel have advised them that the terms "industrial" and "commercial" do not cover cases of this kind. They are perfectly willing to have them included, and they think it was intended to cover them under the old law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Have they made any such loans under the old law?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; they have not made any such loans, because their counsel said that the terms of the law did not include boat companies operating on inland tidal waters. They are perfectly willing to have this particular amendment considered, and are favorable to it, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, at the end of the bill, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 11. The second sentence of the first paragraph of section 5(d) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is amended by striking out "adequately secured" and inserting in lieu thereof "so secured as to reasonably assure repayment of the loans."

Mr. LONERGAN. I may say that this amendment meets with the approval of the directors of the R. F. C. and the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like an explanation as to how the Senator from Connecticut proposes to change the authority of the R. F. C. as between the language now in the act and the language he proposes to use.

Mr. LONERGAN. My amendment would give discretionary power to the directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as to whether the security was such as to reasonably assure repayment of the loan.

Mr. COUZENS. What is the difference between that and "adequate security"?

Mr. LONERGAN. I will give the Senator from Michigan an illustration. Take a manufacturer who has exhausted all his resources, whose plant has been closed 2 or 3 years. He is now in position to get orders to keep his plant in operation for 6 or 8 months. He cannot borrow money at the bank with which he and his concern may have been associated for 40 or 50 or even 75 or 100 years. The only security the manufacturer can offer is a mortgage on the plant. That would have to be regarded as "reasonable security" as against "adequate security", because in these times, if conditions are to continue as they are, the average manufacturing plant sold under the hammer probably would sell for 25 cents on the dollar. The only way to encourage industry is to liberalize the law and give discretionary authority to the officers of the R. F. C. to exercise their judgment and say what is reasonable and what is adequate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. LONERGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The object is, as I understand, to authorize them to accept less than adequate security.

Mr. LONERGAN. Yes; to let them exercise their discretion. The moral risk is an important element.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield so that I may ask him a question?

Mr. LONERGAN. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. Is there any distinction between "adequate security" and the possible means of payment? In other words, I understand if the Senator's amendment should be agreed to, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would have to use judgment in the matter to determine whether the loan is going to be made out of the profits of the business or out of the security which is for the moment put up.

Mr. LONERGAN. That is correct.

Mr. COUZENS. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut assumes that the prescience of the directors of the R. F. C. will enable them to tell whether the business will be run at a profit or otherwise?

Mr. LONERGAN. That is perhaps true. I think we should take a more liberal view of the situation. We have a large number of manufacturers in the country, particularly in the East, who are unable to borrow money at local banks. If they can get money elsewhere, they can operate their factories, and they ought to be helped.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator is not explaining anything that we do not already know. The point I want to make is that the chairman of the committee and, I understand, the Chairman of the R. F. C., have stated that there is no difference between the language the Senator from Connecticut proposes to use and the language now in the law. I want the Senate to understand there is a clear and distinct difference between the language now in the law and the language proposed by the Senator from Connecticut. I am not interposing any particular objection to the amendment, but I do not want the amendment agreed to without a clear understanding of the distinction between what the law now provides and what it will provide if the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut shall be agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I heartily favor the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. I favor it because I think it will have a tendency to make the R. F. C. liberalize its present loan policy as it relates to industry. Under the regulations which have been sent out to the various district offices of the country under existing law, any industry that could obtain a loan from the R. F. C. could obtain it through regular banking channels.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order even to apply to the R. F. C. they have to state they are unable to get it through regular channels.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; I understand perhaps that might have been provided in the regulations, but, as a matter of fact, the last Congress authorized the R. F. C. to loan to industries something like $300,000,000 in order to enable them to rehabilitate themselves and to employ men, to give more employment; but I understand that less than $40,000,000 of that fund has been authorized to be loaned or is covered by applications filed with the R. F. C. The purpose and intent of Congress in making the loans more liberal and more easily obtainable has been absolutely defeated by restrictions thrown about it by the district offices of the R. F. C. throughout the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. About $36,000,000 has been loaned. It is not altogether the fault of the R. F. C. that more money has not been loaned. It developed in the hearings the other day that only about 1,400 applications have been made for loans out of the $300,000,000 which we authorized them to loan. Most of those applications have been passed upon. The fault has not been entirely with the R. F. C. We evidently overestimated the amount of money that would be applied for when we fixed $300,000,000 as the amount available. If the Senator will get the testimony taken a day or two ago as to the reason for the small amount of loans as compared to what we thought would be required, I think he will be reasonably satisfied it has not been really the fault of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. RUSSELL. When we consider the machinery that is involved in the making of loans, I am amazed that as many as 1,400 applications were filed. A prospective borrower goes to the regional office of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and confers with those in authority there to ascertain whether or not there is any probability of his obtaining a loan. He is shown the regulations which have been issued and which govern loans of this type. After reading those regulations I am confident that at least 90 percent of them throw up their hands, depart, and never come back, leaving with the thought in mind, "There is no opportunity for me to obtain a loan there." I am amazed to learn that 1,400 have gone ahead and filed applications for loans in the face of the policy and the regulations of the R. F. C.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether, after seeing and reading the regulations, they abandoned their desire for a loan. Certainly no one has been brought to my attention who threw up his hands because he became discouraged after reading the regulations. They went as far as they could to get an application on file with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I doubt whether anybody could tell how many were discouraged by reason of the regulations.

There has been criticism of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation because, out of the $300,000,000 we made available, only about $36,000,000 has been loaned. That looked like an infinitesimal sum compared to what we authorized them to use, but when we got into the facts we discovered it was not altogether the fault of the R. F. C. It was a combination of circumstances of which they were a part.

Mr. RUSSELL. I agree wholly with the Senator. I think the provision of the act requiring adequate security, with the construction placed on "adequate security" in the regulations issued by the R. F. C., has contributed more than any other factor to the result which is that only $36,000,000 has been really loaned out of $300,000,000 authorized by Congress in response to a wide-spread demand for easier credit for industry to enable more people to be employed in private channels and taken off the public relief rolls.

Mr. BARKLEY. The question of what is really adequate security is a sort of combination of facts and opinion.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. The R. F. C., having in mind the mandatory obligation of Congress to require adequate security, should look forward to the coming of the time when, if they did not require adequate security and great losses were sustained by the Government, we would be more critical probably of the losses sustained by the Treasury because of their failure to require adequate security than we now are because of the small amount of money loaned by them.

On the amendment pending I think it is fair to state while there may be no great amount of difference technically between the description of the security as to whether it is adequate or reasonably likely to produce repayment, yet it is not the same. It does liberalize the provision and does require a less strict interpretation of what is adequate security if the amendment shall be adopted. I have no objection to the amendment if it will liberalize or open up or unfreeze any funds available anywhere for legitimate industry that is now on the ragged edge and which, if humored along, may be able to survive.

I have no doubt under the interpretation of the amendment that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would go as far as possible to conserve the credit of the Government and at the same time give a chance for life to a considerable number of industries that may need this long credit.

Mr. RUSSELL. When we are spending sums absolutely staggering in amount for necessary relief for people who are unable to find employment, it is far better that the Government run some slight hazard or risk of losing some part of the $300,000,000 made available last year by the Congress for loans to industry in the effort to see if people cannot be reemployed in legitimate business rather than through made work at an enormous cost to the Federal Treasury when there is absolutely no hope on earth of it being repaid.

We know there is no possibility of the repayment of the funds paid out for relief except by the taxpayer who contributes to retire the bonds issued to obtain the money. When we loan money to private business to enable it to carry on and reemploy people, we at least stand some chance of getting the money back.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky will recall that when the late Governor Black was before our committee when this bill was being considered by the committee, I asked the specific question if the requirements for direct loans to industry had not been greatly exaggerated. He made a rather conservative reply to the inquiry, admitting that he thought the necessity for such loans had been somewhat exaggerated, but he still ventured to think that there was considerable need for such loans. I was firmly convinced that the need for such loans had been greatly exaggerated, and the history of these transactions confirms my thought at that time.

I have no objection to the proposed amendment. It is just a different term meaning the same thing. No loan is reasonably safe that is not adequate, and no loan should be made without adequate security. If the interest of the taxpayer, which is quite as great as that of the people who apply for the loans, is to be considered at all, adequate security ought to be required for these loans.

There are three processes open to any industry desiring to borrow money. First, they may apply to the individual banks in their own communities, or anywhere else in the country. Failing to secure a loan there, they may apply directly to the regional reserve banks of their own district or any other district; and I have known industries which, failing to get accommodations in their own regional district, have secured accommodations in other regional districts, and finally, failing to get loans in the regular banking channels, have applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Time and time again this has occurred.

Objection has been made that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has not been sufficiently liberal with the taxpayers' money upon these applications. The facts in each case have been stated by the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to those who have thus complained; and in every single, solitary instance the complainants have said that they, had they been Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, would not have complied with the applications.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I wish to say also that there was another inevitable restriction that probably held down loans. It never was the intention of Congress to transfer existing obligations from banks to the Treasury of the United States. Many small industrial concerns desired to borrow money with which to pay debts they already owed to somebody else. It was not the object of Congress to have that done; and at first the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was very tender-footed, and properly so, with respect to making loans to industrial concerns in order that they might just swap obligations.

Then the question arose as to whether loans would be made for what is known ordinarily as capital investment, for building additions to plants or for the mechanization of plants which might result in an increase in output. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation finally liberalized the debt provision of their regulations, I believe, so as to provide that they would permit as much as 20 percent of any loan to be used for the repayment of debts already in existence. Then they have recently liberalized their regulations with respect to capital investment so that now, under certain conditions, they will make loans of money to be put in capital investment or in plant improvement or in mechanization, I believe subject to a restriction that such improvement and modernization shall not materially increase the output of a commodity of which there is already an unsalable surplus in the United States.

I think that restriction is to be commended, because it is of no use to loan Government money to an individual to increase an output for which there is already no market, but the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has liberalized both those restrictions, which at an earlier time were placed on these industrial loans, so that without this amendment they probably would go further in extending the use to which the money might be put than they did at first under the authorization of Congress.

That may have been responsible in the beginning for the inability of some concerns to get money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because they wanted to use a large portion of it to pay some debts they owed to other people, and just shift the credit from private sources to the Government.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate for starting any debate on this amendment, because it is only academic. The extension of authority to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not really necessary, because under House Joint Resolution 117, as introduced, there is a provision on page 6 (a) to guarantee loans to, or payments of, needy individuals; (b) to make grants and/or loans and/or contracts.

Mr. BARKLEY. "And/or."

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; to do either one. There is no limitation in this; so, Mr. President, there is no use in combating these amendments. They are not necessary. They are academic, because the President under House Joint Resolution 117 can take care of everybody in the United States, with or without security.

Mr. BARKLEY. Who is the author of that joint resolution?

Mr. COUZENS. I understand that the President denies the authorship, according to the press; but I understand that the real authors are Mr. Donald Richberg and Mr. Benjamin Cohen.

Mr. BARKLEY. What joint resolution is it?

Mr. COUZENS. It is a joint resolution that was introduced over in the House.

Mr. KING. The $5,000,000,000 measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh! That is the relief bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; and so is this a relief bill; is it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the relief bill was intended for the relief of individuals. I do not see that there is any analogy between that and money loaned to corporations.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Kentucky is always anxious to liberalize, because he knows how good Kentucky whisky liberalizes us; but——

Mr. BARKLEY. Am I to gather that all the liberality of the Senator from Michigan is caused by Kentucky whisky? [Laughter.]

Mr. COUZENS. Whenever I am exceedingly liberal that is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I will order a barrel or two for the Senator.

Mr. COUZENS. I desire to point out, though, that this discussion is academic.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, is it academic? Has that joint resolution become a law?

Mr. COUZENS. No; but we have orders to pass it.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Michigan has?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; I have orders to pass it.

Mr. GLASS. I am not in the Senator's class.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, perhaps all has been said that ought to be said; but I venture the assertion that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has acted wisely and prudently in the interpretation of the authority conferred upon it with respect to industrial loans.

A number of officials of banks are now serving terms in the penitentiaries because they mistakenly believed that certain loans which they made, while the security might not have been all that was desired, might enable industries to continue and that the loans would ultimately be paid. By making such loans they depleted the funds which had been placed in their charge and thus contributed to the failure of banks with which they were connected. Their mistaken judgment ruined banks and brought criminal prosecutions.

I think Congress acted wisely when it said to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that industrial loans should be made upon adequate security.

We are not handling, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not handling, private funds. As the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has just stated, it is handling the taxpayers' money. Where boards are created to act in a fiduciary capacity, to handle the funds of the taxpayers and the funds of the Government, they ought to act with prudence, with care, and with judgment; they should conserve the interests of the people of the United States.

I think the language "adequate security" was proper; and if the construction is placed upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN] that that provision is to be modified so as to permit inadequate security for loans, the Congress may be criticized, and the Government may suffer heavy losses.

With the interpretation which has been placed upon the amendment, I shall feel constrained to vote against it. If it is conceded that the amendment tendered does not alter the meaning of the interpretation to be placed upon the word "adequate", then, of course, there is no necessity for adopting it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, without passing on the merits of this particular matter, I desire to say that it seems to me the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, instead of being criticized, ought to be commended for the manner in which it has administered this particular grant of power to make loans to industry. Within my own knowledge a great many of these applications have been made, not for the purpose of operating an industry, but, as suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, to pay a lot of banks which are already holding the paper of the applying corporations. Of course, the mere shifting of obligations from banks to the Government would not have any effect at all on reviving the operation of a dormant or a somewhat lagging industry.

As I understand, the purpose of this particular legislation was to afford working capital to industries, so as to speed them up, and not to afford them money for capital investment. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been lax at all, it has been lax in insisting on the requirements being met which the Congress put in the act. If there is any fault with the kind of security that has been offered, it has been because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has construed the language "adequate security" to mean that it ought to have security that would be adequate whether offered to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or offered to any other banking institution.

So I think there is no just ground for Congress to enact a law to cuss out the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for not loaning three hundred millions instead of thirty millions.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise to impose upon the Senate for a moment, in which I wish to enlarge upon the views expressed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who has just taken his seat, referring particularly to the original organization which we describe as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I was one of this honorable body when this creation received its birth at the hands of this branch of the legislature. There were very dubious expressions and very serious reflections as to whether the enterprise, being novel, would be successful. There were those who feared that its administration might bring some serious reflection upon the financial institutions of the country, and open a possibility of great dishonor by officials executing the trust.

Today, I am sure it would not be regarded foreign to the present subject before the Senate for us to dwell upon this organization and its work.

When one recalls that there was not a parallel institution in all the world, that there was not a precedent for such authority invested in any governmental financial body of all civilization; when we also, sir, must assume the conditions as they then prevailed; and when one revives to memory, referring to the observations just now expressed before us, the many demands which must have been made, and then recalls that $7,000,000,000—a figure almost impossible for the mind to comprehend, much less for the tongue to describe and define—has been the amount of money disposed of by this great body of administrators, one can feel that this honorable body of legislators pays its respects and its compliments to those who have administered this vast sum of money in behalf of industry and that source of commercial need whose perils we have often heard described in this body.

Sir, when we recall the work of the honorable chairman of this Corporation, Jesse H. Jones, and when we recall with great pride that here in the United States of America was an institution without precedent, administered through the intelligence of its officials, in which the honor was so great and so thoroughly and wholly kept and maintained that in the fury of the late political campaign not one voice was heard anywhere reflecting on the integrity of the membership, the honor of the discharge of its duty, or in anywise subjecting it to the slightest reflection so frequently heard and so constantly indulged in in all political campaigns as to those in whom has been vested the administration of great sums of money, we extend our compliments; we send forth our praise. We recall, sir, in the Odyssey of Homer, the expression of Penelope, when, being inquired of concerning Ulysses, she replied:

Ulysses is done and has gone. There is none left in Ithaca to bend his bow.

The work of this Corporation has been done. I venture to say few men could have been found in all America who could have done it so well. None could have done it better. To Chairman Jones and his associates of the Corporation, we delight, sir, to extend our praise, and, while we are in the consideration of this measure, to express that his work, with that of his associates, has been an honor to his country; and for his services we express the pride of his countrymen.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN] has been acted on yet?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it has not. I ask that it be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 11. The second sentence of the first paragraph of section 5 (d) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is amended by striking out "adequately secured" and inserting in lieu thereof "so secured as to reasonably assure repayment of the loans."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut spoke to me about the amendment, and it seemed to me on first impression that it was almost a case of Tweedledum and Tweedledee. That is to say, the whole matter is in the discretion of the R. F. C. They can consider an application offering adequate security practically on all fours with an application offering security which is reasonably safe.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. It does not say that at all. It does not say "reasonable security." It says "so secured as to reasonably assure repayment."

Mr. FLETCHER. "To reasonably secure repayment", which is the same thing as reasonably safe, it seems to me.

I realize some of the difficulties of applying a technical construction. The use of the words "adequate security" gives the Board a chance to reject applications on technical grounds, and that was not the intention of Congress. We do not need to be technical about this thing. There was a considerable demand all over the country, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] said, for loans for the benefit of industries, to start them up, to start them going, to give people employment. We had in mind more particularly—at least I did—the smaller industries. Applications have been made, however, by very large industries, with plants running into many millions of dollars. The Corporation is limited by the strict construction of the language of the law, "adequate security", and it has not been making many loans.

The Congress also authorized these loans to be made by the Federal Reserve banks, which extended their power to make loans for the benefit of industry. I thought at the time the banks were not going to make many loans, and they have not. As a matter of fact, the banks are extremely cautious, and I do not blame them, and I am not criticizing them about that; but they are taking scarcely any chances at all on any loan which they make. So the people have not been able to qualify, to show themselves eligible for loans from the banks. It was for that reason, at the time we passed the act extending the authority of the Federal Reserve banks to make loans for the benefit of industry that I was desirous that we should extend that authority to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because I was satisfied the banks were not going to accommodate many people, and they have not done so. Therefore, we provided in the law that where the applicants could not secure accommodations from the local banks or the Federal Reserve banks under that statute, they could apply to the R. F. C.

Some applications have been made, but we have not by any means reached the amount of money intended to be used in that connection—$300,000,000. One thousand four hundred applications have been made, and probably less than 100 of them have been granted. Probably not over 10 percent of the amount of money that was provided for that purpose has been used by the R. F. C. The R. F. C. stands, of course, upon the law that there must always be adequate security. There must be a showing of that sort, and a showing that the applicant has been unable to obtain a loan from the Federal Reserve bank or from his local bank, and that he has nowhere else to go except to the R. F. C.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think the R. F. C. should make loans or should have made loans upon inadequate security?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I do not say that at all, but upon security which is reasonably certain to be sufficient to bring about the repayment of the debt. That is a matter for the R. F. C. to pass upon. It seems to me that it relieves an applicant of any technical requirement about adequate security, and at the same time it gives the R. F. C. discretion to pass upon the question of whether there is reasonable security that the debt will be paid when secured in the manner suggested.

For that reason I am not disposed to quarrel with the amendment. I think it liberalizes the provision of the present law somewhat and relieves it of a technicality, and at the same time it does not jeopardize the interests of the Government, because the R. F. C. still has the power to say whether or not the security offered is satisfactory to it as reasonably certain to take care of the debt.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a technical suggestion. There is a split infinitive in the amendment. That sentence should be corrected. The words "to" and "reasonably" ought to be transposed. I make that suggestion.

Mr. LONERGAN. I accept that modification of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, at the end of line 21, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That not more than $100,000,000 may be used for this purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. I cannot quite follow my good friend, the able Senator from Michigan, in that connection. I am afraid that he puts some handicap on the R. F. C. and jeopardizes some transactions that might reasonably and very properly take place. I think we had better leave that matter as it is. The R. F. C. has certain funds set aside for the purpose in mind. The Senator from Kentucky, myself, and others have already discussed that. I think the Senator's amendment would unnecessarily cripple and handicap the Corporation in the matter of handling these kinds of loans or guaranties. It would be very advantageous to the public and to everyone concerned if the R. F. C. were allowed a rather free hand in that connection. The amendment now offered is to limit loans to the railroads, as I understand.

Mr. COUZENS. To limit to $100,000,000 the additional authority to be given to the R. F. C. to make railroad loans.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does that mean $100,000,000 in addition to loans already made and commitments already made?

Mr. COUZENS. In addition to loans already made and commitments already made.

Mr. FLETCHER. It would be in addition to that?

Mr. COUZENS. Not any more than that; yes. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment, Mr. President?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. As I said before, I have not consulted the R. F. C., or Mr. Jones. I have great respect for the administration of the R. F. C. However, I pointed out in committee that there is no mention in this bill of Mr. Jones' name; there is no assurance that the same management will continue indefinitely; and I personally resent Congress adopting a policy of drafting legislation for one individual. We cannot determine who will administer these functions in the future. Therefore, Congress should exercise all possible care in passing legislation so that anybody may administer it, and not have to rely upon the great abilities of Mr. Jones or any other individual.

This amendment limits to $100,000,000 the loans the R. F. C. may make in excess of what it has already made or is committed to make for railroad purposes. In view of what the Senator from Kentucky says about the withdrawals for relief, and the limited amount left for other purposes—industry, mortgages, banks, insurance companies, or what not—it seems to me that an argument against the proposed limitation is simply in the interest of the railroads alone.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the amendment specify that it is in addition to loans and commitments already made?

Mr. COUZENS. I have put it down at the end of section 4 (a), which the Senator from Florida has amended now, so that it is to be 4 (b); and that is the section which extends the authority of the R. F. C. to guarantee railroad loans to receivers, to purchase railroad equipment trust certificates, and to purchase bonds, which is new authority. They have not heretofore had the authority to do this. Their authority has been restricted to making loans direct to railroad companies. This is an extension of authority, and for that extension of authority I want to limit them to $100,000,000.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. Does the amendment impose a limitation only on the exercise of the new authority?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. BULKLEY. Then, of course, it would be in addition to the commitments already made.

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly. That is why I put it in at the end of this paragraph, because it is my intention wholly to limit the amount of money to be used for the additional purposes specified in this bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. I hope the chairman will accept some limitation, because any demands made under this new authority will necessarily be a subtraction from funds available for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the new language set forth in the bill authorizes the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or on its account, of obligations of railroads engaged in interstate commerce. It authorizes the guaranty of obligations already in existence, in order to save two financial transactions. It authorizes the Corporation to make loans upon full and adequate security to such railroads, or to the receivers or trustees thereof, for the purpose aforesaid. Then, on page 5, it authorizes the R. F. C. to make commitments. So there are four distinct things they are empowered to do under that section.

I think it is unfortunate that this discussion should revolve around the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We are all unanimous in our high estimation of the wonderful work which has been done by the entire board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, presided over by Mr. Jones as its Chairman. In that praise and encomium we might include the general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and many of the other subordinates, all the way down the line, who have devoted themselves assiduously to the protection of the Government and of the Corporation in making loans.

I realize how easy it is to rise on the floor of the Senate and cast aspersions upon railroads and the loans that have been made to railroads, both by banks and by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if someone desires to find fault with them. However, we cannot lose sight of the fact that one of the most serious problems that confronts the United States and the people and our Government today is what we are going to do with respect to the railroads. What is going to happen to them? Is a situation going to arise or to be precipitated which will require that for its own protection and for the protection of transportation and the people the Government of the United States must take over the railroads and operate them? We cannot lose sight of the fact that many railroads probably never ought to have been constructed; but they have been constructed, and towns have been built around them, and they are serving a useful purpose.

I do not know whether or not the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would ever loan or obligate itself to guarantee loans of as much as $100,000,000 under this new authority.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in just a moment. I understand that the Corporation now has out about $400,000,000, if I am not mistaken, in these loans to railroads. Of course, it is a revolving fund like all the rest of the Corporation's moneys; but, in all likelihood, a smaller proportion of railroad loans have been repaid than loans generally to industry, banks, and other borrowers. But with $400,000,000 already out, and with the railroad situation as it is, not knowing how much may be needed or how little may be needed, I think, in view of the history of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its conservative protection of the interest of the Government, we can well leave to its discretion the amount which it would loan under this section, in view of the limitations as to the loan of money in the aggregate to all borrowers to whom it might make loans.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator will recall that I predicated my offer of this amendment on the theory and on the statement that if it would embarrass the operation of the R. F. C. in connection with railroad loans I would be perfectly willing to have the Senate recede, and, of course, the bill has got to go to conference.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is difficult for Members of the Senate or even members of the Banking and Currency Committee, which tries to go reasonably into these matters, to answer on the floor a specific question as to whether a limitation would embarrass the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Frankly, I do not know whether it would or not. I do not believe anybody on the floor knows. The amendment was not brought up in the committee, and the question was not discussed. We have no statement upon which to base the conclusion that it would be embarrassing and I am willing to leave it to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. Will not the Senator let the amendment go in so that it may go to conference, and if the R. F. C. satisfies the conferees that the limitation should not be there, I think that the Senate, upon such a statement of fact, would recede from the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the Senate might not be able to do so, because this bill has not as yet passed the House, and if we put this limitation in and it goes to the House and is agreed to, then there is nothing in conference about it and we could not change it. I think if the idea is to put it in for the purpose of merely looking into it, with a view to striking it out if it is not a wise amendment, it ought to be put in somewhere else and not on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. COUZENS. I still insist that we are using the taxpayers' money notwithstanding the constant reiteration that they are not asking for an additional appropriation, and whatever money is lost through the administration of the R. F. C. comes out of the taxpayers. So far as the administration up to date is concerned, I think they have done a pretty good job, with the possible exception of the so-called "Dawes loan", which my friend from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] did not mention when he eulogized the R. F. C. Nevertheless, on the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, there is a limited amount of money still available, but that limit is not known because there are constant repayments being made; and I am advised, on what I believe to be good authority, that the principal amounts loaned by the R. F. C. will be eventually returned; that is, in large part.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to make the figure in his amendment three hundred and fifty million instead of one hundred million?

Mr. COUZENS. That is all they have left, according to the statement of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator from Michigan proved that I was mistaken by calling attention to the fact that they have these repayments which he indicates will amount to several billion dollars.

Mr. FLETCHER. Loans and commitments now amount to some $400,000,000, and there are refunding and refinancing and other operations coming up by reason of which they might need as much as $750,000,000 for the railroads. I do not know about that.

Mr. COUZENS. The statement of the Senator that we do not know but that the requirements may go as high as $750,000,000 is the soundest argument which has yet been made in favor of the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I refer, of course, to the total at any one time.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes. Therefore, it seems to me that, as the $100,000,000 which I suggest is merely a guess, and as the bill has not passed the House, if it is demonstrated that that is not a proper amount or would handicap the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the matter can be straightened out either in the House or in conference. However, I should like the Senate to go on record as setting a limitation upon how much of this money that is left may be used for the railroads; otherwise, obviously, if all their reserve funds are called upon by some particular class which is authorized to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the money will have to be denied other classes of borrowers.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator has not answered whether he would be willing to make the figure $350,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; I am willing to make it $350,000,000, with the idea that the matter will be considered in conference as to whether it is too much or too little. I will modify my amendment as the Senator from Florida has suggested.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator also that it would be better to insert the amendment on page 5, line 13, instead of at the end of the section, where he proposes to insert it. So I suggest at that point to strike out the period after the word "loans" and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the total amount of loans and commitments to railroads, receivers, and trustees, and purchases and guaranties of obligations of railroads, under the paragraph, as amended, shall not exceed at any one time $350,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. I accept that amendment as read by the Senator from Florida as a substitute for mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, in view of the adoption of the amendment recently offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN], I should like to move to amend section 14 of the act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes, and so forth, so as to incorporate there the words suggested by him instead of the words "adequate security" and let both of them go to conference. Therefore, I offer the following amendment:

At the end of the bill insert the following new section:

SEC. 12. Section 14 of the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes", approved June 19, 1934 (Public, No. 417, 73d Cong.), is amended to read as follows:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, so secured as to reasonably assure repayment of the loans, to recognized and established corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the business of mining, milling, and smelting ores."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. BARKLEY. Wait a minute, Mr. President. I do not understand this method of amending the bill in important particulars "without objection." We might want to see what it is about. This amendment has not been discussed or offered heretofore, has it, I will ask the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. It was referred to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has not yet been the policy of Congress to authorize loans to individuals for any purpose under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. The matter was brought up day before yesterday in the committee in connection with the testimony of the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and it was felt that it was not wise to make loans to individuals, because it is so easy to incorporate in order to comply with that piece of wise precaution, I think. I do not recall that we have heretofore authorized loans to individuals. If I am mistaken about that, the Senator will correct me.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no question about that. All we have ever done along that line in connection with loans from the R. F. C. has been through loans to mortgage companies. That is provided for now. We have not been making loans to individuals. I presume the Senator from Nevada has reference to classifying mining as an industry of some kind.

Mr. PITTMAN. Section 14, as I recall, of the act to which I have referred specifically provides for the loaning of money to corporations and associations engaged in the mining industry. It was offered and passed through Congress at the last session for the express purpose of meeting the various objections that were raised by one of the Senators here, the Senator from Washington, in regard to certain other matters.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator wants to change that section now so as to substitute for the words "adequate security" the language he has offered?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is what I desire.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am sorry these matters were not presented to the committee. As I have said, we had this bill under consideration since last Friday. We held sessions for 2 days on it and none of these amendments were offered to us. This amendment is something new.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "individuals."

Mr. PITTMAN. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment. There being no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the title be amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GLASS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3410) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

CARTER GLASS,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
FREDERICK HALE,
C. A. WOODRUM,
JOHN J. BOYLAN,
RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GLASS. I may state that the House receded on all the amendments made to the bill by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SURVEY OF LAND AND WATER POLICIES AND PROJECTS

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably the resolution (S. Res. 58) submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] on the 21st instant, and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, which reported it back with various amendments, and it was then referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The latter committee now reports it back favorably without further amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation were, on page 1, line 2, to strike out "three" and insert "two"; in line 4, to strike out "and three" and insert "two"; and in line 5, after the word "reclamation", to insert "and two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a special committee of 7 Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, 2 of whom shall be members of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, 2 of whom shall be members of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, and 2 of whom shall be members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, is authorized and directed to make a survey and study of all land and water policies and projects of the several executive agencies and establishments of the Government and to report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its survey, together with its recommendation for necessary legislation in connection therewith.

The committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized to attend the National Grazing Conference to be held under the auspices of the Department of the Interior at Denver, Colo., February 11, 1935.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, including expenditures for travel, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, January 28, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 25, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we wait at the altar of Him whose name is above every name, the name at the sound of which every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess as Lord, to the glory and honor of God. By Him we are taught that it is better to give than to receive and that blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. Do Thou inspire the very soul of the Republic to let a burst of radiance come through the dim, open doors of a remembered happiness. Let disappointment and privation, sickness and wounded affection work in us all a blessed and a spiritual enrichment. May we understand that through sorrow we find joy, through poverty we inherit true riches, and through humiliation we ascend to the seat of honor. Almighty God, increase our scope of thought and the magnitude of those sources by which we order our conduct. In the name of our Savior.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

House Resolution 71

Resolved, That for the purposes of obtaining information necessary as a basis for legislation the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Seventy-fourth Congress is authorized, as a committee, by subcommittee or otherwise, to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 404 of the Seventy-third Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs by House Resolution 404 of the Seventy-third Congress. The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $10,000 under House Resolution 444, Seventy-third Congress, is hereby continued for such purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman a question? How much longer does the gentleman think it will be necessary to continue this investigation?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Simply long enough for the drafting of the report.

Mr. SNELL. The investigation itself, then, is practically completed?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; and we have some $4,000 left of the appropriation.

Mr. SNELL. That is a good record.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask a question or two. How much is it contemplated will be spent out of this balance of $4,000 that remains now?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. We are trying to save as much as $2,500 out of the $10,000, if possible.

Mr. BLANTON. Will it cost $1,500 to make this report?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No; I think not; but there are some expenses already incurred that will have to be met. I could not tell the gentleman the exact amount.

Mr. BLANTON. There is not going to be any personnel employed?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. We have some personnel employed now.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean, any further personnel?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No; but there are some expenses already incurred.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it is simply a matter of using whatever money is necessary out of this $4,000 to prepare and present this report?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; and some little incidental expense already incurred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SECOND LIBERTY BOND ACT

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4304) to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and for other purposes; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that there may be 1 hour of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and one-half by myself.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the request of the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is entirely agreeable to this side.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have asked the chairman of the committee for 5 minutes of time and I hope he has taken that into consideration in arriving at the amount of time to be used in general debate.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That will be arranged in a way agreeable to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the gentleman some questions.

Will the measure we are going to consider now, with 1 hour of general debate, authorize the issuance of $4,000,000,000 of bonds additional to those in existence now?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It authorizes the issuance of $25,000,000,000 of bonds, but this is in lieu of the existing authorization of $28,000,000,000. This supplants the present authorization.

Mr. BLANTON. But it will authorize the issuance and sale of $4,000,000,000 of bonds that, incidentally, is connected with the legislation we passed yesterday?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; not necessarily. Under this bill there can only be outstanding under the proposed amendment of the Second Liberty Bond Act at any one time $25,000,000,000. There is outstanding now about $13,000,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman this question? Is the income from all of the bonds that are to be issued to be tax exempt?

Mr. DOUGHTON. There has been no change, so far as I am aware, of the law relating to tax-exempt securities.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the income from them all will be exempt from taxation?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The principal purpose of this legislation is the refunding, largely, of the existing bonds, and the bonds which take the place of those retired will have the same provisions as to taxes and tax exemptions as the ones outstanding.

Mr. BLANTON. I presumed that, but I am talking about whatever bonds are necessary to be issued to raise the $4,000,000,000 that we are going to expend for public works. Are those bonds going to provide that the income be tax exempt?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Those bonds, like the other bonds, will have to be issued in accordance with existing law at that time.

Mr. BLANTON. Which provides that the income is exempt from taxation.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The measure that the gentleman mentions, providing for the issuance of $4,000,000,000 of additional bonds, has not yet been enacted into law.

Mr. BLANTON. I should like to know as a matter of information whether it is possible for this Government to sell $4,000,000,000 of bonds without making the income tax exempt.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Under present law?

Mr. BLANTON. I mean, is it possible to have the law require the income to be taxable?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman must not be in too great a hurry. I am entitled to the information I seek, and I intend to get the information.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman can get the information when we go into committee.

Mr. BLANTON. The information I want is from the chairman of the committee. I want to get it now. Is it possible for us to raise $4,000,000,000 without making the income from such bonds tax exempt. If it is, I want to vote to stop the issuance of tax-exempt securities.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I think a good many of us have that purpose in mind.

Mr. BLANTON. But, of course, if that is not possible and we cannot raise the money without it, we will have to do the best we can.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman yesterday voted for a law that would make the issuing of this $4,000,000,000 possible.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; because the President of the United States requested us to do it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Why did he not do it then?

Mr. BLANTON. Because the President requested Congress to pass that bill without amendment, but I raised the question in the committee of taking steps at the first opportune moment to stop the issuance of any further tax-exempt bonds. I am in dead earnest about carrying on a determined fight here to stop tax-exempt securities.

Of course, I realize full well that this $4,000,000,000 must be raised to carry out this public-works project of the President. And if it is a fact that we cannot raise the money on bonds that are not tax exempt, and that the only way to raise it is under the present existing law, and I see that the committee indicates that that situation exists, then there is left nothing else for us to do except to vote for this bill. But before this session of Congress adjourns I am going to do everything that is possible to stop the issuance of tax-exempt securities, and to provide some legal way to tax the income from all tax-exempt securities.

Mr. BOILEAU. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if it is possible to have more time on this very important bill than 1 hour for debate?

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will say that I conferred with the gentleman from Massachusetts, the ranking minority Member, and he agreed that 1 hour was sufficient. There will be debate under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have had requests for about half an hour. I thought that was ample, and it is ample so far as I am concerned on this side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. DOUGHTON was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SUTPHIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 4304, to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act as amended, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the bill under consideration is to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act so as to permit the Government needs and requirements to be more economically financed.

Under the present Liberty Bond Act the amount of bonds that may be outstanding at any one time is limited to $28,000,000,000. This bill, if it becomes a law and supplements that act, makes the amount that may be outstanding at any one time not over $25,000,000,000.

At present there has been issued under existing law, the Second Liberty Bond Act, about $25,000,000,000, and there is about thirteen and one-half billion dollars outstanding. Bonds to the amount of eleven and one-half billion dollars have been retired, and there is no authority for other bonds to be issued in their place.

Under the terms of this bill the $25,000,000,000 of bonds would become a revolving fund; and of the bonds retired, other bonds could be issued in their place.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. When these bonds are retired, how are they financed? The gentleman said eleven and one-half billions were retired. How were they retired? By what means? Were they paid off?

Mr. DOUGHTON. They were retired by redemption, I suppose.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I understand that the outstanding indebtedness of the Government now is about $27,000,000,000.

Mr. DOUGHTON. About $28,000,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is what I am getting at. They have not really been paid off. They have been refinanced by other forms of Government obligations.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, and Treasury bills.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is not this the situation, that certain bonds have been paid and, one might say, canceled by the Treasury, and others have been refunded. Is not that what the gentleman from Colorado has in mind—the refunding process?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. They have been refunded, but not paid out.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is correct. Many have been retired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Some have been retired and others have been refunded. Under existing law we have issued approximately twenty-five and one-half of the twenty-eight billions authorized, leaving approximately two and one-half billions which still may be issued. Yet only thirteen and one-half billions' worth of these bonds are now outstanding, and practically eleven and one-half billions have been retired which, under existing law, cannot be replaced. The bill also amends existing law with respect to Treasury notes, certificates, and other forms of Government obligations. Under existing law $20,000,000,000 can be issued in Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, bills, and so forth, but the law is so written that not more than $10,000,000,000 can be issued in Treasury notes and $10,000,000,000 in certificates of indebtedness and Treasury bills. The purpose of this is to consolidate these two authorizations, so that if it is to the advantage of the Government to issue more of one form than another, it would have the privilege of doing so. One form of indebtedness is sometimes more favorable at a low rate of interest than another form, and this bill is intended to make the authorization more flexible, and not to increase the amount that may be issued for Treasury notes, bills, and so forth. It is the purpose to consolidate so that at the option of the Government the Treasury Department can issue more of one form than another.

The bill also provides for the issuing of a new form of bonds known as "Government savings bonds", that can be purchased by small investors who wish to invest their earnings in Government securities. These bonds, under the provisions of this bill, may be issued in denominations as low as

In other words, there are about 88 million dollars of Postal Savings bonds now out, and it is the purpose of the Treasury Department to discontinue issuance of those bonds, and issue these United States savings bonds which may be purchased by people of small means who desire to invest their savings in governmental bonds.

At the present time Liberty Loan bonds and other forms of bonds may be used as surety bonds, but bonds issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and other forms of bonds are not usable in that way. This bill provides that any bonds, the principal and interest of which are guaranteed by the Government, may be used as surety bonds. If it is necessary for one to give a bond to the Government, and he has these bonds that are not now usable as surety bonds, he will not be forced to go into the market and purchase surety bonds, but can use these bonds in lieu of a bond sold by some bonding company.

It is thought the adoption of these amendments will enable the Secretary of the Treasury to issue the type of securities which, in his judgment, are best suited to meet the conditions of the market and the needs of the Government. In addition it will allow a further refunding of outstanding obligations. There are at the present time some $5,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds bearing high interest rates which could be called in and refunded if the Treasury now had the authorization which is provided in this bill.

The benefits that would be derived are best shown by what has been accomplished since January 31, 1933, at which time the annual interest rate on the interest-bearing debt was 3.407 percent, whereas on December 31, 1934, the average rate was reduced to 2.96 percent. In other words if the average rate of 3.407 percent on January 31, 1933, had continued up to the present time, the amount of the interest charge would today be approximately $125,000,000 greater than we are now paying.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. RICH. If we should reduce the interest rate to 2.96, then supposing an individual had a million dollars invested in these bonds, he would not necessarily pay any income tax upon them. Does not the gentleman believe that we could have these bonds not exempt from taxes and still get a low interest rate and thereby have those people with great income assist in paying the Government's obligations and debts. Does the gentleman not think it would be a good thing to have these bonds subject to taxation?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; but not at as low a rate of interest. But we didn't deem it wise to make so radical a change as that in this bill. I think that is a subject that should be considered by this Congress; and so far as I know, no one objects to considering whether we should adopt such a policy.

Mr. RICH. When nobody objects, and we have the opportunity, why not take advantage of it and make them taxable?

Mr. DOUGHTON. We might ask the same question as to why that had not been done in the years past. I hope it will be done by this Congress.

Mr. RICH. If we have made mistakes in the years past, why continue?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I may say for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] that several measures seeking to accomplish that purpose are now pending before the Ways and Means Committee. I also invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that this committee has, in the past on two different occasions, reported such legislation to the House. That matter is not being neglected. It is receiving attention and consideration.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I wish to corroborate what the gentleman has said, as well as what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has said. In addition to the bills that are before the Ways and Means Committee, there is a constitutional-amendment suggestion that is now before the Committee on the Judiciary, which I have introduced, and I hope to be able to speak on it during the day.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I just want to point out one other point in connection with the so-called "savings bonds"—that is, the small bonds that are to be authorized under this legislation, which is something new; and that is that the limit that anyone may acquire of those bonds in 1 year's time is $10,000.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. So that one individual may not buy up unduly large amounts of those small bonds, but they will be handled so as to meet the requirements, wishes, and needs of the small investors generally throughout the country.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is a correct statement.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. And the further fact that the purpose is that those small bonds may be purchased at post offices throughout the country, so as to make them more accessible to the small investors.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is a correct statement.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Further, in connection with the United States savings bonds, whatever that total will be is within the $25,000,000,000 limitation?

Mr. DOUGHTON. In all there cannot be issued and outstanding at any one time more than $25,000,000,000, but the purpose of this bill is to make it more flexible.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The United States savings bonds are included within that $25,000,000,000 limit?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask if there is any provision in this bill which will take care of the small investors after they have invested their savings in these certificates, if the market begins to break on them and starts heading toward a loss of 16 or 18 percent, which occurred some time ago when the bonds of the United States were scattered through the holdings of individuals throughout the country, who were not in a position to protect their holdings, but through fear, forced their holdings on the market as low as $82 a hundred?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Those savings bonds are sold at a discount. If the condition obtains such as the gentleman just suggested, the price paid, plus the interest compounded semiannually, may be received by the purchaser of those savings bonds. It is in the nature of the war-savings stamps which were issued during another great fight the United States was in.

Mr. DOUGHTON. When anyone invests his money in bonds, of course, it is the same as any other investment.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But the chairman knows full well that these savings bonds are sold at a discount, and the face value or maturity value is much larger, because there is included in that face value the interest that would accrue on the price paid. At any time before maturity date, the owner of those savings bonds may secure the discount price, plus the accrued interest.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is that not similar to the way war-savings stamps were sold during the war?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Very similar.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course, the gentleman would not expect there would be provided in any legislation any guarantee by which bonds cannot decline or advance. You have the advantage of the rise in value, and in all affairs of mankind there is always a risk of some kind. You cannot guarantee a man against loss and then give him the benefit of the gains.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Last year we passed a law in this House which gave the Secretary of the Treasury $2,000,000,000 to stabilize the bonds of this country. Until we lose that money it will be used for that purpose.

Mr. DOUGHTON. And they have been stabilized to the extent they have been advancing in price all the time, and the interest rate has been getting lower all the time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But will the price of these certificates be so stabilized to the small investor?

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. Does the gentleman know what rate of interest is expected to be paid on these small bonds?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not think there is any fixed rate.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The savings bonds yield not in excess of 3 percent compounded semiannually.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes. That is a correct statement.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert in the RECORD a table showing the amount of bonds that are now outstanding under the Second Liberty Loan, also the rate of interest prevailing on Government securities since January 1933.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SUTPHIN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, very little can be said on this measure. The principal reason why so little can be said is that so little information has come to the Ways and Means Committee.

It may be of interest to the House to know that the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee introduced this bill last Monday. On Tuesday morning the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanied by a group of his assistants, appeared at an executive meeting of the Ways and Means Committee. There was no reporter present; only a few members of the committee were present. The honorable Secretary was in the room possibly a half or three-quarters of an hour, and before he departed, a motion was made by a member of the majority to report this bill. That was last Tuesday morning. Yesterday afternoon the report, which is now being read by the Members for the first time, was available.

So that is the method of procedure, and it is the amount of information available to the House when a measure of this importance is brought to your attention. I do not pretend to know very much about it. But I am extremely critical of the manner in which important legislation reaches this floor without the slightest effort to give any explanation thereof.

I took exception to some of the remarks made by the Secretary of the Treasury during that executive hearing. It may not be quite in keeping to make one or two references to that hearing. For instance, the chairman of our committee has just referred to the reduction of the interest rate on Government securities. Why, it is no credit to the Treasury that the interest rate has been reduced. The Secretary of the Treasury seemed to take great credit to himself for this reduction. It is easily apparent why that reduction has taken place over the period of 2 years. There is not a man in this room but who knows that the business world has no confidence whatsoever in putting any capital into business; and, therefore, an investor naturally turns to his Government and says: "Here, the only thing I put any confidence in is the stability of the Federal Government, and, therefore, I want to buy some of your bonds. Keep my capital until such time as there is an opportunity to invest it with some degree of confidence in business."

Now, this is the explanation of the reason for the reduction in interest rates: The demand for Government bonds by investors.

Another remark that was made in answer to some questions by my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], was that no effort had been made on banks to force investment in Government securities. The Secretary of the Treasury, perhaps, was correct in saying that during his administration since January 1, 1934, that had not been done; but any Member of Congress, or any man connected with a bank which was closed on the 4th of March 1933, knows perfectly well that in order to get capital to reopen that bank, the bank was obliged to issue new stock and get capital from the Federal Government.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The purpose of that was to make the banks sound, safe, and secure and not for the purpose of selling Government obligations. Many of the banks could not be opened in the condition they were in; they were not sufficiently solvent.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am not making any reference to why it was done.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is why it was done, as the gentleman will recall.

Mr. TREADWAY. I simply am saying what was done; and the Secretary of the Treasury did not seem to want to back up the action of his predecessor.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It was done for the interest of the banks and not for the interest of the Treasury.

Mr. TREADWAY. It was forced upon the banks in order to reopen the banks.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In order to make them sound so they could reopen.

Mr. TREADWAY. I went to the R. F. C. with enough bank officials to know the manner in which they got permission to reopen.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further——

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is fair and he is intelligent. Now, was not the prime purpose to make the banks safe for the depositors' money and not for the benefit of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from North Carolina has one view of why it was done and I am entitled to my opinion as to another reason why it was done.

It was done, Mr. Chairman, in order that the Government itself could control all the banks of the country. That is the reason it was done. It is a further fact that today from 50 to 60 percent of the depositors' money in our banks is in Government securities and not in funds that are being used for commercial purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not true also that more than 50 percent of all Government securities are in the hands of the banks?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, it is the same thing; the money of the depositors has come into the Treasury; and the reverse is, of course, true, as the gentleman says. It represents securities that have gone into the hands of the banks.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will not the gentleman also be kind enough to tell the House how much more money there is on deposit in the banks now than there was before the bank holiday, the great increase of deposits resulting from the confidence that has been reestablished in the banks?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman may think there is increased confidence in North Carolina, but it does not exist among the business people in Massachusetts.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It exists all over the world.

Mr. TREADWAY. On the contrary, the business people of the country have not the confidence in the financial structure of this country today that he thinks they have.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. FORD. The gentleman stated that this action was taken for the purpose of putting the Government in control of the banks. In view of the banking structure we had prior to 1933, will not the gentleman admit that it was about time the United States Government took control of the banks?

Mr. TREADWAY. The banking structure then existing, the Federal Reserve System, was established by the Wilson administration. It may not have been perfect, but I will say for it that it was a blamed sight better than what is being done now.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman does not want to leave the impression that there has not been an increase of confidence in the depositors in his own State of Massachusetts as reflected by the great increase of deposits in the banks of Massachusetts?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the savings banks of Massachusetts are in splendid shape, and, of course, the national banks are now. I am not criticizing.

Mr. HEALEY. But the gentleman realizes that within the last year or two the deposits in the banks of Massachusetts have increased.

Mr. TREADWAY. The bank deposits have increased very largely, not, however, because the people have more confidence in our financial structure, but because they put their money in the banks rather than put it into industry.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not a fact that the deposits in the banks are very much larger today than heretofore by reason of the F. D. I. C.?

Mr. TREADWAY. Which one of the alphabetical deals is that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the Federal Deposit Insurance. Is it not also true that money is being kept in the banks under the Federal Deposit Insurance rather than being invested in industry because those small depositors know they can get the full face value of the deposits while in connection with investment in the certificates proposed by this bill they will be subject to market depreciation and may have to dump their certificates at a big loss?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is showing a very definite knowledge of business conditions, and such opinions as he expresses I am sure are of great value to this House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for a question, but I should like to allow some of the time to be used by other gentlemen on this side.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Is there any valid reason why provision should not be written into this bill providing that the bonds to be issued shall not be subject to taxes? That is, the interest on the bonds issued?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is a question by itself, and I dislike to try to bring up the tax-exempt feature in the consideration of this measure. I think we had better let that pass for the time being.

Mr. RICH. Is it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to say what interest rate is to be paid on these bonds?

Mr. TREADWAY. The only direct reference to interest rates comes under this new issue of savings bonds.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is correct; but, if the gentleman will permit, of course, the question of market controls the matter of the interest rate.

Mr. RICH. Also the length of time in which these bonds are to run is left to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Of course, there are four different types of Government securities issued, varying in periods of time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is for the purpose of taking advantage of whichever type may bring the lower rate. Sometimes the sale of one is to be obtained more readily than another with a lower rate of interest.

Mr. TREADWAY. The answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] appears on page 5, paragraph (b). I think that fully answers the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. Chairman, my objection to the bill is to the manner in which it comes before the House, the lack of information, and the further curtailment of congressional power. We gave up yesterday all the legislative authority that was in existence. Here is just a little further example, and the probability is that this will continue to be the policy of the present administration, namely, to keep curtailing our power as representatives of the people and increasing the power of the Executive.

Mr. LORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York very briefly.

Mr. LORD. The question has been brought up whether these bonds are going to be put out in such a way that the poor people may buy them. Is there any guaranty that the poor people will get back the amount of money they put in those bonds?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think that is a very pertinent inquiry, but I will have to refer you to the authority issued to the Secretary of the Treasury under paragraph (b). He could guarantee them and make rules and regulations that they may not be redeemed at less than the man put in them, but whether he will do that or not is a question to ask him, not me.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. And with 3-percent compound interest.

Mr. LORD. He is guaranteed to get back as much as he put in?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; there is no such guaranty.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is covered in paragraph (b), page 5, of the bill itself.

Mr. TREADWAY. That does not guarantee the return of the principal. Under existing law, the Treasury has been authorized to issue a total of $28,000,000,000 of United States bonds.

This authority has been exhausted to the extent of $25,500,000,000, leaving only $2,500,000,000 that can still be issued without additional authorization from Congress.

The pending bill seeks to amend existing law by authorizing the Treasury to have outstanding at any one time $25,000,000,000 of bonds.

Of the $25,500,000,000 issued under the present authority, only $13,500,000,000 are still outstanding. Thus the bill in effect authorizes the issue of $11,500,000,000 of new bonds and gives the Treasury the right to reissue these bonds upon their maturity, as well as those now outstanding, without further authorization from Congress.

In other words, the bill gives the Treasury a permanent revolving fund of $25,000,000,000.

In addition to its authority to issue bonds, the Treasury has the power under existing law to have outstanding at any one time $10,000,000,000 of short-term Treasury bills and certificates and $10,000,000,000 of 1-to-5-year Treasury notes.

There are now outstanding some $9,500,000,000 of notes, but only $2,000,000,000 of bills and certificates.

Under the pending measure, the present authority would be combined in one $20,000,000,000 authorization, thus permitting the Treasury to issue short-term obligations with that total without restriction as to class.

Section 6 of the bill provides for the issuance of a new type of small-denomination bonds, to be known as "United States savings bonds." They would be issued under the general $25,000,000,000 authority.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill will establish the policy of the Government in the future as to issuance of its own credit or as to the issuance of further tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds. I am against the further issuance of tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds, but not for the same reason that many people are advocating eliminating from our laws the provision that permits their issuance.

My reason is that I do not want more bonds issued by the Government. Their reason is that they want the people in the States where they are owned to pay taxes to those municipalities, counties, and States. There is a big difference.

Any time you have $28,000,000,000 worth of bonds outstanding and you permit them to be taxed locally, you will pay at least $400,000,000 a year additional subsidy or bonus to the holders of these bonds, which they will in turn pass on to the taxing power in New York and other States, from the State government on down to the city government. The reason I am opposed to the further issuance of tax-exempt bonds is because I do not want any more bonds issued, but if you are going to issue them, there is a serious question in my mind as to whether they should be tax exempt.

Mr. Chairman, we have a national debt today of $28,000,000,000. At 3-percent compound interest which this Government pays, we will pay during the next 30 years $38,000,000,000 interest on the $28,000,000,000 and we will still owe the $28,000,000,000. During the next 60 years we will pay $130,000,000,000 on the $28,000,000,000 and we will still owe the original $28,000,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Members to seriously consider what we are doing here? We are adopting a policy of issuing more tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds and paying people for the use of the Government's own credit.

You are endorsing the principle of further farming out to the private corporations of this country, the banking institutions, the greatest privilege on earth—issuing and distributing the Nation's credit. Instead of further farming out to them this great privilege, I should like to vote to take away from them the privilege they have today.

The Federal Reserve banks are owned by private corporations. Not one dollar of stock is owned by the Government or by the people. Every dollar of stock in these money-issuing institutions, receiving their money from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for 27 cents a thousand dollars, which is the cost of printing and is all that they pay—these banks are owned by private corporations. Therefore, you are farming out to a corporation that is owned by private corporations, the greatest privilege on earth that you can give—the power to issue blanket mortgages against all the property of all the people and the power to issue mortgages against every dollar that the people of this country earn.

This is what you are doing. Do you want to further extend this privilege and enlarge upon this power? If you do, pass this bill as it is here today. But I do not want to do this, and I am going to offer an amendment, and I am going to seriously insist upon the adoption of the amendment. This amendment will restrict the interest rate that will be permitted on these bonds to not exceeding one-half of 1 percent. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry we have not had more time to consider this bill. It is very fundamental to me for this reason: At the present time the banks of our country have taken the money which you and I and the other depositors placed in those banks and have purchased somewhere between $12,000,000,000 and $15,000,000,000 worth of Government bonds. They took this money and bought these bonds because the depositors let them do so.

This proposition is now submitted to us to change the picture because they figure that somewhere down this long lane the depositors will go to the bank cashiers and say, "I want my money", and when the bank cashiers meet that demand they will have to dump Government bonds on the bond market or place the bonds with the Treasury for collateral to secure currency. I do not believe the Secretary of the Treasury has enough money at his disposal to support the bond market; twelve to fourteen billions of dollars are offered by the banks in order to meet the demands of the depositors at a time when our people are again willing to venture in industry and away from Government bonds. I am suspicious that someone else feels the same way.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am sorry, I cannot yield.

Now, they propose to have "baby bonds" issued and sold to the washerwoman, the bellhop, the ditchdigger, and others who perform the stoop labor of the country, without any guarantee in the bill that this investment will be protected against loss by some racket or some manipulation of the bond market that may be imposed upon the small investors who take their earnings and invest in these "baby bonds" or savings certificates.

If you will put in this bill a proviso which guarantees the little investor the return of his principal so invested at any time he desires to "cash in", that will be something and that will create a market for some of this money which is now being carried by the depositors in the banks of this country.

I have two or three dollars in the bank and I am leaving it there, because it is guaranteed in principal, and I propose to leave it there until I can find that the Government will let me alone for 5 or 10 or 15 or 20 minutes, so I can draw the money out and invest it in property and put people back to work. I feel this so keenly that I must make this statement: In 1932, when business stopped and men lost hope and banks closed, I took my life-insurance policies, put them in hock, drew the money out, and helped put 7,000 men back to work, and risked and staked everything I had on earth or expected to have in order to keep people at work. As a result of this operation we paid into this Treasury Department nearly $100,000 in income taxes on the operations of that year, and the group that went in with me, who were a group of 2,700 farmers, netted nearly $700,000 out of the operation. [Applause.] That is the kind of relief we need in this country.

Mr. Chairman, coming from the industrial and agricultural walks of life, I have the past few days listened with great interest to the prejudiced statements which have been uttered from the floor of this House against organized business and the men who are charged with the responsibility of industrial leadership and to whom this Government and this administration and the majority now in this House look for relief in the placing on the pay rolls of this country some eleven million workers. One day we are asked to vote for the spending of $4,000,000,000 in order to "prime the pump" and thus encourage industry to take hold and go about its business of employing people at living wages. The next day we are asked to vote for a measure which discourages industry and leads people away from industrial activity. This may all be "good politics", but it is very poor business.

Hurriedly reading this bill, I come to the conclusion that the Secretary of the Treasury now feels that the banks of this Nation will no longer support the purchase of Government bonds to the extent called for by House Joint Resolution 117 and which this House passed only yesterday and that now we must take steps to place the bonds in the hands of someone other than the banks. To carry out this request of the Secretary, it is now proposed to issue "baby bonds", or savings certificates, to be sold through the post-office windows and from other places and in denominations of as low as $25 to the end that the poor of our country may even participate in the holdings of these "baby bonds." It is a truth that our poor people, when they are frugal enough to save from $25 to $50 or $100, most all have an economic structure so constituted that it is only a short time until they have to liquidate their savings in order to meet some emergency.

Accordingly they are not in a position to place these "baby bonds" in a vault and forget them for 5 or 10 or 20 years and then cash them in. These bonds will not be negotiable instruments; instead, they will be as exchangeable in a way as is a $5 bill. Therefore it will be very risky for the holders to leave them unprotected from thieves or other dangers of loss. When they have purchased these certificates or bonds, the next thing they will need is a safety deposit box, and how that does cost money. If I understand section 1 and section 22, part (a) of this bill, the Secretary may issue up to $25,000,000,000 of these "baby bonds." I wish to inquire of this House: If even one-fourth of this sum is issued in "baby bonds", how much of a loss will be suffered by the small purchasers of those bonds when the market runs down and they are forced to sell their holdings in order to meet actual living expenses? I wish to ask who will benefit through this loss on the account of that "bearish" market? I wish to ask why this bill does not carry a provision whereby the Secretary of the Treasury is specifically commanded to guarantee the principal cost of these "baby bonds" to those poor people who will invest their savings therein?

Is it not true that a stabilization fund is now in the hands of the Secretary with which to help protect the market at par on the bonds now held by the banks and the high and mighty of this country? Is it not also true that the extravagant spending program of this Government is now calling for such a vast issue of bonds that the Secretary now seeks other fields in which to place his issues, fearing that the bonds now held by the banks will eventually be dumped by the banks? Is it not true that when our people desire to return to their normal walks of life and again engage in producing food, clothing, and building shelter that the deposits now placed in banks by our people will be called back from the banks and invested in lands and factories and machinery and farm mortgages and goods on the shelf and our people thus put back to work and removed from the dole, from the welfare list, and from the Public Works pay rolls?

Is it not true that in seeking this "unorganized" purchasing power the Secretary is now going to the small wage earners and small-salary recipients to the end that he may now shift this burden of "market risks" away from the banks and to the small "baby-bond" holder? Is it not true that when this deal shall have been consummated it will again be possible for the "organized" money machine to bear down the price on these bonds and again scalp the small and weak holder through the purchase of these bonds at a price far below that paid by the original purchaser, who is in no way prepared to hold these bonds until maturity? Who is it that can purchase only in $25 and $50 lots and who is at the same time able to carry these "baby bonds" for a minimum of 10 years before they can cash in as this bill provides in section 22, paragraph (b)?

Mr. Chairman, often Members of this House stand here and malign the activities of some of our corporations for the nefarious practices they carry on against our people who cannot help themselves. Down through the years, while I have been engaged in industry, I have bitterly assailed the practice of corporations issuing stocks and bonds to their employees on an installment-purchase contract and without a guarantee to the employee against loss of principal invested. I have always contended that the corporation was in position to use duress on its employees through the offering of stocks and/or bonds on this basis, and that if offered at all, on a basis which would guarantee the unsuspecting employee against loss. So at this time I cannot refrain from calling to the attention of this House that it is very fundamental that this Government, in making an issue of securities of this nature, be very specific in providing against this loss to the small investor.

Recently this very Membership to a very great majority has voted a strict rule against those who would sell stocks and/or bonds to the investing public of this country. Through that legislation safeguards were attempted to be created which would protect the untrained and unsuspecting investor against loss through the "rigging" of the market. Can this Government fail to do as much in the issuance of its securities? Shall the great United States of America now be guilty of passing an act of this kind, designed to sell billions of dollars' worth of Government securities to poor people, small investors, the unsuspecting public without giving as much protection to them as the Government would have the corporations of this country give to the investors for those corporate securities? Ownership carries risk. This country cannot go on forever selling its bonds to banks only.

No doubt the Secretary now thinks it is time for the public to enter the Government-bond market. If that be true, then why does not the Secretary ask this House to grant the same protection to that public as has been granted to the banks which purchased the twelve to fifteen billion dollars' worth of Government securities? If this administration is now willing to ask the public to back up its faith in the new deal through the purchase of bonds issued to carry out the program of the new deal then why does not the administration go along and guarantee that part which is to be issued to the small purchaser, to the end that faith may be retained down through the years, and not only until the scalping takes place? The Secretary knows full well that so long as the great majority of bank credits, life-insurance premiums, and corporate-surplus savings are invested in Government bonds that little credit can be extended to so-called "organized" industry and to agriculture. If all savings are invested in bonds issued by the Government, then other lines of industry must suffer, farm values must remain at low ebb, production must decline, unemployment must increase, and Government costs must increase.

Wealth calls for production. Production gives people work. Work should be compensated by paying wages and salaries that enable the worker to maintain an American standard of living. When our people are thus engaged it will not be necessary for the Government to issue all these billions of dollars of securities, and then our poorer people will have a warmer place in the sun.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill as it is now written.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL].

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, under existing law the Secretary of the Treasury has authority to issue Government securities in the form of Government bonds to a total of $28,000,000,000. Under that authorization every issuance of a bond counts in making up the total of $28,000,000,000, regardless of the fact that such an issuance may retire an equal amount of existing bonded indebtedness.

What this bill proposes to do is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue Government bonds to a total amount of $25,000,000,000 that may be outstanding at any one time, so that when a refunding bond is issued and an existing bond is retired, that retired bond shall not count in the total limit that may be outstanding.

In addition to that, under the existing authority the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to issue Treasury notes to a total amount of $10,000,000,000, and has the authority to issue Treasury certificates and Treasury bills to a combined total amount of not exceeding $10,000,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That would total $45,000,000,000 outstanding.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes. This bill proposes to place the Treasury notes, Treasury bills, and Treasury certificates in one class, so far as the authorized amount of outstanding short-term securities at one time is concerned. Instead of having ten billion in notes and ten billion in certificates and bills we may have a total of twenty billion in notes, certificates, and bills.

Under the authorization existing at this time of a total of $28,000,000,000 there has been issued from time to time a total amount of $25,450,457,115, leaving an authorization at this time in the issuance of bonds only about two and one-half billion dollars.

Notwithstanding the fact that in the issuance of these bonds under this authority there have been retired bonds to the amount of $11,975,539,000, leaving a total of outstanding bonds at this time of thirteen and one-half billion dollars in round unmbers.

Of this total limit of $28,000,000,000 there remains now in the Treasury authority to issue only about two and one-half billion dollars of additional bonds.

Mr. CARLSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. CARLSON. In case the bonus is authorized to be paid will this be sufficient to pay that bonus without additional authorization?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It will permit the issuance of bonds for the financing of any expenditure authorized by Congress.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend by remarks in the RECORD and to insert a statement by the Treasury Department showing just the status of the outstanding bonds and what this bill would do if enacted, in the matter of authorization of the total amount that might be outstanding, both as to bonds and Treasury notes, as well as Treasury certificates and Treasury bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to insert a certain statement from the Treasury Department. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, this bill looks rather simple on the face of it. Neither the reading of the bill nor the discussion of it here has aroused any great interest or deep concern. I do not know how the rest of you gentlemen feel, but I feel quite as great a sense of responsibility when I think of my people who sent me here as I have at any time since I have been in the Congress of the United States. It is not what the bill says on the face of it that disturbs me. It is what the bill portends so far as the future of the country is concerned. Mr. Secretary Morgenthau, when he appeared before the committee, admitted it would be impossible for this Government to finance the appropriation which the Democratic majority made yesterday of nearly $5,000,000,000 without the aid of this or similar legislation. Just what does this bill mean? Let us look just for a moment behind the curtain, and I am not attempting to arouse any suspicion, and I realize that anything I may say will not change a vote in this House. I expect to vote for the bill, but I would feel derelict in my duty toward my constituents if I were not to express my honest views as to the actual purposes of the bill.

The bill provides that the Government can increase its borrowing power to $45,000,000,000. What does that mean? It means that the Government expects eventually to use the power that is granted and that it will be necessary to use it. Another very significant clause in the bill is in regard to these "baby bonds," to be sold through the post offices in every part of the country. They are to be sold in small denominations and they are to be sold at a discount. These bonds will run for a longer time than the buying public—that is, the banks—care to buy at this time. I want the people in my district to take notice in regard to these so-called "baby bonds." I do not want them to be deceived at all as to just where the country is going and just what this bill seeks to anticipate when we arrive at the time, as we surely will, when the banks have no confidence in United States bonds, unless men pause to think and slow down this spending program that we are following at the present time. It means that we are headed for inflation, and I pray to God it may not be extreme or uncontrolled inflation, but all the signs of the times point in that direction, and thoughtful men, shrewd financial men all over this country, know that we are getting a little closer all the time to the precipice. It will not take a whole lot to shove us over. I hope that our country can be saved from what other countries have suffered.

I hope that the great working classes and the middle class, the thrifty, may be saved from the pestilential curse that has been visited on other splendid, enterprising civilized countries because the legislatures and the legislators in them have lacked the courage to face conditions and facts. The time is coming when the banks as trustees of their depositors will no longer buy these Government bonds. Remember that. Such a bill as that which the Democratic majority passed yesterday appropriating $5,000,000,000 and some more bills which Congress has in contemplation, is going to hurry the day when wise investors will refuse to buy the bonds of Uncle Sam. This bill is anticipating that very grave zero hour. It is now proposed to approach the little man with a splendid bargain in "baby bonds" at a discount that will not mature until after that event occurs.

We have had an experience in the sale of "baby bonds." In April 1933, $500,000,000 of notes or "baby bonds" were offered to the public in denominations of $100 each, so that the little man, the laboring man, the school teacher, the doctor, could buy these bonds. To encourage the purchase of the bonds a statement was issued by the Secretary of the Treasury that the bonds would all be paid, principal and interest, in gold of the then standard. Within 3 months this Government that had made that promise through its official repudiated that promise. Time will tell and the courts will determine whether that repudiation stands or not. Are we, through the process of inflation, going to relieve the strain on the banks and depositors' funds, the stress and strain that is now causing the banks to hesitate to take our bonds, and unload the uncertain and precarious burden upon the shoulders of thrifty people of moderate means? When I say this I am not an alarmist. I am revealing facts. I have here on the desk a report, the result of an exhaustive research carried on by one of the great, one of the very great universities of this country, looking to its self-preservation. I refer to Duke University, located in the State of my beloved chairman. The officials of the university thought they saw, and they still think they see, the approaching catastrophe. They know that the life of Duke University, as well as other endowed universities in this country, its very life, its very existence, and its ability to serve young America and to help underwrite the future of the United States, depends upon whether we have inflation or not. This great university caused to be made a most exhaustive research here and abroad so that every thoughtful man in the United States, every man interested in endowed institutions of any kind or character might see what would happen if inflation should come.

This research shows that in Germany, the University of Frankfort had 38 gilt-edge endowments, largely in the Government bonds of Germany, guaranteed. After the inflation was over and the money was revalued, the University of Frankfort found itself practically in bankruptcy. It realized less than 14 percent on what was supposed to be perfectly sound endowments.

The time has come, gentlemen—and I am not speaking politically, but I am speaking for my country and your country—when we cannot afford to have a bill of this character brought to the floor of this House unless a committee, such as the Ways and Means Committee, which, omitting myself, is composed of men of marked ability, with minds of keen power of analysis, financial experts, who should at least feel not only responsibility to this generation but, as Members of Congress and under the oath of office, should assume some responsibility for posterity. This bill should have been scrutinized with the utmost care, and we should have known the implications and purposes of the bill, not as written in the bill in technical language, but we should have a picture of where we are going and where it is all going to end, and just why this legislation has been asked for by the Treasury Department.

I will support the bill, because we are now driven to the point where we must have this legislation to meet the exigencies which the haste and waste of this administration have created. This bill is a danger signal hoisted in front of this great legislative body, that you may not go on in this manner of legislating with undue haste on these important matters lest inflation engulf the Nation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is somewhat unduly alarmed.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that no one opposes this measure. No one as yet has spoken in opposition to the measure.

It is a measure of necessity, due to the money mechanics of our Government.

Yesterday we passed an authorization calling for $4,000,000,000 expenditure in long-term obligations, Government bonds, and we only have authority to issue two and one-half billion dollars. It is not only a necessity, but every person who heard the splendid statement of the gentleman who graces the Treasury and in whom this country has confidence was impressed with the fact that it was a money-saving device. People may laugh off the fact that $125,000,000 in interest was saved from January 1, 1933, to December 31, 1933, but this country recognizes that as an outstanding achievement.

One gentleman said he feared for the depositors in banks, and in the next breath he said he had $2 or $3 he was going to keep there because he was not afraid to leave them there. This country has confidence in our banking structure today. It has confidence in the administration. It has confidence in the man in the White House, President Roosevelt, and this is a measure complementary of that passed yesterday, one of necessity, and a money-saving measure.

Mention was made about the limit of $45,000,000,000 in indebtedness. May I call attention to the fact that under other administrations the limits were $48,000,000,000; $28,000,000,000 in long-term obligations and $20,000,000,000 in short-term obligations. This bill does not increase the indebtedness of this country one single dime. It does not create any power to issue bonds or short-term obligations unless the Congress of the United States makes the authorization.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us what administration had $48,000,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It has it now. The outside figure now is $28,000,000,000 of long-term obligations and $20,000,000,000 short term.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But the gentleman said another administration. I am trying to find out what administration that was.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It may be some gentlemen may not understand why it is necessary for the change with the $28,000,000,000 authorization in the law. It is necessary because when those bonds were retired, they could not be reissued. We have outstanding now under long-term obligations thirteen and one-half billion dollars. I may say to the gentleman that this present law has been on the books far longer than the gentleman has been in Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to know what administration it was.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It came into being under the war, the Wilson administration, and it stayed here under Mr. Harding. It stayed here under Mr. Coolidge, under Mr. Hoover, and now we are correcting the matter today under Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It was under the Wilson administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, is further amended as follows: The first paragraph of section 1 is amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to borrow, from time to time, on the credit of the United States for the purposes of this act, to provide for the purchase, redemption, or refunding, at or before maturity, of any outstanding bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, or Treasury bills of the United States, and to meet expenditures authorized for the national security and defense and other public purposes authorized by law, such sum or sums as in his judgment may be necessary, and to issue therefor bonds of the United States: Provided, That the face amount of bonds issued under this section and section 22 of this act shall not exceed in the aggregate $25,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIES: Page 2, line 8, after the word "aggregate", strike out "$25,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "At any one time three times the total amount of all outstanding currency of the United States."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to limit the amount that the Government can issue in bonds to not exceed at any one time three times the amount of all outstanding currency of the United States Government. In other words, we have today $5,500,000,000, approximately, of United States currency outstanding. Under the terms of this amendment, in order for the Government to issue $25,000,000,000 in bonds, it would be necessary to increase the total amount of currency outstanding in the United States to about $8,000,000,000.

I know that there are gentlemen who will immediately say that this would be inflationary, but, as a matter of fact, we have in the Treasury today approximately eight and one-half billion dollars of gold and nearly a billion dollars of silver.

Against this gold we have an outstanding currency issue of approximately $5,500,000,000. So we can safely issue currency against the gold profit that we have in the Treasury of the United States to the extent of $2,500,000,000 in case we wanted to have a 100-percent reserve back of our currency; or in case we desired to issue currency based upon 40-percent metallic reserve, we could expand the currency issue much greater than that. We can preserve the stabilization fund and still issue against the gold a billion dollars of new currency.

Gentlemen talk about the harmful effect of inflation, but they should remember that the issuance of these bonds is inflationary, for we are creating an artificial purchasing power that is being borrowed on the future, a purchasing power that must eventually be paid by generations yet unborn, and a purchasing power that is exempt from all taxation. Not only are we creating an artificial purchasing power which must be paid for by the American people but we are, as an inducement to those who have capital, making these bonds exempt from all taxation.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Government bonds are not exempt from all taxation; they are subject to the surtax.

Mr. DIES. That is true.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman's statements carry so much weight that I know he wants to be strictly accurate.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman is correct, and I accept the gentleman's amendment. But they are exempt from most taxes, are they not? Anyway they are exempt from municipal and State taxes and from a majority of Federal taxes. The effect is that we are transferring the burden of this indebtedness to the middle class and to the wage earners and farmers of the country because those who should share the responsibility of the Government, who should share their responsibility of this economic crisis and the tremendous expenditures incurred, will evade taxation, and the burden of this expenditure must be met by the middle classes in the United States.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not true that corporations do not pay the surtax? As the gentleman knows, I am very much interested in this subject.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. There is no surtax on the corporations.

Mr. DIES. I hope I may be permitted to continue. The gentleman on the other side has said that this is inflation. As I have pointed out, our present outstanding currency could be redeemed 100 percent in metal. Not only is that true, but, in carrying out my plan, we would in no way depart from sound currency, for we would still have 100-percent backing. It must not be forgotten that practically every country on the face of the earth has been compelled to expand its currency in order to meet the unusual situation throughout the world. France reduced its franc to one-fifth of its original weight and wiped out four-fifths of the debt of France, and they repudiated their foreign indebtedness. England, the country which has always represented conservatism in finance, not only resorted to drastic currency expansion and entirely wiped out a large percentage of its indebtedness—not only did it do that, but England captured the markets of the world by cheapening her currency below the currencies of other countries.

And so gentlemen talk about inflation. At least this amendment I am offering gives the House an opportunity to say that if you are going to have $25,000,000,000 of bonds then you must have at least $8,000,000,000 of currency outstanding and you must issue the currency on the basis of the gold profit that we made. [Applause.] Why did we revalue it; what was the purpose of revaluing the dollar if we did not intend to utilize that revaluation to lift from the backs of the American people the crushing tax burden and the crushing burden of indebtedness that is paralyzing industry in the United States? For what purpose have we now idle in the Treasury of the United States $2,800,000,000 (with the exception of the limited amount used for the stabilization fund) if we do not intend at this moment of crisis to utilize it in order that we may put more money into circulation in the United States, not fiat money, not so-called "printing-press money", but money that has behind it an adequate metallic base? Not only will this enable us to take full advantage of the gold revaluation, but it will relieve to the extent of nearly $3,000,000,000 the interest paid by the American people on that much indebtedness.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. What is the logic in money economics of basing the inflation of the currency upon another form of Government indebtedness instead of upon the metallic base?

Mr. DIES. If we issue the currency upon the metallic base we have in the Treasury, we certainly meet the objections of every conservative and reactionary money advocate who denounces every form of currency with the exception of that which has a metallic base.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That question is not involved in this bill and we ought not to include it.

Mr. DIES. But we are providing in this bill for a possible bond issue of $25,000,000,000, which, I understand, is to refinance outstanding bonds and notes. Are we not at least entitled to say that if the Treasury issues $25,000,000,000 of bonds, then it must also issue and have outstanding at least $8,000,000,000 of currency in the United States?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman is recognized as an authority.

Mr. DIES. No; I am not an authority.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. What is the logic of that kind of argument?

Mr. DIES. The logic of that kind of argument is to make effective the Gold Revaluation Act, to lift from the backs of the taxpayers the burden of some of the tax-exempt securities, securities which exempt the people who ought to be bearing their share of the burdens. They are not bearing their proportionate share of the burdens of this depression but are escaping responsibility simply by buying tax-exempt securities. [Applause.]

Who is going to pay for this? The wage earners and the middle class and farmers who are not buying bonds. The people who cannot escape the burdens of this depression will bear the burden and pay the debt. I bring this matter before the House now, because sooner or later it is coming to a showdown. We cannot continue to issue in the United States bonds and tax-exempt securities.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has made a very able speech, one which I enjoyed listening to and one which at another time might be pertinent to a pending bill, but it was a speech absolutely irrelevant to the bill now before the House. The gentleman made a speech which causes an emotional reaction, but we have to look at this bill sanely, calmly, and coldly. This is not a bill that should be used as a vehicle for expanding the currency. Personally, I am not afraid of a controlled expansion of the currency, carrying with it velocity, but I will vote on that matter when the proper bill comes before us.

This bill has nothing for its immediate objective other than saving money to the taxpayers of this country. Its immediate purpose is to enable a refinancing of our outstanding indebtedness and to convert some short-time indebtedness into long-term indebtedness in a manner that will be beneficial to the taxpayers of this country. There has been some refinancing by the Treasury Department during the last year or year and a half, which has brought about a saving in interest payments to this country on its outstanding indebtedness of well over $100,000,000. This has been done by the present able and distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, but it takes time to accomplish these things. It requires machinery, and this bill proposes to give the Secretary of the Treasury the machinery through which that might be accomplished in the future.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] talks about bonds and currency being in a ratio of 3 to 1. I do not know much about the currency or the money question, although I have given it study in order to try to form an honest opinion in my own mind as to how I should vote when the matter comes before this House. My opinion as expressed by my vote may be wrong, but at least I am striving for evidence that will, so far as my own mind is concerned, satisfy me that it is an honest opinion. One of the things I have learned from my study is that currency is subject to the law of supply and demand, and the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], so far as this bill is concerned, does not give consideration to that question.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PETTENGILL. If there was a great demand for currency, there would be a greater supply?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman said that we ought to vote on this as an independent measure. The gentleman knows, does he not, that we will probably not have that opportunity?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, that is not the point.

Mr. DIES. That is practically the legislative situation.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Texas is one of the leaders of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman flatters me.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has been recently elected to the Committee on Rules, and as a leader of the Democratic Party he certainly does not want to put himself in the position of offering an amendment which will defeat the very purpose the administration has in mind in presenting this bill, because I am sure the gentleman wants to collaborate with his own administration.

Mr. DIES. The President is requesting a bill to be passed by Congress authorizing him to issue $3,000,000,000 in currency and in bonds. Will it be defeating the administration's policy to merely make effective the gold revaluation policy and put into effect laws that have already been passed? [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is discussing a bill which has no relation to this bill. If a bill for that purpose is brought in, where it is a straight issue before the House, then the gentleman's argument is probably pertinent, but this is simply a bill the immediate objective and purpose of which is to permit the refinancing of the present outstanding indebtedness of the country and one which will result in a saving to the Government and to the American people.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If there are $20,000,000,000 in currency today outstanding, will that bring about prosperity?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is a moot question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Has the gentleman heard anyone who advocated the increase of currency tell how this money would get into the pockets of the unemployed or the workingmen?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want to get into a moot question. I do not want to have this bill put in a controversial position, and I do not want the bill to be misunderstood.

The arguments of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] impresses me, although I am not saying that I agree completely with them. I am also impressed by my own independent study which gives justification to a controlled expansion of the currency carrying with it velocity. That is why I believe payment of the bonus is the proper vehicle by and through which such velocity may be obtained.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The statement of the distinguished and learned gentleman from Texas was in regard to the bond issue being three times the currency in circulation. Why does he not use the figures three and a half, four, or five times?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want to have that injected either. I want to have this bill presented to the Members in its true light. I think the gentleman from Kentucky analyzes and appreciates my state of mind correctly.

The amendment, no matter how praiseworthy, is a controversial amendment. I know the motives of my friend are high and sincere, but the ultimate result of the amendment, if adopted, would be to defeat a measure which the administration proposes and the operation of which will be beneficial to the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman is a member of the committee, and I have been trying to find out some information about the bill; and although it has been stated it is in the bill, I do not read it there. Does the gentleman know what the intention is as to the rate of interest on these bonds? Is it intended to pay at the rate of 3 percent, or something less than that?

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot answer that question. All I can say to my friend is that there has been some refinancing by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the average annual interest rate on interest-bearing debt on January 31, 1933, was 3.407 percent, whereas——

Mr. KENNEY. I am talking about the savings bonds.

Mr. McCORMACK. On savings bonds I think it is 3 percent.

Whereas on December 31, 1934, the average rate of interest was 2.96, a reduction of .447 percent, and a saving of well over $100,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Briefly, yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is proposed to save an interest charge by paying interest to these baby-bond holders at the rate of 3 percent when the Treasury is selling bonds to the banks today at much less than 3 percent. Do you then propose to saddle that saving on the holders of these baby bonds, who will undoubtedly be forced to dump their bonds on the market with a loss in principal?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is drawing a conclusion.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman seems to know so much about this bill, I should like to have some information on it based on experience and study.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is drawing a supposition and a conclusion with which I am not in accord. The baby-bond provision is only a minor matter. The gentleman is advancing, as major opposition to this bill, something which is really only a minor matter.

I simply want to conclude with this statement: There is nothing political in this bill. As the gentlemen on the Republican side have well said, it is a simple bill. There is not anything controversial about the bill. The bill was reported unanimously by the committee, my Republican colleagues on the committee voting for it as well as my Democratic colleagues. It does not change in any material way existing law.

The bill has a simple purpose. However, its simple purpose becomes dangerous when it is proposed to be used as a vehicle for amendments to be offered which are highly controversial, and which involves the currency subject.

Clearing away all unnecessary verbiage, this measure simply gives to the Treasury Department the right to issue bonds up to $25,000,000,000, a sort of revolving fund. It reduces the present outstanding maximum from $28,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000. It does not in any way change the short-term indebtedness except instead of $10,000,000,000 being in notes and $10,000,000,000 in Treasury certificates, there is a maximum of $20,000,000,000 for any form of short-term indebtedness, which maximum exists at the present time, although divided as I have stated.

The bill is simple, the bill has a definite purpose in view, and there is nothing controversial about it. It is aimed to benefit the Government and the taxpayers, and I hope the bill will go through in the form in which it has been reported by the entire Committee on Ways and Means. [Applause.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the Dies amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PATMAN offers an amendment to the Dies amendment: After the last word in the Dies amendment add a comma and insert " not including currency deposited or held by the Treasury."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment is acceptable to the gentleman from Texas, and I am sure it is, because, as it is now, we have about $10,000,000,000 in actual money, but about one-half of it is hoarded or held by the Treasury of the United States and is never in circulation.

So if we do not put this provision in, the additional money will be hoarded as the other has been hoarded for many years.

The gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Kentucky say why not make it three and a half or five to one. The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is seeking to make a definite step in the right direction. We cannot have a perfect bill by amending it on the floor but we can make a step—a definite, positive step—in the right direction, and that is what we are attempting to do.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] says that it will interfere with the refunding operations. It will save the Government interest on money paid out.

Let the Government issue $5,000,000,000 in currency and no one will be paying a penny of interest on the money outstanding. The taxpayer will not be required to pay one penny of interest, but if you issue bonds and sell the bonds to the banks—a mere matter of bookkeeping—the banks give the Government credit and the Government pays interest on the credit.

The proposition of the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES, and that of Mr. McCORMACK is the difference in the interest rate.

The proposition of the gentleman from Texas will save an enormous sum of money.

I dislike to amend a bill like this, but you can stay here 25 years and you will never have the question directly brought to you. You can be here 25 years, under the rules of this House, and you will never have a chance to vote directly on the proposition. If you want to make a step in the right direction, do it by voting for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Oh, I know that Members will say, " If it had been brought up in the right way, I would have been glad to have voted for it." That is a good storm cellar. I do not know much about parliamentary procedure, but that is a good storm cellar with all modern conveniences.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman will agree that when I made the statement I could refer to evidence in the past in support of that statement.

Mr. PATMAN. Not when this question was being agitated. If this question were to die down and there was no agitation about it, no danger, possibly they would bring something up; but there is danger now, and the gentleman knows that no legislation will be brought out on the floor of this House that will permit this question to be voted on directly, and I ask the Members to vote for the Dies amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, if you want to kill this bill, then vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], supported by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]. The amendment that Mr. DIES has offered here has no relevancy to the subject matter of this bill at all. He is talking about expanding the currency in accordance with legislation heretofore passed, but the purport of the amendment is to expand the volume of the currency upon the basis of another form of Government credit. That is not in keeping with the legislation to which he refers, the gold-devaluation legislation, and so forth. Here is a bill designed to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to refinance to the very best advantage of the country the outstanding indebtedness as it becomes due, and if you are going to give him that authority this bill should be passed as it is presented here, and the amendment of the gentleman from Texas should not be adopted. I understand very well that my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], is opposed to Government bonds, or to the further issuance of Government bonds. I have no quarrel with him on that, but we have that system now, and you cannot change it in this bill at this time. This amendment does not propose to make that change, but if we are to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to do the things obviously necessary for him to do, then we must let this bill pass and vote down this amendment.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. What amount of bonds does this bill contemplate shall be issued in excess of the amount required to refund outstanding Government bonds?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Only such amount as shall be necessary to finance by bond issue the expenditures authorized by Congress in subsequent legislation.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Can the gentleman tell me approximately what that might be?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Any authorized expenditure which it might be necessary to meet by bonds can be made in that way under this bill up to the outside limit of $25,000,000,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course the Secretary of the Treasury cannot issue new bonds unless the Congress authorizes it.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I get that. In addition to that I should like to be informed, if I may, in respect to this. The gentleman made a statement a while ago that this is not the time to offer an amendment or to entertain an idea of stopping the issuance of interest-bearing Government bonds. If not, why not?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Because we have that system in force. We have these bonds. They must be taken care of. The only way that you can do it is under the provisions of the bill that we have here or a similar bill. If you want to change the entire system, come in at some subsequent time and from that time on proceed without the issuance of bonds.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the financial aspects of this amendment have been thoroughly discussed today by the gentlemen from Texas [Mr. PATMAN and Mr. DIES] and by my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], and by the committee. There is one thing that is very clear in my mind, however. I understand we have some $36,000,000,000 worth of tax-exempt securities in the United States. I do not believe these securities should be tax exempt. It seems to me that any move in the direction of a controlled expansion of the currency, any move which will allow us to get some new currency out against the $8,000,000,000 worth of gold that we have in the Treasury, would be a good thing, provided it does not go merely to the bankers of the country. We should get this money out amongst the people and get it in circulation. This amendment would not interfere with the financing of this $5,000,000,000 bill that we passed yesterday. It simply gives the Treasury, you might say, an option on a certain amount of bonds being issued and a certain amount of currency being issued, thereby cutting down the issuance of more billions in bonds upon which the Government must pay interest.

I am not going to take the time of the House further, except to say that I have read a great deal on this subject, and I have listened to some learned discussions on the matter, and I have finally come to the point where I am in favor of a controlled expansion of the currency. You might call it "mild inflation." I do not see why, every time the Government wants to finance its expenditures, we have to turn out ten or twelve or twenty or thirty million dollars' worth of bonds and turn them over to the bankers, pay them interest on them, and then in the final analysis the working people of the country and the consumers of the country pay that debt, and very few workers or farmers can afford to purchase any bonds.

I simply close by saying that I intend to vote for the Dies amendment as amended by the Patman amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. My good friends the gentlemen from Texas, Messrs. PATMAN and DIES, are presenting amendments, and these gentlemen at no place in this debate have given you any authority for or the effect of their amendments. Now, I ask this House seriously where do they get the figure "three times the currency"? Nobody from the Treasury gives authority for that figure; no one else does. They do not tell you how many bonds will be permitted to be issued if these amendments are adopted. With the Patman amendment to the Dies amendment I do not know whether there would be authorized more than the thirteen and one-half billion in bonds now outstanding or not. Under the Dies amendment, I could make a computation. I could take five and one-half billion dollars in currency and multiply it by three and get sixteen and one-half billion dollars. In other words, there could be bonds issued to the extent of sixteen and one-half billion dollars. With thirteen and a half billion dollars of long-time bonds outstanding, there would be $3,000,000,000 left. Now, where could we get the money to finance this authorization which we made yesterday of more than $4,000,000,000 for relief to the needy public works in furtherance of the President's recovery program?

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In just a minute. Then they have some sort of a "presto change" tying it in with the $800,000,000 of gold resulting from gold devaluation. One of the gentlemen said a small part of this gold is tied up with the stabilization fund. That is true. Two billion dollars is tied up in the stabilization fund. In other words, the larger part of this additional credit is already allocated.

It is a serious proposition when someone takes a lead pencil and writes the figure 3 in an amendment of this kind. It is time to stop and think whether it should be 3¼, 3½, 4, or 5 times, or what not, in order to effectuate the purpose of the authors of the amendments.

Mr. Chairman, I say in conclusion that there is no financial authority that justifies really serious consideration of such amendment by men who were elected to represent great districts in this Congress. It is a most dangerous thing to legislate in the dark.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 53, noes 97.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the Dies amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: On page 2, line 9, at the end of the section, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. Subsection (b) of section 5 and all of section 7 are hereby repealed."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the bill or to the section to which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin on the point of order.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion there is no justification for the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The bill now under consideration begins with the statement that "the Second Liberty Loan Act as amended is further amended as follows"; and all of the amendments in this bill are amendments to that particular act.

The two sections proposed to be repealed by my amendment are now in the Second Liberty Loan Act. They deal with bonds that are issued and to be issued under authority of the Second Liberty Loan Act. That act provides that bonds issued under the authority of that act shall be tax-exempt, and bonds so issued have been tax-exempt. Bonds and securities issued under the authority of this bill, should it be enacted, would be tax-exempt because of the provisions of section 7 and subsection (b) of section 5 of the Second Liberty Loan Act; and it is these two sections that my amendment proposes to repeal so that no longer will we have this system of tax-exempt bonds. It will apply to all of the $45,000,000,000 of bonds and Government securities authorized under the provisions of this bill. It directly affects this question by striking out the tax-exempt features. So I fail to see why it is not germane to this particular bill.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard briefly on the point of order, I may say in support of the argument offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts that the subject matter presented by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin relates to the question of revenue. This question is not involved in the pending measure. Therefore, the amendment is not germane to the bill as it is now presented, and I submit that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard further in connection with the point of order, and very briefly, the bill we are now considering proposes to amend section 5 in many places. My amendment further amends this section; it strikes it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin applies not only to bonds to be issued but to bonds that have been issued.

The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Chair having ruled, the gentleman from Wisconsin is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 2, line 9, after the word "time" and the period, insert "Provided further, That the annual rate of interest shall not exceed one-half of 1 percent on all issues of bonds, the proceeds of which are to be used to pay due indebtedness or to meet public expenditures authorized by law of the Government."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this amendment on substantially the same ground offered against the amendment just disposed of. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas is not germane to the bill; and the purposes to be accomplished by this amendment are in no way within the scope of the bill now presented to the House for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas on the point of order.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is a limitation on the bill. In other words, section 1 provides that bonds may be issued by the United States Government. This is a limitation stating that in the event the bonds are issued that the rate of interest shall not exceed one-half of 1 percent except, of course, where it is for a refunding operation, purely a refunding operation, in which case the rate of interest may exceed one-half of 1 percent. This is the effect of the amendment, and certainly I do not see why it should be questioned.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] if the first section applies to all bonds or just to bonds to be reissued?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. It is my understanding that the first section applies to all bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman's amendment is a limitation; therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, the 12 Federal Reserve banks now hold about $3,000,000,000 in Government bonds. These bonds were purchased with Government credit; and the Federal Reserve banks, after purchasing the bonds with our Government's credit, continues to charge the Government interest on the bonds.

We will not have the least trouble on earth financing the Government through the Federal Reserve Banking System as now constituted; and if there should be any question about it, we can pay the member banks $140,000,000 which they have invested and take over the Federal Reserve System and finance all the operations of the Government. The fundamental question involved here is: Are you going to continue to farm out to corporations owned by private corporations the greatest privilege on earth—issuing and distributing the Nation's credit—or are you willing to reassume that duty as required of you under the Constitution of the United States that you are sworn to uphold and defend? That is the question before you at the present time.

If you want this Congress to assume that privilege, vote for this amendment. Of course, this will not completely accomplish what we have in mind, I must confess, but it will be a long step in that direction. Remember that you cannot do everything in this House that you would like. There are certain rules to go by and very seldom will a bill come up here that will permit you to offer a germane amendment in order to do what you would really like to do. And furthermore, you are handicapped because there is a Rules Committee that will bring out a closed rule. Furthermore, you go into the Committee of the Whole House when they take down that mace. They are in Committee now. There is no way to have a record vote. Therefore this gives you another storm cellar. There are plenty of storm cellars with all modern conveniences for the Members of Congress who do not want to change our monetary system. It is so arranged that whenever you argue you should not do it in this way you are arguing in effect that it should not be done at all.

Mr. Chairman, I have other amendments that I propose to offer after this one, and I hope the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee will bear with me, will be patient and allow us to discuss this fundamental principle before the House.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas is endeavoring to change the system that we are operating under now, and the system that is now in existence, to that of issuing currency in lieu of bonds.

As stated in my previous remarks with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], we are not now quarreling with him upon that proposition. We have here at the present time a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out certain refunding and refinancing operations, together with the refinancing of certain other obligations which this Congress is imposing upon the Government. It is evident that we must continue under the system we now have until it is changed. We must, through the issuance of bonds, finance this program that is now being projected. You cannot finance it through bonds bearing interest not to exceed one-half of 1 percent. If you place that limitation upon these bonds, the only possible way in which you could market the bonds would be at a discount below the par or face value of the bonds.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas for a question.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact we have this morning $8,300,000,000 of gold in the Treasury, which would authorize the issuance of more than $20,000,000,000 in money and still have more than a 40-percent gold coverage?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I am not quarreling with the gentleman on that question, but that is not in this bill, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] knows that we cannot have that in this bill.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman knows very well that we will never have a better opportunity than this to make a long, positive, and definite step in that direction.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman from Texas knows that to put his amendment in this bill simply kills the legislation and will absolutely prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from carrying out these financial operations.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. What is the gentleman's opinion as to the effect which this amendment will have upon the financing of the relief bill that was passed yesterday?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It would make the carrying out of the provisions of that bill absolutely impossible unless the bonds were discounted below their par value.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 38, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PATMAN, Mr. BOILEAU, and Mr. DOUGHTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman withhold that just a minute? I have two amendments to offer and the gentleman from Wisconsin has an amendment to offer.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I modify the motion previously made. I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: On page 2, line 9, after the word "time", insert "Provided, That none of the interest on bonds issued under the authority of this act shall be exempt from income taxes."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. This is not a tax measure, it is not a revenue bill, and the purpose sought to be accomplished by the amendment does not come within the scope of the measure. It is certainly not germane to the bill or to this section, and I therefore make a point of order against it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I may state that this is simply a limitation upon the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the issuance of the bonds, prohibiting him from putting certain provisions in the bonds that the Congress does not want put in them.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing in this section pertaining to tax-exempt securities.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate that; but the section does provide for the issuance of bonds, and the amendment simply restricts the Secretary of the Treasury and prevents him from putting such tax-exempt provisions in the bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another section of this bill that contains language with respect to what the gentleman is now discussing, namely, a provision for tax exemption.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will indulge me, this is not a limitation but an affirmative direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: On page 2, line 9, after the word "time", insert "The provisions of this act shall not be construed as a policy of the Government to issue bonds instead of currency."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

This is not a measure for the issuance of currency, and quite a bit of the argument advanced so far has been entirely irrelevant to this measure. The amendment is certainly not germane to this bill or to this section. There is nothing here that declares any policy or embraces within its scope any phase of the issuance of currency.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Agricultural Adjustment Act that was passed in 1933 provides that the President may issue $3,000,000,000 in United States notes or Treasury notes. It provides further that he may issue as much as $3,000,000,000 in money and exchange this money for existing or outstanding Government obligations. Section 1 establishes a policy of the Government with respect to issuing more tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds, and we want to make it plain that this is not a nullification of the provisions now in existing law with regard to the issuance of currency instead.

The CHAIRMAN. The section of the bill under consideration relates to bonds and not to currency. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 2, line 9, after the word "time", insert "Provided further, That United States notes shall be issued to the extent of $5,000,000,000 and deposited in the general fund of the Treasury, to be used in paying the expenses and debts of the Government before another bond is issued by the Government."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment for substantially the same reasons and on the same grounds heretofore stated. This measure does not in any way relate to the issuance of currency or the issuance of notes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

This is a limitation. Section 1 provides that bonds may be issued, and this places a limitation to the effect that these bonds cannot be issued until $5,000,000,000 in United States notes has been issued. No one will be paying interest on the United States notes while they are outstanding, while interest will have to be paid on the bonds for every day they are outstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MASSINGALE: On page 1, section 1, strike out in line 8, all words after the word "authorized", all of line 9, up to the word "for" after the word "States", and insert: "For such amount only as may be equal to the outstanding bonds, but the amount required under provisions of this act in excess of the amount to refund outstanding bonds shall be raised by the issuance of Treasury notes not bearing interest by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order. I presume the point of order is that it is not germane.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Yes; certainly. The amendment seeks to bring something into the bill which is not within the scope of the measure at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, as the amendment pertains to the issuance of currency, while the section pertains to the issuance of bonds.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 5 is amended to read as follows: "In addition to the bonds and notes authorized by sections 1, 18, and 22 of this act, as amended, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, subject to the limitation imposed by section 21 of this act, to borrow from time to time, on the credit of the United States, for the purposes of this act, to provide for the purchase, redemption, or refunding, at or before maturity, of any outstanding bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness or Treasury bills of the United States, and to meet public expenditures authorized by law, such sum or sums as in his judgment may be necessary, and to issue therefor (1) certificates of indebtedness of the United States at not less than par (except as provided in section 20 of this act, as amended) and at such rate or rates of interest, payable at such time or times as he may prescribe; or, (2) Treasury bills on a discount basis and payable at maturity without interest."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, does this provision apply to baby bonds?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It does not.

Mr. PATMAN. Which provision does apply to baby bonds?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Section 6.

Mr. PATMAN. Under the present law, as I understand it, only $400,000,000 in Treasury notes may be issued legally, and this will open it up wide so long as it is within the limit of $25,000,000,000.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The present authorization is for $10,000,000,000 Treasury notes and $10,000,000,000 in Treasury certificates and Treasury bills.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Texas is right in saying that it is included in the $25,000,000,000 limit.

Mr. PATMAN. This will open it up wide for Treasury notes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The total is $20,000,000,000 for Treasury notes, certificates, and bills. As it is now it is divided between Treasury notes and Treasury bills. There is an authorization for $10,000,000,000 in notes and $10,000,000,000 in certificates and bills. This bill proposes to put the Treasury notes and the Treasury certificates and bills in one class with a total limit of $20,000,000,000.

Mr. PATMAN. And furthermore, as they are retired additional ones can be issued.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Under existing law, if they are retired, they cannot be reissued, but this will allow 25 billion to be reissued when retired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is right.

Mr. PATMAN. In regard to this section, I had other amendments prepared, but I think we have tested the will of the House, and I shall not insist on my other amendments.

You would be surprised at the number of Members of the House who want to vote directly on this proposition. They tell me that they cannot vote for my amendment, because they are afraid it will interfere with the refunding operations of the Government or interfere with relief. They are mistaken, but they have been told that. I believe that they would like to nationalize credit and take over the Federal Reserve banks, but they have various sundry reasons for voting against these amendments that are leading in that direction. I believe we have tested the sense of the House, and I believe that at least 60 percent of the Members of the House would change the present monetary system of issuing currency and bonds if they had an opportunity. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, is further amended by adding a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 21. The face amount of certificates of indebtedness and Treasury bills authorized by section 5 of this act, certificates of indebtedness authorized by section 6 of the First Liberty Bond Act, and notes authorized by section 18 of this act shall not exceed in the aggregate $20,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Unfortunately I have not heard the debate upon this bill. I understand that the members of the Ways and Means Committee on the Republican side have generally approved the bill, at least are not opposing it. Ordinarily that would mean to me a certificate of righteousness, and I could well afford to follow the Members on the Republican side of that great committee. It appears to me, however, that this is a pure inflationary measure. If it were merely setting up machinery to carry out the purpose of the House to turn $4,000,000,000 over to the President for relief purposes that would be one matter, but it apparently is an inflationary measure so that the Government can issue notes and bonds up to $45,000,000,000. At the present time we have issued only up to twenty-eight billion. If the bill merely permitted the Government to issue up to thirty-four billion to take care of what the House proposed to do by its action yesterday, I might not vote against the bill.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I think the gentleman is in error. The authorization at the present time under existing law is $28,000,000,000 of bonds and a total of $20,000,000,000 of Treasury notes and bills. This proposes to put an outside limit of $25,000,000,000 on bonds and the same $20,000,000,000 on notes.

Mr. FISH. That means a total of $45,000,000 and that is what I said, but they do not have to come back to the Congress to issue these bonds and notes. You place in the hands of the Executive that power. This is an inflationary measure taking away the power from Congress to control the issuance of bonds and certificates.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I am sorry, I have only 5 minutes. I may be the only Member of the House who is going to vote against it, but I propose to vote against it because it takes that power away from the Congress and gives it to the Executive to issue these bonds and notes, about thirteen billion more than they have the right to issue at the present time.

What I also want to point out in these few minutes is this: The administration talks about the credit of the United States and how sound it is. As I told you the other day, it will remain sound just as long as you can issue Treasury notes totally tax exempt, so that the banks, the big corporation, the big interests, and wealthy men of America can buy these Treasury notes and escape taxation. It is a perfectly apparent proposition and creates a vicious circle. The credit of the United States will be good just as long as we throw away that power of taxation affecting the wealthy people and let them come in and buy these notes and bonds, principally the notes that are wholly tax exempt, and so escape paying 60 percent on the higher incomes and not pay any income taxes by merely buying the bonds and notes.

The only policy of the Democratic Party today—and I want the people to understand it—the only one we know about, is borrowing, more borrowing, and still more borrowing. That is the only policy that has been presented to Congress. This bill will not help restore confidence in America; it will not help to restore confidence in industry, commerce, or trade, or among business men, small or large. This bill carries out the main policy of the Democratic Party to borrow more billions, still more billions, and yet more billions of American dollars without making any provision to raise revenue or levy taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to answer the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], whom I personally respect, but who has shown himself to be possessed of what might be considered as a partisan mind in his discussion of certain features of this bill. I am frank in stating that there are occasions when I am possessed of a partisan mind, but there are some limits to it. I am not going to close my eyes to the truth and take the floor of this House and undertake to say that a bill intends something that a plain and simple reading of the bill shows it does not contemplate. My friend from New York [Mr. FISH] is a keen gentleman. He is able. If he has read the bill, he knows that the bill does not mean that the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury can borrow ten or fifteen billion dollars more by merely issuing bonds, notes, and Treasury certificates. There is a $20,000,000,000 maximum now on notes and Treasury certificates; and this bill does not change that maximum. It merges both of them into one group with the same limitation as to amount. Under existing law there is a $28,000,000,000 maximum on bonds, and the bill provides for a $25,000,000,000 maximum. The maximum of all at the present time is $48,000,000,000. This bill makes the maximum of all $45,000,000,000. Nobody can issue bonds or Treasury notes or certificates at will. There must be authority in law for the Secretary to issue additional bonds and notes increasing our outstanding debt. There must be legislation passed by the Congress authorizing the issuance. The broad question of the advisability of borrowing on notes and bonds I shall not discuss at this time, as it is not relevant to this bill. When my friend from New York makes a statement that the bill gives blanket authority for the promiscuous issuance of bonds without authority of law, he is incorrect; and I cannot permit such remarks to be incorporated in the RECORD and go out to the country as another scarecrow of a condition that does not exist.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I have just listened to the self-appointed spokesman of the Republican Party, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] on this all-important question of tax-exempt securities. He admits that under our present system the great bulk of the wealth of this country is permitted to find a storm cellar in tax-exempt securities and thereby escape its part of the burdens of taxation, but he studiously avoids suggesting the logical remedy.

We find ourselves today in the midst of a paradoxical depression that is without a parallel in all history. We live in the richest country in all the world. With a gentle climate, a fertile soil, and an abundant rainfall, we produce every agricultural commodity necessary for the maintenance of mankind. Our natural resources are unlimited, and the inventive genius of America has given to us a control over the forces of nature never before attained in all the history of the human race.

We have more wheat, more corn, more hogs, more cotton—in fact, more of all agricultural commodities, as well as manufactured products—than the American people can use. We have been destroying livestock, reducing grain production, and plowing under cotton, as well as curtailing the production of manufactured articles, and yet millions of our people are hungry and other millions are insufficiently clothed.

Bread lines are lining the streets of our principal cities, while farmers are having their homes sold from under them for debts or confiscated for taxes. Practically every individual who owns a home, or who tries to own a home, is burdened with debts and taxes that he finds himself unable to pay. Practically every county, every municipality, every school district, every drainage district, every road district, every State, and even the Federal Government itself, is burdened with debts and bonded with obligations that it seems almost impossible to pay. And yet we scarcely owe a single dollar beyond the confines of the United States. But, on the other hand, billions of dollars are owed to our country by other nations and other billions are owed by foreign countries and foreign individuals to private individuals and private enterprises in America.

What is the trouble? Why all this financial distress in the richest land in all the world, practically the only country that does not owe any debts beyond its own borders?

It is maldistribution of wealth. We are cursed with a system of economic feudalism that has overawed, browbeaten, or controlled by insidious methods or continuous pressure the forces of democracy and so dominated the legislative program of this country during the last 60 years that it has concentrated the wealth of this Nation into the hands of a few families.

We are told that less than 10 percent of our population now own more than 90 percent of our wealth. They are pyramiding their fortunes and passing them on down from generation to generation, even increasing them by the natural accretion of interest accumulations, while the rest of the 120,000,000 Americans are literally grinding their lives out to even meet the interest they have to pay.

They began by accumulating vast fortunes out of the Civil War. They accumulated more through a high protective tariff, which levied tribute upon every human being in America. Through this method they sapped the economic vitality of the agricultural States, using the powers of government through Federal pensions and political patronage to hold enough of those States in line to guarantee them supreme control.

More fortunes were accumulated and therefore more wealth concentrated through a manipulation of public utilities, gambling on the stock market, overcapitalization, sale of watered stocks, and exorbitant service charges that the people were compelled to pay. They even manipulated the currency by expanding through the Federal Reserve System and contracting in the same way—raising prices for a period until people adjusted themselves to higher price levels, incurred debts, fixed their tax rates, and floated bonds for necessary improvements—then contracted that currency, drove down prices, and are now demanding that those debts be paid with inflated dollars and on deflated commodity prices.

The people have about reached the limit of their endurance. They know there is something wrong with our present system, and they are beginning to realize what it is. They are demanding and are going to continue to demand that there be a redistribution of the wealth of this country in some way. That can be done in two ways: Either by taxation or through a disastrous revolution. A revolution would not redistribute wealth, but would only destroy it, and probably destroy our civilization as well.

There is a sane and orderly way to meet this question, and that is to place the burden of taxation where it belongs—on the ones most able to pay.

If you will let me write one section of the tax bill, I will balance the Budget, pay a reasonable old-age pension, pay off the soldiers' adjusted-service certificates, and pay off the national debt in 25 years. I would place the same burden of taxes on the rich and opulent in proportion to their wealth that we are now placing upon the poor.

Today, the man most heavily burdened with taxes is the farmer and the home owner, whose entire profits and invariably the equity in whose property is taken to pay his local taxes.

The reports of the Bureau of Internal Revenue show that in 1921 there were 21 individuals in the United States with incomes of $1,000,000 a year. That was the year the Republican Party took control. By 1929 there were 513 individuals with incomes of $1,000,000 a year. In 1921 there were 444,000 individuals reporting incomes of $1,000 or less, and in 1928 that number had dwindled to 114,000. The ones making $1,000 or less had dropped off 75 percent, while the ones in the million-dollar class had multiplied 25 times. There has never been such a concentration of wealth since the world began. The rich grew richer and the poor, poorer.

Today, as I said, less than 10 percent of our people own more than 90 percent of our wealth. There is only one way to reach them, and that is through inheritance taxes, since many of them have their fortunes invested in tax-exempt securities and cannot be reached in any other way.

But men who represent that element in Congress are urging us to prohibit the further issuance of tax-exempt securities. That is the plan of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. However desirable that may be, it would not reach the ones whose wealth is now invested in tax-exempt securities, but, on the other hand, it would raise the values of those outstanding securities and increase the wealth of the ones who hold them.

But these gentlemen who have always represented the predatory interests of the country, and who now vociferously proclaim their desire to prevent the further issuance of tax-exempt securities, scrupulously refrain from advocating the real remedy, and that is the raising of inheritance taxes and making the ones who own these securities now bear their part of the burdens of government.

Our inheritance taxes are ridiculous. They are infinitesimal compared with the taxes which the average American has to bear.

Just before the passage of the last tax bill I secured copies of the inheritance-tax rates for both France and Great Britain and compared them with the inheritance-tax rates in the United States at that time. I am going to insert a table containing the tax rates of the United States, Great Britain, and France in the RECORD at this point, so that the Members of the House and others who read the RECORD may make their own comparisons.

There have been a few changes in these rates, but this table shows the correct rates as they existed at the time these figures were compiled.

The table is as follows:

| Net estate before exemption | Tax in United States | Tax in Great Britain | Tax in France |
|---|---|---|---|
| $1,000 | | $10 | $65.88 |
| $5,000 | | 150 | 539.27 |
| $10,000 | | 300 | 1,296.47 |
| $15,000 | | 450 | 2,226.47 |
| $25,000 | | 1,000 | 6,942.58 |
| $50,000 | | 2,500 | 16,160.98 |
| $100,000 | $1,500 | 9,000 | 36,997.78 |
| $150,000 | 5,000 | 18,000 | 59,197.78 |
| $200,000 | 9,500 | 28,000 | 81,589.78 |
| $300,000 | 19,500 | 51,000 | 130,789.78 |
| $400,000 | 30,500 | 76,000 | 180,373.78 |
| $500,000 | 42,500 | 105,000 | 234,373.78 |
| $600,000 | 55,500 | 138,000 | 288,373.78 |
| $800,000 | 84,500 | 200,000 | 396,373.78 |
| $1,000,000 | 117,500 | 270,000 | 504,373.78 |
| $2,000,000 | 315,500 | 660,000 | 1,046,293.78 |
| $3,000,000 | 553,500 | 1,110,000 | 1,634,293.78 |
| $5,000,000 | 1,149,500 | 2,050,000 | 2,823,253.78 |
| $10,000,000 | 3,094,500 | 5,100,000 | 5,823,253.78 |

You will note from this table that if a man died in the United States and left an estate of $100,000, his estate would pay a tax of $1,500. In England it would pay $9,000; and in France, $36,997.78.

In this country an estate of $500,000 would pay an inheritance tax of $42,500; in England, $105,000; and in France, $234,373.78.

In this country an estate of $1,000,000 would pay $117,500; in England it would pay $270,000; and in France, $504,373.78.

Men talk about taxing the profits of the next war. I want to adequately tax the profits of the last war. Then there will not be any next war, at least in your day and mine.

The people of large fortunes, as a rule, are the ones who invest their money in tax-exempt securities. They are the ones who seek and find that storm cellar. They are the ones who made fortunes out of the war, coining their millions out of the blood and tears of the suffering men, women, and children of the world. They are the ones who made their millions out of the tariff by levying tribute upon every farmer and every laborer; in fact, on every man, woman, and child under the flag. They are the ones that we must reach if we ever expect to balance the Budget and meet the responsibilities of this Government and redistribute the wealth of the Nation, so as to give the rising generation a chance in this world. [Applause.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

There is so much being said about tax-exempt securities that I hope we get our definitions straight.

Many of us are opposed to tax-exempt securities, I repeat, for an entirely different reason than the reason which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is opposed to tax-exempt securities. If I thought our monetary system would not be changed at the same time, I think the best interests of this country would probably be served by allowing it to remain as it is, and I will tell you the reason for it. Personal property is taxed where it is located. A United States Government bond or a Government note or certificate is personal property, and when that note or bond is purchased from the Government and deposited in New York City or Pittsburgh, Pa., or Chicago, Ill., that is where it is taxed. Gentlemen like the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], representing a great district in New York, can tell his banker friends there, "I am in favor of eliminating the issuance of further tax-exempt securities because the Government will have to pay an additional interest rate to you, and that will enable you to pay the tax, and when you pay the tax it will go to the city of New York, it will go to the different counties of New York, the road districts and school districts, and other political subdivisions." In other words, the people all over the Nation would be paying an additional tax rate in order to support the larger cities in this country where those bonds are actually physically located and where they will be taxed.

The reason I do not want any more tax-exempt securities is because I want to issue currency instead of bonds. We have $41,000,000,000 in deposits in the banks. We have less than $1,000,000,000 in money in the banks to pay those depositors.

I feel that it should be made up in Government credit in some way, if not in actual physical money in that which is the same as actual physical money upon which no one will be paying interest while it is outstanding. There is the difference between us; and do not go off now on the theory that we should change the tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds without first considering who is going to get it and who is going to pay it. Will your district, a country district, get anything out of it? Not a thing in the world; but the people in that district will have to pay the additional taxes which will be necessary to pay more interest in order to pay the rate of interest required by the New York banks so they can pay their local taxes. With proper safeguards I am opposed to the issuance of more tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds if our present bond system continues. However, I much prefer currency to all bonds.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. In what States do they assess Government bonds?

Mr. PATMAN. They do not assess them at all.

Mr. CHURCH. What State laws assess Government bonds?

Mr. PATMAN. That is what we are talking about. They cannot be assessed. But if you remove the limitation the States will remove the limitation and tax them for all State and local purposes; certainly they will.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. In connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi on the question of the inheritance tax, I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is not a fact that under our present inheritance and gift taxes, attorneys have found a way by putting money in trust a couple of years before a man dies and the beneficiary escapes the inheritance and gift taxes?

Mr. PATMAN. That is my understanding. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], I understand, is chairman of a subcommittee that has been investigating loopholes in our tax laws; and I have been told that some shocking disclosures have been made along the line suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. The Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, is further amended by adding a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 22. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is authorized to issue, from time to time, through the Postal Service or otherwise, bonds of the United States to be known as 'United States Savings Bonds.' The proceeds of the savings bonds shall be available to meet any public expenditures authorized by law and to retire any outstanding obligations of the United States bearing interest or issued on a discount basis. The various issues and series of the savings bonds shall be in such forms, shall be offered in such amounts within the limits of section 1 of this act, as amended, and shall be issued in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions consistent with paragraphs B and C hereof, and including any restriction on their transfer, as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe.

"(b) Each savings bond shall be issued on a discount basis to mature not less than 10 nor more than 20 years from the date as of which the bond is issued, and provision may be made for redemption before maturity upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the issue price of savings bonds and the terms upon which they may be redeemed prior to maturity shall be such as to afford an investment yield not in excess of 3 percent per annum, compounded semiannually. The denominations of savings bonds shall be in terms of their maturity value and shall not be less than $25. It shall not be lawful for any one person at any one time to hold savings bonds issued during any one calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $10,000 (maturity value).

"(c) The provisions of section 7 of this act, as amended (relating to the exceptions from taxation both as to principal and as to interest of bonds issued under authority of sec. 1 of this act, as amended), shall apply as well to the savings bonds; and, for the purposes of determining taxes and tax exemptions, the increment in value represented by the difference between the price paid and the redemption value received (whether at or before maturity) shall be considered as interest. The savings bonds shall not bear the circulation privilege.

"(d) The appropriation for expenses provided by section 10 of this act and extended by the act of June 16, 1921 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 761), shall be available for all necessary expenses under this section; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to advance, from time to time, to the Postmaster General from such appropriation such sums as are shown to be required for the expenses of the Post Office Department, in connection with the handling of the bonds issued under this section.

"(e) The board of trustees of the Postal Savings System is authorized to permit, subject to such regulations as it may from time to time prescribe, the withdrawal of deposits on less than 60 days' notice for the purpose of acquiring savings bonds which may be offered by the Secretary of the Treasury; and in such cases to make payment of interest to the date of withdrawal whether or not a regular interest-payment date. No further original issue of bonds authorized by section 10 of the act approved June 25, 1910 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 760), shall be made after July 1, 1935.

"(f) At the request of the Secretary of the Treasury the Postmaster General, under such regulations as he may prescribe, shall require the employees of the Post Office Department and of the Postal Service to perform, without extra compensation, such fiscal agency services as may be desirable and practicable in connection with the issue, delivery, safe-keeping, redemption, and payment of the savings bonds."

Committee amendment: Page 5, line 7, strike out the words "paragraphs B and C" and insert in lieu thereof "subsections (b) and (c)."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that this amendment and the other committee amendments are simply clerical corrections.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 2, strike out in the parentheses the word "exceptions" and insert in lieu thereof the word "exemptions."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, during the war Liberty bonds were sold on the installment plan. People all over the country bought these bonds as a patriotic duty. They were told they were sending their money to war instead of going themselves. When the war was over the Liberty bonds that had been sold to the public were not supported by the financial interests of the country and the bonds dropped in value to 95, 90, 87, and even down to 85. The large banks of the country sent agents all over this Nation and purchased those bonds for as low as 85 cents on the dollar. Then the bonds rose in value because they had got into what is known as "strong hands." When they got into strong hands they went back to 100 cents on the dollar.

The veterans, the soldiers in the Army, were told not only that they should pay for their insurances and for other charges against them during the war but after making all these deductions for dependents, for insurance, and these other charges they were told if they had any money that it was their duty to purchase a Liberty bond; and if they did not, there was considerable pressure brought to bear against them. They were referred to as slackers, despite the fact they wore the uniform of their country. They purchased these bonds on the installment plan. They had to take their loss just like the other people and sell their bonds for 85 cents, and in some cases for less than that, on the dollar.

Now, remember this: You are designating a certain bond issue here. This bond issue is going to be widely distributed. No one person can own more than $10,000 of the issue. If these bonds are not supported by strong financial interests, who is going to keep the price up?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We have the Postal Savings bonds and the bonds here provided for are practically the same.

Mr. PATMAN. No; I beg to differ with the gentleman from Washington. You can get your money 100 cents on the dollar on the Postal Savings bond. There is considerable difference between those bonds and the bonds provided for in this bill.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The United States Government is obligated to pay interest compounded semiannually not in excess of 3 percent on the Postal Savings bonds. The Government is required to redeem them at par.

Mr. PATMAN. This does not require that; there is no such requirement here.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes; it does require it.

Mr. PATMAN. Where is it?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The Treasury will redeem them.

Mr. PATMAN. This bill, I say, does not require the Secretary of the Treasury to do it. There is no language in here requiring that; it is merely permitted if the Secretary of the Treasury desires to so redeem them.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Texas is in error on that.

Mr. PATMAN. Oh, no. These people are being placed in the position where they will not have these bonds supported by strong hands, by strong financial interests. There will be every incentive for certain interests to whip down and beat down the prices of these bonds, buy them up, and run the price back. The only redeeming feature is that one person cannot buy more than $10,000 of bonds issued in one single year.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from Texas in his remarks stated that in connection with the sale of Liberty Bonds pressure was brought to bear on people to buy them. I understand the Secretary of the Treasury now has not and does not expect to request anyone to put any pressure on anyone else to purchase these bonds.

Mr. PATMAN. May I say to the gentleman that I am in sympathy with the distribution of small bonds. I am not talking against that feature, but I want proper safeguards put around the law to protect the people who do invest their money in them.

During the last administration of the Honorable Ogden Mills as Secretary of the Treasury he authorized the issuance of baby bonds, but all of the New York banks objected, and they were withdrawn. Now, you are coming back and doing in a way what he withdrew, which is all right if you properly protect the people. There is something else in there that is hazardous for the investor. All of the banks purchasing other bonds, including the Federal Reserve banks, may deposit the bonds with the Government and receive new money in return. They cannot do that with these bonds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, these bonds then will not be as much in demand. They are not so good unless properly safeguarded either by law or by regulations. In connection with all other issues you may use them to better advantage. You say to the bank on all other issues, "You are a favored son of our Government. We will let you take $10,000 worth of the bonds and deposit them with the Government and get $10,000 in money in return." Of course, I refer to a Federal Reserve bank. There is no tax, only the payment of 27 cents per $1,000 for the cost of printing the money.

Any national bank in this Nation can buy all other bonds that pay up to 3⅜-percent interest, and there are a few outside of that, and none very soon, and they may deposit those bonds up to the amount of the capital stock of the institution and receive new money in return. But in connection with these particular bonds you are putting a penalty on the holders because they are not as good as the other bonds. There will not be the demand there would be for the other bonds, and they will not be supported by the financial interests.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Upon what does the gentleman from Texas base the statement that these bonds will depreciate in value in the market?

Mr. PATMAN. I base it upon the fact that in connection with bonds which are generally held by the people and not supported by the strong financial interests, there is an inducement for those particular issues of bonds to be whipped and beat down in value by the strong financial interests, and when the value of the bonds go down they are bought up as much as possible.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. On page 6, line 9, of the bill, there is this provision:

> The saving bonds shall not bear the circulation privilege.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. BOILEAU moves that the Committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I made two unsuccessful attempts to offer an amendment that would discontinue the practice of issuing tax-exempt securities. I find no fault with the ruling of the Chair on the question of germaneness to the bill and to the sections to which I offered the two amendments. I do want to say, however, that we have heard much in the last 4 years about tax-exempt securities, and it seems to me it is about time the Ways and Means Committee or some other committee of this House bring in a bill which will prohibit the practice of issuing tax-exempt securities and permit us to vote on the question.

In discussing a point of order a short time ago the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky suggested that there was in this bill a place where such an amendment would be germane; that there was a place in the bill where an amendment could be offered restricting the issuance of tax-exempt securities. I understood him to make that statement, and we had considerable colloquy with reference to that matter. I am going to admit that he was absolutely accurate.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. May I say to the gentleman that he does me too much honor. It was the chairman who made the statement.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from Kentucky suggested that I might read the bill. May I say to the distinguished gentleman that I have read the bill, and I find at the top of page 6, paragraph (c), where such an amendment would be germane. In other words, it would be germane to knock out the tax-exempt feature of the baby bonds but not the big bonds. The bill is in such shape that we could knock out the tax-exempt feature of the small bonds which will be sold to the small fellow, the one who will buy a $25 or $50 bond, but there is no provision which will enable us to offer an amendment striking out the tax-exempt feature of the big bonds and the big bondholders.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. May I say to the gentleman that many Members share views similar to the gentleman.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate that fact and I am wondering why. In all the 4 years I have served here we have heard speech after speech denouncing the policy of issuing tax-exempt bonds, but we cannot get the matter before the House.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Was the gentleman present when that question was raised in general debate on this bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. I was.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. And when it was pointed out to another gentleman raising the question, that several measures of that type are now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; and the gentleman said that twice before the Ways and Means Committee had reported out such bills.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Then why can we not get a vote in this House on such a measure and record the opinion of the Members on that question? I am satisfied that if some such measure were presented to this House it would pass on a roll-call vote two to one. I believe there is a very strong sentiment in favor of that change of policy.

I believe it is about time that the leadership of this House should be fair with a vast majority of the Members who want such legislation reported out and action taken at the earliest possible date.

I regret very much that in this bill the only opportunity that is afforded to strike out the tax-exemption feature of these Government securities is with reference to these baby bonds. For one I should like to have a chance to stop this practice with reference to the big bonds and the bondholders who hold more than $10,000 worth of Government securities that are now tax exempt. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said in reference to baby bonds. If we are going to issue bonds and if we are committed to the course of defraying the expenditures of the Government by the issuance of bonds, it is preferable to issue bonds in small denominations so as to give the rank and file of the American people an opportunity to buy the bonds and in this manner obtain some benefit from the tax-exempt phases of it, rather than to continue to issue bonds in large denominations.

I think it is sometimes forgotten that the reason that tax-exempt bonds are bought is because when you increase your income tax and when the tax burden becomes heavy, those possessing vast capital and large means resort to the purchase of tax-exempt bonds in order to escape the obligations of government.

During normal times when the income tax is not high and when the other burdens of government are not great, it is usually estimated that the Government, by using the tax-exempt feature of Government bonds, is able to obtain the use of money at a lower rate of interest, but it should not be forgotten that the manner in which we are floating bonds in the United States is not by taking from the American people a given amount of purchasing power and transferring that purchasing power to the Government. The operation that we usually pursue is to enable banks, by a bookkeeping transaction, to artificially create a purchasing power of, say $4,00,000,000, and enable those banks or those interests who are financing the bonds to escape taxation. The inducement for them to buy the bonds is great, on account of the high tax rate or the increasing income tax.

By confining the issue to small bonds, the rank and file can purchase bonds and they are relieved to that extent of the burdens of taxation. But, Mr. Chairman, we might as well recognize the fact that we cannot continue the issuance of these bonds. To merely increase income taxes in an effort to make those of large means bear their proportionate share of the burdens of this depression is nullified by our action in issuing tax-exempt bonds. We are transferring the burden of this entire economic crisis to the people who are least able to bear the burden, and not only this, but we are promoting inflation, because we are not taking purchasing power away from people who now have it and transferring it to the Government, but, by a process of bookkeeping, we are artificially creating a purchasing power that is abnormal and in the course of time will create the very inflation that gentlemen who oppose currency inflation are always crying against, with the inevitable, subsequent deflation. The consequence is that those who cry aloud against currency inflation, by their votes in Congress, are voting for a different type of inflation, it is true. They are voting for an inflation that inures to the benefit of a privileged few, an inflation that enables those of vast means to reap the benefit of the inflation in the form of tax exemption.

The point I want to make specifically, however, is this. It is a virtue in this bill that it provides for financing these operations by making it possible for men of small means or moderate means to participate in the tax exemption, for in doing so, you relieve the masses of the people to that extent of the burdens of taxation.

It is amusing to me to hear gentlemen cry aloud that it would be inflationary to issue currency backed up by adequate reserves. Why, bank notes have been issued in this country, or were issued prior to the Federal Reserve Act. We permitted the banks to issue their bank notes and in doing so they borrowed the capital of people without paying any interest on it. A bank note was the act of a bank in obtaining the benefit of the savings of other people without paying interest. I am not advocating fiat money. I merely propose that we utilize the excess gold valuation to lighten the crushing burden of public indebtedness.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 13, strike out "sec." and insert "secs. 760 and".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 16, after the word "they", strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall", and in line 19 strike out the period after word "semiannually" and insert "and at face value."

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, this section provides for the payment of the small bonds before maturity. I want to provide in this section that when these bonds are paid before maturity they shall be paid at cost value, or, in other words, what the purchaser paid for them. The bonds will be purchased by poor people; they are very small bonds, to run for 10 to 20 years. The purchaser may encounter hard times and need the money. There is a provision that they can cash the bond before maturity. These bonds will be sold or traded in for motor cars, clothing, and so forth, and the purchaser will sell them on the market at a discount—no telling at what price. The price will go down on the market and poor people may have to sell their holdings at much less than they paid for them unless they are protected. I think this amendment ought to be adopted to allow them to return the bond to the Post Office and get cost for them, plus accrued interest.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Let us see if we understand the gentleman. These bonds are to be sold at certain prices, and when they mature they are worth the face value of the bonds. The gentleman understands that.

Mr. LORD. I do.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman does not mean to advance the proposition here that a man may buy a bond and the next week or the next day go back and get the full value of the bond?

Mr. LORD. He should get exactly what he paid for it.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. He purchased the bond with the understanding that it would be worth its face value at a certain time. If the gentleman seeks to provide that he may secure the face value before the time agreed upon, he is getting something that he did not pay for.

Mr. LORD. No; he should not get the face of the bond but he should get what he paid for the bond.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. But the gentleman's amendment does not provide for that. It provides that he shall get something that he did not pay for.

Mr. LORD. He should get his money back, what he paid for it, plus interest accrued.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The face value of the bond would be much larger than the redemption price a short time after the purchase.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Why does not the gentleman use a concrete example such as was given before the committee? For instance, a man buys a bond for $78, and if he keeps that bond until it matures, he will get $100 for it, or, if he keeps it half the time, he will get half the price between $78 and $100.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 6, line 25, after the word "Treasury", insert the following: "Provided, That with respect to time deposits a similar privilege shall be extended to all banks and banking institutions which operate under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the members of the committee for just a moment and state a hypothetical case, I think that they will agree with the substance of this amendment. Let us take the case of John Jones, who tomorrow deposits $500 in a bank and $500 in the Postal Savings System. Under the old law governing Postal Savings, he cannot withdraw the money until after 60 days. He, however, will have privilege by the terms of the proposal in this bill. Under the operations of the banking laws under which almost every State bank and member of the Federal Reserve System now operates, if he puts $500 in the bank on time deposit, he cannot under any circumstances get his money until the end of that deposit period. He may even waive the interest, but he cannot get his money. I had a number of such instances, and took it up with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and I believe that, upon the advice of their general counsel, they are seeking to change that condition so as to eliminate the disparity between the little country banks and the Postal Savings institutions that you find in almost every country post office. So far as the average purchaser of these small bonds is concerned, here is the way it would operate: If he had $500 in the Postal Savings, under the terms of the bill, he could withdraw it and buy these bonds. If he had another $500 on time deposit, he would have to leave it there for 90 days, or for whatever the time period might be, before he could buy one of these bonds, if he so desired.

Let me read this language from the bill:

The Board of Trustees of the Postal Savings System is authorized to permit, subject to such regulations as it may from time to time prescribe, the withdrawal of deposits on less than 60 days' notice, etc.

Deposits in what? In the Postal Savings System. So that John Jones can take his money out of the Postal Savings System and buy these bonds, but he cannot take his money out of the bank if it is there on a time deposit and buy the same bond.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from Tennessee was referring to the fact that no further issues of Postal Savings bonds would be had.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is what I had in mind. I misunderstood the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This amendment goes to the substance of paragraph (e).

It is my observation that there has been too little coordination between the Treasury Department and the Postal Savings System, with the result that too often regulations and rules are promulgated which operate as a penalty on the small banking institutions of the country and create decided advantages in behalf of such Government institutions as Postal Savings. This is decidedly unfair. I hold no brief for banks or bankers as such, but I do believe they are entitled to fair and equitable treatment.

Just now virtually every bank in the Nation, whether a State bank or a member of the Federal Reserve System, operates under the provisions of Regulation Q of the Federal Reserve System. This regulation closely governs time deposits and says to a bank that it can under no circumstances relinquish a time deposit until after the expiration of the time period. When folks undertake to deposit money in a bank on a time certificate and find they cannot withdraw their money at will, they at once rush to the post office and place it with Uncle Sam. The bank not only loses a customer but it creates in the mind of the people in communities everywhere the notion that bankers are imposing regulations and rules relative to deposit and withdrawal that imbreed suspicion in the minds of the people. This is entirely unfair. Moreover, it is unfair for Uncle Sam to set up a competing business and by law and authority resolve advantages in behalf of such agencies as Postal Savings. What is fair for one should be fair for the other. No question of safety is involved. Under the Federal deposit insurance regulations money is equally safe in banks as in Postal Savings, and I submit that if rules and regulations now obtaining are in anyway modified or altered, so far as Postal Savings are concerned, banks and banking institutions are fully entitled to the same benefits. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I press upon the committee the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 5, line 19, after the word "semiannually", insert a comma and the following: "And shall be redeemed by the Secretary of the Treasury at par or purchase price and accrued interest, after 90 days' written notice to the Secretary of the Treasury of the holder's intentions."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, this will not cause the Government any trouble or inconvenience. At the same time it will keep these bonds at par value. The Secretary of the Treasury will receive 90 days' written notice before he will have to take up one of them.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman expect the bond to be at par value when the interest has been calculated on the face value of the bond?

Mr. PATMAN. That is a matter of definition.

Under this bill the Secretary may issue bonds at par value or he may discount them, whichever way he wants. Anyone who holds one of these bonds, if he pays $80 for it on a discount basis, should be allowed to give written notice for 90 days to the Secretary of the Treasury, and receive that $80 back, with the accrued interest, and not 100 percent face value.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Why not make it payable to start with?

Mr. PATMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It would be just the same thing exactly.

Mr. PATMAN. Oh, no, it would not. You see, people will put their money into these bonds, and we want to protect the people. We want to assure them that they are not going down below the value they should be.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Suppose they go above?

Mr. PATMAN. That is all right; let them get the benefit of it, just as all Liberty bonds are above par now. The gentleman is not objecting to the banks collecting that increase now. There is no objection to that. If he is entitled to a premium on it, let him have it. The Government will not have to pay the premium, but protects him from having it go down, because they will be so generally distributed all over this Nation that if they are not properly protected by strong financial interests there is every incentive to beat down the price.

Now, the Government issues 90-day notes all the time, and they are all right. This will have the same effect, except that they will not have to go through that same procedure every 90 days. They will remain outstanding until the holder gives 90 days' written notice. It will be a great convenience to the Treasury. It will protect the people who buy these bonds in small quantities, and it will not cost the Government a penny extra.

I think the chairman of this committee should agree to this amendment, because it protects the investor. You are going out to the little fellows over the country. They are unorganized. They have no big interests to look after them. They have no lawyers and they have no lobbyists down here looking after their interests. They are unorganized and unprotected. Therefore, it is our duty as Members of Congress, representing those people, to place the proper safeguards around their interests. That is what we are doing, and at the same time it will not be an inconvenience in any way to the Treasury of the United States, because 90 days' written notice is required. These will be good bonds. They will remain outstanding until maturity, but this will be protecting the people. I think the members of this committee should agree to the amendment. Let us protect the rights of the people on these bonds.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If you make these 90-day bonds, does the gentleman think the Government will pay as high a rate of interest as if you make them 10-year bonds, as provided in the bill, and if the bonds bear a lower rate of interest, because of the short term, will it not be a less attractive investment to the small investor, who may want to sell it to someone else?

Mr. PATMAN. That does not answer the objection I have, that the general public, unorganized and unprotected, should have their rights safeguarded. That is all I am asking.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I know the gentleman will agree that we all want to accomplish the purpose he has in mind, but I want to point out one distinction, that these are not considered in the strict sense investment bonds. They are savings bonds. The whole plan is based upon the idea that the people will put their money in these bonds as a savings proposition.

Mr. PATMAN. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. There can be no doubt that this Government of ours will certainly give every man his money when he is entitled to it.

Mr. PATMAN. Knowing the gentleman from Tennessee as I do, I am sure he is willing to protect the interests of the people. That is all I am trying to do. I hope the gentleman will vote to adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] be voted down. It is not in harmony with the provisions and purpose of the bill. This bill proposes 10-year bonds; and if we make a 90-day proposition out of it, we will simply take out from under this particular kind of bond the proposal that the Treasury has in providing this savings fund for the investor, and also helping to raise the necessary revenues for carrying on the emergency operations of the Government.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I take it that the provision after the word "provided" is much more favorable to the investor than the provision offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], because that says "any time."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; when the Treasury wants to redeem, it pays all the money paid plus all accrued interest.

Mr. PATMAN. But will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. That is up to the Secretary of the Treasury. That is not mandatory.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I ask that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KENNEY: On page 7, lines 2 to 5, strike out "no further original issue of bonds authorized by section 10 of the act approved June 25, 1910 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 760), shall be made after July 1, 1935."

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to get information from the committee, but the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] declined a moment ago to yield. What I am trying to get at is this: We are now about to issue these savings bonds. At the present time the Post Office Department sells bonds or 90-day certificates upon which interest at 2½ or 3 percent is paid and which are redeemable at any time at par or face value. I should like to know whether with the issuance of these bonds that practice is going to be discontinued. Today a man may put his savings in the Postal Savings by purchasing these bonds or certificates and get his 2½- or 3-percent interest and be assured of getting his money back at any time.

I should like to know from the committee in charge of this bill whether that practice is going to be discontinued upon the issuance of these bonds, which tie up the purchaser for a long term.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It will be as to the certificates now outstanding, but there will be no further ones issued.

Mr. KENNEY. The Post Office Department will not continue to issue the postal bonds or certificates it is issuing now?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Not after July 1 next.

Mr. KENNEY. In other words, a person may not deposit his money in the Postal Savings System and get one of these Postal Savings bonds that pay him 2½- or 3-percent interest?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. He can up to the 1st of July 1935, but not afterward.

Mr. KENNEY. I believe the public should continue to have the benefit of the Postal Savings bonds, which permit a purchaser to make what amounts to a time deposit. Otherwise, this type of depositor will be compelled to buy these savings bonds upon which he may be called upon to take a loss. The amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. Section 1126 of the Revenue Act of 1926 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In order to avoid the frequent substitution of securities, such rules and regulations may limit the effect of this section, in appropriate classes of cases, to bonds and notes of the United States maturing more than a year after the date of deposit of such bonds as security. The phrase 'bonds or notes of the United States' shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to mean any public-debt obligations of the United States and any bonds, notes, or other obligations which are unconditionally guaranteed as to both interest and principal by the United States."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, "United States."

Mr. Chairman, those are pretty large words to strike out, but this bill certainly starts them on their way through providing the machinery for a gigantic inflation.

I understand that while I was absent getting a few refreshments downstairs the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] referred to me as coming from the city of New York, from Wall Street, or from a wealthy district in that great and glorious city.

Mr. PATMAN. Not Manhattan.

Mr. FISH. I am a farmer. [Laughter.] I am a dirt farmer like the President. How do you like that? And I come from his own congressional district, that great district up the Hudson River. I am sorry to say that due to the Democratic Party there are very few millionaires left in my district, but whoever are left, I think, are supporting the President. They will not support me, because I am against these tax-exempt securities from beginning to end. [Applause.]

Now, as to my friend from Massachusetts, and he is a very good friend, and there is no abler or squarer Member in the House; he has the right to his views. He is a fair man. I know he wants to be fair. I think he admits that I have a right to my views; and I have a very definite view that is entirely different from the gentleman's, that this bill actually gives the Secretary of the Treasury and the President the right to issue $13,000,000,000 more of Government bonds. That is written right into the report, and that is what the gentleman denies. It is very easy to prove; it is right here. It says we have issued $25,000,000,000, but we have redeemed $12,000,000,000. Subtract that which is redeemed from that which was issued and it gives you the right to issue $13,000,000,000 more bonds. I do not see how any sensible man is going to differ with those facts, because they are facts, and very obstinate ones.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The Secretary of the Treasury will not have authority to issue bonds except for expenditures authorized by the Congress.

Mr. FISH. He has the right without coming to Congress to issue these bonds. That is the very purpose of this legislation or it would not have been brought in here.

Now, just one other word. The reason I object to the whole performance is that it destroys what has been going on in this country for 150 years. We are just rushing into debt without providing any means to extinguish the debt. There is no means in this bill of providing revenue, nor has there been any such means in any other bill appropriating these huge sums of money. This is the most popular but at the same time the most insane way to legislate that has ever been devised. All you do is to go ahead and say, "We will borrow more billions and still more billions up to $13,000,000,000 additional, and we will not tax the American people one cent." That is just what you are doing; that is the real Democratic policy. You are afraid to tell the people the truth by calling upon them for additional taxes to extinguish these debts which you are piling on top of each other by the billions without any regard for the day of reckoning.

The first message of George Washington to the Congress contained the statement that if the Government borrowed money it should provide means of extinguishing the debt. Here you provide means to borrow $13,000,000,000 additional, but do not provide one cent of revenue. It is the most popular scheme of government ever devised, but it is totally crazy except for political purposes. Sooner or later the public will find out what is going on and call a halt to such a method of high financing equal to Ponzi or the "Wolf of Wall Street", and, if not, we are headed for the rocks of insolvency. I am surprised that any member of the Republican Party intends to vote for this bill. I cannot see why he should. I hope there will be a roll call and that we will have a record vote on this inflationary measure that likewise takes additional powers away from Congress over the control of the purse strings and turns them over to the Chief Executive and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, when I stated that the distinguished gentleman from New York was representing New York City or the Wall Street district—I do not recall just the phrase I used—I did not look it up. I will admit I made no investigation, but I was quite sure many New York City people resided in his district.

With reference to this bill I am interested on a motion to recommit, in one amendment particularly.

There is one amendment I think the House would favor if they had an opportunity to vote on it, and that is the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], as amended by me.

You know, there are several ways in which to gag Members. You may gag them first by bringing in a bill and getting a rule. You may gag them next by going into committee, as we are now, where there is no record vote. Then you may gag them by cutting off debate—and I may say to the gentlemen on this committee that they have been very liberal and generous so far as time is concerned. There is another way in which Members may be gagged, and that is by somebody getting up and offering a pro forma motion to recommit in order to prevent the House from passing on a material and important question. I should like to ask the gentlemen of the committee whether they contemplate offering a motion to recommit on this bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman does not suppose I would offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. PATMAN. Or any member of the committee? May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, the ranking Republican member, if he intends to offer a motion to recommit?

Mr. TREADWAY. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that the time to find out about a motion to recommit is after the Committee rises, and not in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is all the information I will give the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman will not make an effort to unduly gag the Members of the House and that he will not introduce some gag in order to prevent the offering of a motion that is really constructive.

Mr. TREADWAY. It may happen, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, that some people would think what he would offer might not be so tremendously important.

Mr. PATMAN. The same thing may be said about the gentleman's suggestions and amendments.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is the gentleman from Texas trying to gag the members of the committee at this time?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I am not trying to gag the members of the committee, but I do not want the committee members to gag us.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last section.

Mr. Chairman, I offered this motion in order that I might say a few words to ease my conscience for voting for this bill, if I do vote for it, and I most likely will. When I saw the stupendous figures carried in this bill I said, "My God, shades of James B. Weaver and William J. Bryan, whose voices have sounded in this Hall, and shades of all the greenbackers, all the silverites, populists, expansionists, and inflationists that ever lived." In this year of progress, 1935, and in the second year of the new deal, we are here reorganizing the mechanics of a national-debt structure in the stupendous, inconceivable, and astronomical sum of $45,000,000,000.

This recalls to my mind a campaign that happened before a lot of these kids here were ever born, the campaign of 1888. The paramount issue in that campaign was whether $100,000,000—just a measly, lousy $100,000,000—of Government bonds coming due should be retired and paid off. The Democrats were for retiring them. The issue got pretty hot. They smoked the Republicans out on that issue and the Republican Party in its platform, if I am not mistaken, pledged itself to retire the $100,000,000 of Government bonds. Of course, after election they repudiated the pledge. [Laughter.]

May I tell you a little incident that has remained in my memory all through the years. I was a kid living down in Missouri and was interested in national affairs when I was a pretty small boy. At that time we subscribed to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, which was a Republican paper, in spite of its Democratic name. However, it was the best newspaper in Missouri, so we subscribed for it. About 2 weeks after Harrison had defeated Cleveland in 1888, there was a three-line editorial squib in the Globe-Democrat, and I can almost remember the exact words after all these years. It said:

> Of course, these national bonds will not be retired. Platforms were made to get in on, not to stand on.

I took my boyish pen in hand and wrote a letter to the Globe-Democrat stopping our subscription to that paper.

We have progressed since those days. We have progressed from $400,000,000 of outstanding indebtedness to reorganizing the mechanics of a debt structure to the extent of $45,000,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the 5 minutes, but I do want to mention one other incident recalled by this bill which carries with it a little word of warning. I am not going back quite as far as I did on the other campaign. I refer to the campaign of 1892 and to a time when the credit of the United States Government was not worth $100,000,000.

It was going to be necessary to raise $100,000,000. President Harrison was running for reelection. They say that the plates were engraved to strike off this $100,000,000 worth of bonds, when some astute, long-headed national Republican politician—and they have always had that type of men in their fold—said: "Now, look here, let us just let this thing rest until after election. If Harrison is reelected we will strike off the bonds and issue them. If he is not, we will pass them over to Grover Cleveland", and they did.

When Grover Cleveland assumed the Presidency, he was confronted with an empty Treasury and the necessity of raising a measly, lousy, utterly inconsequential sum of $100,000,000, and could not sell that amount of United States bonds at popular subscription, and what happened? To my mind this is the most disgraceful episode I know of in the history of any American President, and Grover Cleveland, with his monumental obtuseness, told this on himself in the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post after he had retired from the Presidency. He said that J. Pierpont Morgan came here to Washington, went to the White House and showed him an obscure, long-forgotten statute under which these bonds could be sold at private sale to him. They were sold at private sale to him. He underwrote them. He got them at 96 and turned them over for about 104 or 105. J. Pierpont Morgan made seven or eight million dollars' profit on that transaction. What a shameful thing that the credit of one man, a Wall Street banker, was worth more than the credit of the United States of America, but this is a historical fact.

The point I am trying to drive home is this: Just 40 years ago the credit of the United States Government was not worth $100,000,000. Now, today, we are reorganizing a debt structure up to $45,000,000,000.

Various amendments have been ruled out as not germane or as not relevant and I think, perhaps, they were not, but that does not disturb me. The thing about this bill that disturbs me, and I believe it is going to disturb the country before we get through with it, is that it is indicative of a policy. The question is asked, Where are we drifting? Apparently, on the money question, the bond question, and the question of financing, we are not drifting anywhere. The good, old ship of state is tied up to the same old rotten interest-bearing, tax-exempt bond dock it has always been tied to. There are only two things in the United States that are worth a tinker's dam—interest-bearing, Government bonds and money. You have got to stop this bond issuing eventually, and go to issuing money against this nine or ten billion dollars' worth of gold and silver that is lying locked up down here in the United States Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SUTPHIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4304) to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman a member of the committee?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I am not.

The SPEAKER. Is there any member of the committee opposed to the bill who desires to offer a motion to recommit? If not, the Clerk will report the motion.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the gentleman from Texas qualifies?

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. PATMAN. I cannot say I am opposed to the bill, but I do prefer its present form changed.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that does not qualify the gentleman to offer the motion.

Mr. BLANTON. If there is no other Member who desires to offer a motion to recommit, I submit, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] qualifies.

The SPEAKER. If there is no one opposed to the bill who desires recognition to offer a motion to recommit, the Chair recognizes the gentleman to offer his motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PATMAN moves to recommit the bill (H. R. 4304) to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to immediately report the same back to the House with the following amendment:

On page 2, line 8, after the word "aggregate", strike out "$25,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time" and insert "at any time three times the total amount of all outstanding currency of the United States, not including the money held in the United States Treasury."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the motion that it is not germane to the section or to the bill. It relates to the subject of currency, which is not treated in this section or in the bill.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, it was held in order in the committee and, of course, we were led to believe it would be held in order in the House.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there was not a point of order made against it in committee.

Mr. PATMAN. I understood there was, but anyway I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Section 1 deals with the issuance of bonds by the United States Treasury. This places a limitation on that provision. The limitation is that bonds may be issued, but only to the extent that they do not have outstanding at any one time more than $3 of bonds to $1 in money. It is a limitation upon section 1 of the bill.

In other words, to make it clear what I am driving at, we have outstanding about $5,000,000,000 in currency in circulation, $28,000,000,000 in United States bonds, notes and certificates. This would require the issuance of additional currency so there would be a ratio of 3 to 1 based on the gold in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is the very point, that is something that is not in here. It is not a limitation, it does not stop at the point of a limitation, but goes farther and is an affirmative direction as to the relation of the currency—an expansion of the currency, which is not dealt with in this section or in the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in connection with what the gentleman from Tennessee has said, it seems to me that under the guise of a limitation this is an attempt to inject the currency question into a bill which relates to bonds and the indebtedness of the Government.

In other words, this is an attempt to inject in a direct way the currency question by providing for a relationship of bonds issuable to outstanding currency, and that it shall be at a ratio of $3 in bonds to $1 in currency. I submit that such is not a limitation, but an affirmative action with relation to currency, a direct injection of the currency into a bill which in no way relates to the currency or monetary question of the country.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order. Mr. Speaker, this whole bill deals with the subject of limitation of bond issues. There is no question about that. It limits the amount of bonds that may be issued by the Treasury Department. The motion to recommit made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is nothing in the world but a different form of limitation. It says that it shall be of a ratio of 3 to 1 of the outstanding currency of the Government. It certainly is germane to the bill, it deals with the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, as far as I can see, the gentleman's motion provides only a means of mathematical calculation on the amount of bonds that can be issued and has nothing to do with currency beyond the fact that it mentions the word "currency." It provides a means of mathematical calculation, the same thing the original section does.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the object, of course, is to cause an expansion of more money directly by the Government. That is true, but section 1 provides that these bonds may be issued to the amount of $25,000,000,000. The Federal Reserve bank purchasing one of these bonds may redeposit that bond with the Government and get new currency. That may be done to the full amount of those bonds. I am placing a limitation on that, so that when there is need for additional currency, the money shall be issued directly by the Treasury instead of selling the bonds to the banks, and letting the banks redeposit the bonds with the Treasury and getting the money in return and getting the interest on the bonds at the same time they use the money—in other words, giving the banks a bonus amounting to tens of millions of dollars and yet not putting money in circulation. I want it issued directly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And the bank, when it deposits the bond and has money issued, not only gets the interest on the bonds but lets the money out at another high rate of interest.

Mr. PATMAN. That is correct, and the bank can lend $10 to every $1 of such money it has at its disposal.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] raised the point that this measure has nothing to do with currency. That is what we are trying to do—to pay a part of the national debt with these bonds. If we had the money to pay these bonds, there would be no necessity for issuing others in their places. To say that this motion to recommit is out of order simply because this is not a currency bill, per se, is, it seems to me, entirely too fine-spun for the practical affairs of legislative procedure in the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has offered a motion to recommit with instructions to add an amendment to section 1 as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "aggregate" strike out "$25,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time" and insert "at any one time, and three times the total amount of all outstanding currency of the United States, not including the money held in the United States Treasury."

The bill before the House relates solely to the reissue of bonds. The motion to recommit seeks to tie up with the reissue of bonds the question of the issuance of currency. The Chair does not think, therefore, that the motion to recommit is in order or that it can be properly construed as a limitation, or as being germane to the pending bill.

Mr. PATMAN. Would the Speaker bear with me for another suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PATMAN. As the bill is written it deals with the currency. It provides that these bonds may be issued. Existing law provides that these bonds may be redeposited and currency issued in return for them. Therefore, the currency problem is mixed up with this, and you cannot separate them because under existing law these bonds may be redeposited by the banking corporation and new money issued in return. The sole question is whether or not we shall issue the money directly by the Treasury or shall issue bonds to the banks and let the banks redeposit the bonds and get the money in return and continue to get the interest on the bond.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair reads the motion to recommit, it would compel the Treasury to issue currency against the issue of bonds.

Mr. PATMAN. I submit, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the language of the motion to recommit which, to my knowledge, would lead the Speaker to believe that. The President of the United States under existing law has the right to issue up to $3,000,000,000 in United States notes. He has the right to issue $3,000,000,000 more in payment of United States bonds to Federal Reserve banks, and this amendment would require him to either issue that money in order to bring the ratio up or to provide for its issuance in some other way.

The SPEAKER. But the issue of the bonds, as the Chair construes the motion to recommit, is based on the issuance of currency, and in that sense it does undertake to tie up with this bill which relates to the reissue of bonds the subject of the issuance of currency. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question is upon the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were ayes 152 and noes 30.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. I call the Speaker's attention to the fact that a great many Members did not vote either way on the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and nineteen Members are present, a quorum.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a teller vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the bill has been passed and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table. So the request of the gentleman comes too late.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York did not make that motion. The gentleman did not object to the vote. He simply made a point of no quorum, and that is all he did.

Mr. FISH. That is correct; but I asked for a teller vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request for a teller vote comes entirely too late, because the bill has been passed, and a motion to reconsider has been laid on the table.

THE NEW GOVERNMENT WORK PROGRAM SUBSTITUTES JOBS FOR DOLES

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

Mr. Speaker, last week the House of Representatives passed a measure which I sincerely believe will stand out as one of the greatest and one of the most encouraging events of these trying times. By a vote of 329 to 78 it passed House Resolution 117, which provides $4,880,000,000 for the use of the President in combating unemployment.

You are, I know, familiar with the chief provisions of that measure. Of this sum, $880,000,000 is for direct relief, to be allocated to the States and tide them over until the program under which the $4,000,000,000 will be expended begins to function. Authority to expend this money is left solely to the discretion of the President.

THIS BILL IS AN INTEGRAL PART OF A GREAT NATIONAL PROGRAM OF SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC SECURITY

These are the essentials of this bill. I should like to discuss its significance, why I consider it of such great importance, and how it fits in with an even far greater program for the betterment and financial restoration of this country to definitely better times.

When I addressed my colleagues last Wednesday during the debate on this measure, I suggested that we should not overlook the fact that this bill is one part of a vast program; and we must always keep a complete picture before us in order to see clearly how all these parts fit into the complete whole.

I ask this again now, because everything that we do in Congress during this session will be for the purpose of shaping up that entire program.

The goal of this program is national security—social and economic. It consists of two parts. One is to end the dole system of relief and to give employment to all those who are unemployed. The second part of the program is to care for those who are unemployed but unable to work. This we intend to do through the program of social security which was presented to Congress by the President.

WE ARE GOING TO GIVE PEOPLE JOBS

Now, let us look at the first part of that program—for which we appropriated $4,000,000,000. I can tell you what this amounts to in seven words. We are going to give people job. These words are of tremendous significance. They mean salvation—mental, physical, and spiritual salvation—for three and one-half million people. They mean that we are going to discard—and I fervently pray that we will never return to it—a dole system whereby when a man came to us and said, "I want work", the best we could say in reply was, "We have no work, but here is a little something to keep you from absolute starvation."

RELIEF IS NO ADEQUATE SUBSTITUTE FOR EMPLOYMENT

Do not misunderstand me. Our relief system did keep people from starvation. It did, insofar as it was able, shelter people from cold, feed them, and offer the bare necessities of life. For one of the first things Franklin D. Roosevelt recognized when he was sworn into office as the President of the United States was the sacred obligation of this country to see that no one goes hungry. Relief was not the best way, but it was the quickest then. We hoped that this depression would not last so long. We hoped that private industry would help to assume the national burden of recovery, that it would pitch in and do its part.

Well, we were wrong. One, two, three, four, five years have gone by, and our hopes have not been realized. Private industry has not shared the load. I am not placing blame here; I am simply making a statement of fact.

THE GOVERNMENT'S MESSAGE TO THE UNEMPLOYED

And from this we have now come to a new stage of responsibility, and one which I welcome with great happiness, because I advocated and fought for it ever since I have been a Member of Congress.

Now we say, "Until private industry, until your former employer, until the field of work for which you have been trained and prepared, and for which you are qualified, furnishes you a job, we, the Government, will furnish that job. You are not going to come to us empty handed. To the best of our ability, with every means at our disposal, we are going to give you work to do—useful work—work which will add to the material wealth and to the greatness of our country, and, above all, work which will restore to you your self-respect."

THE EFFECTS OF ENFORCED IDLENESS

Mr. Speaker, I hope that all of us can realize how much this means. I do not think that we will ever know the tremendous loss beyond all possible computation which this country has suffered because of its millions who have had their morale and their energies numbed, their eagerness and desire to contribute to the well-being and prosperity of their community and of their Nation stifled. This is what unemployment means, and to try to make up for that unemployment by offering a man relief to provide for bare subsistence is a sorry substitute. It is one which we never want to see again.

Everyone has the right to live decently and to live happily, and through this legislation which we have passed in the House and which I hope will soon become the law of the land we are going to begin to have that decency, that happiness in this country again.

THE WAGE SCALE UNDER THE NEW PROGRAM

My friends, there was much discussion last week on the floor of the House and in all the newspapers regarding the scale of wages which is to be paid under this new program. I want to point out to you that the bill sets up no specific wage scale. It contemplates that wages paid should be lower than those received for similar work from private industry, but at the same time should be fair enough to permit decent living.

It has been widely published that this wage will be $50 per month. This statement should be qualified and explained. For one thing, as I said before, there has been no official pronouncement regarding wages. One Government official who testified before the committee holding hearings on the bill did mention an average wage of $50 per month. This might mean that for large industrial centers and in big cities, where the cost of living is higher than in smaller places, the scale would be more than $50 per month.

WAGES SHOULD GIVE THE WORKER MORE THAN HE RECEIVES FROM RELIEF

As far as I am concerned, it will absolutely have to be more than that. Why, if we were to pay in Pittsburgh only $50 a month to people who are doing real jobs and who are adding to the wealth of this country, through the public works that will be built, they would not be much, if at all, better off than under the present system of relief.

Right now the head of a family of four in Allegheny County can earn, under the work-relief system in effect, $14.25 a week. I do not mean that the wage earner for all families of this size receives this amount, but this is the maximum which he can receive. The average cash relief to a similar family where no one is working amounts to about $10 a week. You will, therefore, clearly see that $50 a month is much too low, and I am going to advocate and press as hard as possible for a scale of wages higher than this.

I hope that such adjustments will be made, but most important is that at last the unemployed can know that idleness is going to end—the un-American dole is to be thrown overboard. Instead, people will again be able to use their hands, their minds, and hearts to earn their daily bread.

NOW WE HAVE AN EQUALLY GRAVE RESPONSIBILITY—WE MUST GIVE ADEQUATE AID TO THE UNEMPLOYED WHO ARE NOT ON RELIEF

And now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that we consider another part of this picture, and one just as important. I say to you that after this bill has passed the Congress of the United States we have an equally grave and sacred obligation before us. Our task is twofold. In this bill we care for the unemployed who are on relief rolls. There is also that vast army of unemployed who are not on relief rolls, but whose condition is just as precarious and just as desperate. We must turn our thoughts and our actions to these. To some extent they will be helped by the removal from the field of unemployment of people on relief, and therefore will have a better chance to be called to private industry, but we must not repeat again our mistake of the past.

We are not going to assume that private industry will take care of them, for unless we care for them we will simply be working in a vicious circle. These unemployed who are not now on the relief rolls and who have done everything in their power to keep off relief, will be forced to go on relief, thus simply taking the place of those we are going to take off. No; we are not going to have that again. The same principle which is good, true, and just for one group is just as true for the others. We should not—and shall not—make a distinction between those who are on relief rolls and those who are not.

The relief roll is no criterion of need. There are between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 unemployed in this country today who are not on relief rolls. Who are we to say that these people are not just as desperately in need as the others? We dare not and shall not say that their need is less and their plight is no concern of ours. It is our concern. It is a sacred one, and we must attend to it at once.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WOODRUM, from the Committee on Appropriations, presented a conference report on the bill (H. R. 3410) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, for printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the acting majority leader what the program is for Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Monday is District of Columbia day, but I understand they have no business, so I assume we will go ahead with the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill.

REPLY TO THREATENING LETTER

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have received from some constituents in my district a letter threatening me and attempting to intimidate me into voting for the Townsend old-age pension plan. This afternoon's Washington Star, which is just off the press, on page 6, reports that at a luncheon yesterday at the National Press Club, Dr. F. E. Townsend told them that his 30,000,000 followers will insist on his pension plan, or they will stage a revolution. I quote from the article the following:

> The casual prediction that his followers will overturn the Government of the United States if it refuses to put into effect his old-age revolving pension plan was voiced by Dr. F. E. Townsend at a luncheon at the National Press Club yesterday.

It is very significant that in this threatening letter I have received from one of these Townsend Clubs in my district there is a threat of revolution. Can it be possible that "revolution" is becoming a preachment of this Townsend propaganda?

Believing, Mr. Speaker, that it will be of interest to my colleagues and to the country generally, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point, and to print a letter that I wrote in answer to the threats made by this Townsend Club in my district, threatening me and Congress if we did not pass that bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]?

There was no objection.

The following is the reply referred to:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1935.

Mr. J. B. LEATH, President,
Mr. J. R. BARRETT, Vice President,
Mr. D. C. DOVE, Secretary,
The Townsend Club, Mineral Wells, Tex.

GENTLEMEN: I have your communication of the 21st instant, stating that you represent 1,500 voters in Mineral Wells and have the signatures of 2,000 voters in Palo Pinto County and the signatures of 40,000 of the best people in my congressional district, who demand that I support the Townsend old-age pension bill or resign my position; and that, if I refuse to help pass it, you will defeat me for reelection and that the Townsend followers will become radicals and "wreck the Government."

It would seem that your Dr. Townsend has already become a radical and is seeking to wreck the Government. This afternoon's Washington Star, just off the press, with the headlines, "Townsend talks about revolution" and "Tells Press Club 30,000,000 followers will insist on pension plan", states:

"The casual prediction that his followers will overturn the Government of the United States if it refuses to put into effect his old-age revolving pension plan was voiced by Dr. F. E. Townsend at a luncheon at the National Press Club yesterday."

When you and Dr. Townsend threaten revolution, you don't represent the same splendid people I represent. They don't wreck governments. They believe in an orderly government. They believe in a stable government. They are not Dillingers, who with drawn guns say "Stand and deliver." They want a government that pays its debts and is good for its obligations. They want to preserve their government, and they know I will do all I can to preserve it.

My constituents elected me, and have kept me in office, because they have learned that they can depend upon me absolutely to fearlessly perform my duty at all times and under all circumstances regardless of consequences.

Threats do not scare me. I have been threatened many times for doing my duty. Opposition doesn't scare me. I have been opposed many times for doing my duty. Abuse doesn't scare me. I have been abused many times for doing my duty. Attacks do not scare me. I have been attacked many times for doing my duty. I have received threats of violence and even of death because I did my duty.

I am against the Townsend plan because there is no possible way under heaven to raise that much money. I am against it because it would bankrupt and wreck the Government.

Dr. Townsend claims that there are only 8,000,000 persons over 60 years of age in the United States, and to pay them $200 per month would cost the Government $19,200,000,000 per year. But our reliable expert Government actuaries all agree that to pay every person in the United States over 60 years of age $200 per month, together with the administration expense necessary and incident thereto, would require the sum of $24,000,000,000 per year. Dr. Townsend does not deny it. All are now agreed that it will cost $24,000,000,000 per year.

It might be possible, if the Government had the money. It might be possible, if by some means the Government could raise that much money. But there is no possible way on earth or under heaven for this Government to raise $24,000,000,000 extra per year. All of the governments on earth put together could not raise $24,000,000,000 per year.

Our entire combined revenues from all sources of taxation last year amounted to only $3,700,000,000, which is less than one-sixth of what Dr. Townsend proposes to pay each year in old-age pensions alone. If we had paid these total revenues for last year of $3,700,000,000 on old-age pensions, we would have had to raise an additional $20,300,000,000 more in order to have been able to pay $200 per month to all persons over 60 years of age. Where would we have got it? The proposed sales tax mentioned by Dr. Townsend wouldn't raise enough to pay the actual expense of administering it, and is so utterly ridiculous and absurd to any person posted on Government finances, business, and taxation that it is not worthy of consideration.

I wish that you gentlemen could know just how very hard it is for your Government to raise the $3,700,000,000 it received in total revenues last year, and then you would understand just how absolutely impossible it would be for this Government to raise $24,000,000,000 extra to pay the Townsend pensions.

After taxing incomes, inheritances, gasoline, tobacco, liquors of all kinds, the nuisance taxes, the excise taxes, the 2-cent tax on bank checks, extra postal rates, and all other taxes, this Government last year could not raise but $3,700,000,000 in total revenues from all sources. Now compare that with the stupendous sum of $24,000,000,000 needed for the Townsend plan. Can't you see that it is simply out of the question? Can't you see that it is impossible? Can't you see that it is ridiculous? Can't you see that it is absurd?

You wouldn't have any respect for me if I voted for such a monstrosity. You would not have any confidence in me if I told you I would vote for it and help to pass it. Because if it were passed, it could not be executed. It would not be possible to raise the money. The Government could not make the payments. The people would not receive their $200. They would find out that Congress had handed them a gold brick. Don't you think that it is cruel and unpardonable for any person to attempt to fool and disappoint eight or ten million old men and women and lead them to believe that they will be paid $200 per month when there is no possible chance on earth to pay them? I am not going to fool my constituents. I am not going to mislead them. I am not going to disappoint them. I want them to have confidence in me. I want them to believe in me. I want them to know that they can depend on me. And they do know it.

Some constituents insist that the minimum age should be 58; some demand that it be 55; some threaten that it must be 50; and even some want it to begin at 45 years; and some have insisted that the amount should be $250; and a few have written that they think the pension should be $300 per month, as that would put more money in circulation. As a matter of fact, $300 per month at 45 years and over would be just as possible as $200 per month beginning at 60 years and over, because both are absolutely impossible.

A prominent former official of Palo Pinto County writes me that he signed under a misapprehension of facts.

A prominent official of Eastland County, who is a man of strict honor and integrity and an unusually high-class citizen, writes me:

"Some time during the month of November an attorney from Fort Worth came to this county and made several talks favoring the Townsend old-age pension plan, and urged our people to secure all signatures possible to petitions urging you and the Senators to support the plan. A dozen or more petitions were circulated over the county and 3,000 signatures were secured."

I feel sure that none of them knew that the Townsend plan would cost each year $20,300,000,000 more than our entire total revenues were last year from all sources of taxation.

It is immaterial whether or not Dr. Townsend has collected anything from his followers. On October 15, 1934, he wrote me respecting his Townsend clubs: "The only demand of members is that they purchase a booklet at 25 cents." That came from his office. That was his statement, not mine. In his address yesterday he claimed he now has 30,000,000 members. So far as I know he may not have collected 25 cents from any of them. He was the one who said he collected 25 cents from members. What he has collected is immaterial. That which is material is the fact that it is impossible for the United States to raise $24,000,000,000, or $19,200,000,000, or even $10,000,000,000 additional to the revenues we now raise, which altogether last year totaled only $3,700,000,000.

As I have said many times before, I am in favor of a sane, possible old-age pension such as was outlined by the President the other day. I have been in favor of it for several years. We must care for our aged men and women. I am far more concerned about the aged men and women in my district than is Dr. Townsend. I know them. He doesn't. I am their Representative. He is not. I sympathize deeply with all of their many problems, about which he knows practically nothing. We would have passed an old-age pension in the last Congress, but the President wasn't ready for it. But he then promised us that he would approve it this session. He is ready for it now. And we are going to pass it this session. And we would pass it if Dr. Townsend had never been born.

Your friend,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF MONEY AND CREDITS

Mr. BUCKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCKLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Dies amendment to House Resolution 4304.

One of the most important questions before this Congress is the money question.

I believe that the Federal Government should take over the Federal Reserve banking system and control the money and credit of this Nation for all the people, instead of "farming" it out to the big bankers and money lenders.

The Constitution provides that Congress should issue the money and control the value thereof. The present system provides issuing bonds and borrowing the money to finance the Government. The Federal Reserve banks and big bankers can buy a bond drawing 3-percent or 4-percent interest, then deposit it with the Government Treasury and this Government Treasury issues the face value of the bonds in currency at a cost of less than one-half of 1 percent. They can loan this money to the people from 6-percent to 8-percent interest or more. In other words, they draw 3 percent or 4 percent on the bonds as well as getting the interest on the money which they loan out to the people.

National banks can buy bonds equal to their capital stock and deposit with the United States Treasury, and in return the Treasury will issue them currency for face value of bonds. For every dollar the banks have on deposit they can issue 10 times the amount in credit, and people pay interest on that credit. Under this arrangement the banks can inflate the currency or deflate it at their will. You remember the way the Federal Reserve bank and the banks inflated the currency "to win the war."

You remember in 1919 when they advised farmers of this Nation to "be patriotic and increase the number of livestock and machinery to help feed the world, as it will take 5 years to catch up with production." Farmers went to the bank, as they were advised, and borrowed the money, went in debt, and inside of 12 months this same Federal Reserve bank, in the fall of 1920, deflated the currency, taking the money out of circulation, out of the agricultural districts. The country bankers endeavored to collect the money and the farmers' prices went down to one-half—in some cases, one-third of what his produce was worth 6 months before. They broke the farmers of this Nation as well as most of the country bankers.

It has been estimated that 2,000,000 farmers lost their farms and their life savings through the control of the money and credits by the big financial money changers. The big financial interests now seem to get excited and are terribly afraid of mild and controlled inflation, but they never say anything about when they deflated the currency and bankrupted the farmers of this Nation.

I say again, this system bankrupted the farmers of this Nation, caused 2,000,000 farmers to lose their farms, caused people to commit suicide, and caused 10,000,000 unemployed. It also has caused people to go ragged and hungry, and drove people to despair and the depths of hell and crime. The money system and the way it is handled by international bankers is responsible for the ills of this Nation.

There is only $5,500,000,000 in actual money in the United States. However, at the present time, there is on deposit in the banks about $41,000,000,000, of which a big percent is credit and not actual money.

Banks can inflate the currency by extending credit. They can contract currency by refusing credit, which they have been doing the last few years, as most of the business is done on credit. Without credit you have nothing to do business.

Therefore it is essential for the Government to take over the money and credit of this Nation, so that people will not have to pass through another period like the one we are just passing through.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD regarding my defense of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, I am prompted to rise in the defense of Secretary of the Interior Ickes, the trusted and capable right bower of President Roosevelt, and who has been "under fire" during the past few days from Members of the House.

I do not believe it is necessary for me to hold any particular brief for the honorable Secretary of the Interior, for he has often proved himself very willing and highly capable in the art of matching wits during verbal skirmishes and pitched political battles, but since the rules of the House bar him from answering any criticism here, it occurs to me that it is my duty as a gentleman to report that I am not totally in harmony with the charges which have been directed at him, and to recount some of the experiences which I have had with him and his Department.

Of course, I cannot speak for others; but in my considerable dealings with Secretary Ickes and the executives and subordinates of his Department I have not always obtained that which I have sought, but in every instance I have received the utmost consideration and ready cooperation.

No one, to my knowledge, has ever seriously attempted to impeach the rugged honesty and simpleness of purpose for which our Secretary of the Interior is noted. He has proved his ability to handle an extraordinary huge sum of money without the usual leakages associated with such expenditures. The attacks upon him seem to center around patronage and the disposition of the $3,000,000,000 placed at his command. Not in a position to know about his allocation of funds on a national basis, it is not my place to defend the distribution of this money on a sectional basis, but I do believe that I can understand his patronage difficulties.

It seems to me that his position is not unlike ours. We are hounded by thousands of folks back home for jobs—jobs which it is not possible for us to find. We plague the Secretary of the Interior, as Administrator of the Public Works Administration, and he is placed in the unfortunate position of being besieged by Members of Congress for jobs just as we are besieged by our people back home. We dislike to turn down our constituents, as we are forced to do every day in the week, and I have no doubt it would please Secretary Ickes to satisfy all of us in all our requests, but that, too, obviously is not possible.

I am a member of the Public Lands, the Irrigation and Reclamation, and the Indian Affairs Committees, all of which deal directly with the Department of the Interior. In my committee work I have been obligated to contact Secretary Ickes repeatedly, and I have failed to note any sign of the discourtesy for which he is being blamed.

As stated before, it is not necessarily my place to speak for this very able member of our Cabinet; but in view of the fact that he is a trusted lieutenant of our President, it appears to me that those of us who have had more than usual dealings with him and his Department should voice their knowledge of his actions. Secretary Ickes has exerted a great deal of energy in advancing legislation sponsored by the administration, before committees and otherwise, and he always has conducted himself in a fair and agreeable fashion.

Thus it is, in the midst of this intraparty political turmoil, which is embarrassing for all concerned, I am prompted to register my views in his defense.

THE LOW LEVEL OF EMPLOYMENT IN THE MARBLE, GRANITE, AND SLATE INDUSTRIES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from Mr. John Finch, of the Bureau of Mines, which speaks of the great unemployment in the marble, limestone, granite, and slate industries, which have been very much discriminated against in the P. W. A. building program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from Massachusetts?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Reserving the right to object, from whom is the letter?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The letter is from Mr. John Finch, of the Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior. It contains some very valuable information. It speaks of the granite, limestone, slate, and marble industries in the United States. It also shows the Members of Congress who have these industries in their districts and who will be vitally interested in having this information. [Laughter.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. I have no objection.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statistics regarding the low ebb of employment in the marble, granite, and slate industries:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, January 24, 1935.

Mrs. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MRS. ROGERS: In accordance with your telephone request this afternoon, I am enclosing a list of the congressional districts with their Representatives covering areas where important marble and building-limestone industries are centered.

Regarding your question on the employment situation in the building-stone industries, I would state that the best information available is that given in the reports of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The latest figures published are for November 1934. Of the 107 groups into which industry is divided, the group designated "Marble, granite, slate, and other products" was the very lowest in employment of them all. The number employed in these industries in November 1934 was only 28.6 percent of the 1923–25 average.

I trust that the data submitted will be of service to you.

Cordially yours,

JOHN W. FINCH, Director.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 72

Whereas WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, a Representative from the State of Alabama, has been unable from sickness to appear in person to be sworn as a Member of the House, and there being no contest or question as to his election: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker be, and he is hereby, authorized to administer the oath of office to said WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD at the Naval Hospital in the city of Washington, and that the said oath, when administered as herein authorized, shall be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER]?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution was presented simply in order to follow the regular procedure. Mr. BANKHEAD is rapidly improving and hopes to leave the hospital very soon.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS POSTPONED

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point and to insert a resolution which I have offered, together with the condition of apportionment of employees at the close of January 15, 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, where did this come from?

Mr. McFARLANE. From the Civil Service Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, last week I circulated a petition among the Democrats of the House for the purpose of calling a caucus of the Democratic Membership of the House to discuss the present status of patronage and departmental personnel distribution and other affiliated matters. In a short while 75 Members had signed this petition, when only 25 were required under caucus rules. This caucus was first called for 7:30 p. m. January 24, but because of the late adjournment on yesterday, together with extremely bad weather conditions, it was decided to postpone the caucus until January 29, 7:30 p. m., at which time the caucus will be held in the House of Representatives. All Democratic Members of the House are urged to be present at that time.

I have offered the following resolution to investigate the distribution of patronage under appointments of the Civil Service Commission:

Resolved, That for the purpose of obtaining information necessary as a basis for legislation the Committee on Civil Service, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to investigate the Civil Service Commission, the heads of all of the departments, commissions, and independent offices, to determine whether the third paragraph of section 2 of the act of January 16, 1883, being an act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States, as follows: "Third. Appointments to the public service aforesaid in the departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census" has been enforced and whether each State has its quota of Federal employees in the District of Columbia in the several departments, commissions, or independent offices as required by said act.

The committee shall report to the House the results of its investigation, including such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony and report its recommendations to the House.

It will be remembered that last session the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Hastings, called to the attention of the Membership paragraph (b) of section 8 of the independent offices appropriation bill, H. R. 5389, which provided that in making reductions of personnel due regard should be given to the apportionment of appointments as provided in the Civil Service Act. This provision was in keeping with the third paragraph of section 2 of the Civil Service Act, January 16, 1883, as quoted in the above resolution:

Appointments to the public service aforesaid in the departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census.

I have just received the following apportionment from Mr. C. C. Hathway, personnel officer of the United States Civil Service Commission, which shows the exact condition of the apportionment at the close of business Tuesday, January 15, 1935, as administered by said Commission under said law. The report of the Civil Service Commission was that there are 33,156 Federal employees in the city of Washington. Of this number, the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, and Vermont have a total of 13,442, or over 40 percent of the entire number. Massachusetts, South Dakota, Iowa, Maine, Rhode Island, Delaware, Utah, West Virginia, and New Hampshire all, as you will note from the list, have received practically their quota. At this point I desire to place in the RECORD the total each State is entitled to and the number each State has received and the number each State is in arrears:

Condition of apportionment at the close of business Tuesday, Jan. 15, 1935

| State | Entitled | Received | Arrears | Percent filled |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Puerto Rico | 410 | 24 | 386 | 6 |
| Hawaii | 98 | 11 | 87 | 11 |

| Iowa | 657 | 648 | 9 | 99 |
| South Dakota | 184 | 183 | 1 | 99 |
| Massachusetts | 1,129 | 1,124 | 5 | 99.6 |
| | | | | Percent excess |
| States in excess: | | | | |
| Vermont | 96 | 117 | 21 | 22 |
| Virginia | 644 | 2,008 | 1,364 | 212 |
| Maryland | 434 | 1,875 | 1,441 | 332 |
| District of Columbia | 129 | 9,442 | 9,313 | 7,219 |

NOTE.—Number of employees occupying apportioned positions who are excluded from the apportionment figures under sec. 2, rule 7, and the Attorney General's opinion of Aug. 25, 1934, 6,611.

I call to your attention that the District of Columbia is entitled to 129 and has received 9,442; Maryland is entitled to 434 and has received 1,875; Virginia is entitled to 644 and has received 2,008; Vermont is entitled to 96 and has received 117. You will note that we in Texas are entitled to 1,548 and have received only 482.

One of the purposes of calling the Democratic caucus for next Tuesday evening is to decide what steps, if any, shall be taken to correct these and similar abuses in the distribution of patronage. For the past 52 years the United States Civil Service Commission has ignored the above-quoted law of this Congress. Should the law Congress enacts be respected or is the Civil Service Commission more powerful than the law?

The Democratic caucus next Tuesday evening will, no doubt, properly consider ways and means of determining what method of selection, the kind and character of personnel, and so forth, that is now existing in all departments of government, as well as on Capitol Hill. It is common knowledge to the Democratic Membership of the House that practically all key positions in the entire emergency set-up created by the Seventy-third Congress are held by Republicans. Practically all positions paying more than $4,000 per year in all the regular departments of government here in Washington as well as out in the field are held by Republicans, many of whom supported Mr. Hoover in the last election.

It is known to many Members of Congress that quite a number of those in charge of the personnel selection in the different emergency departmental divisions have ignored recommendations of Members of Congress in the selection of their personnel and have so instructed their employees in considering patronage matters. Rumors have been coming in in increasing numbers as to the many discriminations being made by employees in the selection of their personnel on Capitol Hill, of the abuse of power of these same employees, of downright graft of some of these employees. If these charges and rumors are true, a general shake-up should be made in the employees of the House. Certainly a thorough investigation by a proper committee appointed by the Democratic caucus to be held Tuesday night should be made. It is well known that rank discrimination by some of the departments has been made favoring recommendations of certain Members of Congress over other Members of Congress in the selection of their personnel. All Members of Congress should be treated equally by all departments of Government in the selection of their personnel. Certainly the coming Democratic caucus should thoroughly investigate and make an early report in this regard. The whole system of patronage as it has been handled under the Democratic administration should be carefully investigated and an early report made back to this Congress, to the end that the facts be known and that the responsibility for the existing condition be made public.

We are daily being besieged by our constituents with applications for positions running into large numbers and filed. They cannot understand why so few positions under this administration have been given to the Democrats. They know, as we know, that many of these positions are not under civil service; that someone is receiving these positions. We should be able to definitely tell them the reasons why our recommendations of them are being ignored.

All such patronage questions should rightly come before the Democratic caucus and this caucus should appoint proper committees to see that this information is immediately made available to the membership.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution to clarify the definition of disagreement in section 19, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

449. By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: Petition of John Peters and other citizens of Raleigh County, W. Va., urging the passage of House bill 2856, providing for an old-age pension; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

450. By Mr. SWEENEY: Resolution passed by Cleveland Deanery Council of the National Council of Catholic Women, favoring legislation for the humanizing of the immigration laws; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

451. Also, resolution of the order of Benefit Association of Railway Employees, favoring support of the Pettengill bill (H. R. 8100); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

452. By Mr. TREADWAY: Petition of employees of L. L. Brown Paper Co., Adams, Mass., protesting against the Black-Connery bill or similar 30-hour labor legislation; to the Committee on Labor.

453. By Mr. TRUAX: Petition of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Cuyahoga Chapter, Cleveland, Ohio, by their adjutant, David Wise, representing the sentiments of the 4,500 disabled veterans of Cuyahoga County, favoring the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates with the cancelation of all interest charges, and that they are 100 percent back of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars in their fight for this cause; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

454. Also, petition of Jeff D. Patterson and many others from Toledo, Ohio, urging the Congress of the United States to enact the old-age-pension bill as sponsored and approved by Dr. J. E. Pope, editor of the National Forum and president of the National Old Age Pension Association and the Nonpartisan Voters' Secret League, as embodied in House bill 2856, introduced by Representative WILL ROGERS, of Oklahoma, embracing the following: A Federal pension of $30 to $50 per month to every man and woman above the age of 55, financed on a contributory basis or a tax on the earnings of persons between the ages of 21 and 45; same to be free from State and local administration or interference; to be a Nation-wide, impartial, and uniform system of old-age pensions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

455. Also, petition of Orphan's Hope Lodge, No. 466, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Dennison, Ohio, by their recording secretary, L. E. Barth, requesting that the Congress of the United States support and enact into law the following measures: Soldiers' bonus bill, full-crew bill, 6-hour day, unemployment insurance, pension bill, bus and truck regulations by Interstate Commerce Commission, train-length limit bill, and the modification of the hours-of-service law; to the Committee on Labor.

456. Also, petition of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local Union No. 224, Cincinnati, Ohio, by their secretary, Carl Poppe, strenuously opposing the applying of bulletin P. W. 23709, dated December 4, 1934 (sent to all State engineers of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, outlining principles in order to facilitate the application of Public Works Administration labor and wage provisions and wage scale on open-shop carpentry work), on carpentry work on any Public Works Administration project, as this would be the ruination of union labor throughout the United States; to the Committee on Labor.

457. By Mr. WEAVER: Petition of various citizens of the Eleventh Congressional District of North Carolina, favoring the enactment of the Townsend old-age-pension legislation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 28, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, Jan. 21, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Friday, January 25, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4304) to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I presume under the unanimous-consent agreement——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate resolves itself into executive session under the order of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just about to state, Mr. President, that automatically, under the agreement, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of William Denman, of California, to be United States circuit judge for the ninth circuit to succeed William B. Gilbert, deceased.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BUSINESS TRANSACTED AS IN LEGISLATIVE SESSION

During the executive session the following legislative business was transacted by unanimous consent:

REPORT OF WAR FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, reporting, pursuant to law, relative to the War Finance Corporation (in liquidation) covering the period from January 1, 1934, to December 31, 1934, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

WARD J. LAWTON

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of Ward J. Lawton, special disbursing agent, Lighthouse Service, Department of Commerce, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Nebraska, memorializing Congress to include the building of free interstate bridges across the Missouri River as Public Works Administration projects, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. NORRIS.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

House Concurrent Resolution 3

A concurrent resolution memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to establish a national memorial park on the site of the Battle of the Washita, near Cheyenne, in Roger Mills County

Whereas the United States Public Works Administration, under the direction of the Department of the Interior, is at the present time engaged in the acquisition of a site for, and the construction of, a dam on the Washita River for flood-control and irrigation purposes; and

Whereas adjacent to the site of said proposed dam lies the site of the Battle of the Washita, fought in 1868 between the Seventh United States Cavalry, under the command of Gen. George A.

Custer, and members of the Cheyenne, Arapaho, Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, under the lead of Chiefs Black Kettle, Little Rock, Little Raven, Roman Nose, Lone Wolf, Santanta, and other prominent chiefs of these tribes; and

Whereas the outcome of said battle had the effect of making safe the frontier of western Oklahoma for white settlement and the advancement of civilization; and

Whereas the indomitable spirit, courage, and fortitude of both the American pioneers and the Indian natives is typified by the noble stand made by each of them; and

Whereas the site of said battle is at the present time undergoing settlement; and

Whereas this battle should be commemorated as an occasion of great historical interest, both to the people of Oklahoma and the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma (the senate concurring therein), That the President and Congress of the United States be memorialized by the people and Legislature of Oklahoma, to complete as soon as possible the acquisition of the site for, and the construction of, the irrigation and flood-control dam on the Washita River, and to establish, maintain, and improve a national memorial park on the site of the historical Battle of the Washita, fought between the Seventh United States Cavalry, under the command of Gen. George A. Custer, and members of the Cheyenne, Arapaho, Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, under the lead of Chiefs Black Kettle, Little Rock, Little Raven, Roman Nose, Lone Wolf, Santanta, and other prominent chiefs of these tribes; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be mailed by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, and to the Chief Clerk of both the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States; to each Member of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress; to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior; to the Chief Administrator of the Public Works Administration; to the Director of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations; and to the Chief of the Historical Division of the Department of the Interior.

Adopted by the house of representatives on the 18th day of January 1935.

Adopted by the senate on the 17th day of January 1935.

LEON C. PHILLIPS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

JAMES E. BEERY,

Correctly enrolled.

LOUIE W. BECK,
Chairman Committee on Enrolled and Engrossed Bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram from the secretary of the Senate of the State of Washington, embodying a memorial of the State legislature, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OLYMPIA, WASH., January 23, 1935.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.:

The Legislature of the State of Washington has just passed the following memorial:

"We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

"Whereas there is in the eastern section of the State of Washington a tract of approximately 1,200,000 acres of arid land which if brought under cultivation would greatly increase the wealth of the Nation generally and the Northwest in particular; and

"Whereas the irrigation of this tract is desirable for the reason that such improvement will immediately furnish direct employment for thousands of men in its construction and when completed will furnish thousands of small farms of high productivity; and

"Whereas farmers in many parts of the United States are suffering for want of regular annual crops because of loss of soil through erosion, exhaustion, drought, and other causes; and

"Whereas the national administration already is bringing about the withdrawal of so-called 'marginal and submarginal' lands of the kind described and the substitution of fertile lands where lack of moisture, barrenness, and similar drawbacks do not present themselves; and

"Whereas the so-called 'Columbia Basin tract' of 1,200,000 acres offers the greatest opportunity in the Nation for the establishment of a new empire with a truly electrified rural community, better homes, and a deserved place in the finally adopted national plan for long-range-power farm and rural-life development; and

"Whereas President Roosevelt already has taken a step for the building of a great combined power and irrigation project by making an initial allocation of $63,000,000 for a key dam over the Columbia River at Grand Coulee; and

"Whereas to provide for completion of the combined power and irrigation project will require an immediate order for alterations in the dam foundations and for other orders for starting work on the irrigation phases of the development; and

"Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington does herewith commend President Roosevelt for his vision in conceiving the Columbia River project in its entirety as a vital component part in a rounded plan of national resources development and projection and for his courage and wisdom in translating this vision into the course of action along which he is proceeding: Therefore

"Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, adopting all contained in the preamble hereof most earnestly declare in favor of the Federal Government immediately proceeding with the project in its entirety as was contemplated by President Roosevelt when he allocated $63,000,000 for the unit for which contract has been let and which is now under construction;

"That the foundation plans be immediately altered as may be necessary to proceed with construction of the dam to the ultimate height contemplated by the United States Army Engineers; and further

"That provision be made for proceeding immediately with the work of building dams for reservoir and laterals for irrigation.

"Now, therefore, the secretary of the Senate of the State of Washington is authorized and directed to transmit without delay a copy herewith to the President of the United States and to each branch of the Congress and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Washington.

"And your memorialists will ever pray."

HARRISON W. MASON,
Secretary of State Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from Fanny T. Pickrell, of San Mateo, Calif., remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called "Townsend old-age pension bill", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of Republic and Uniontown, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation empowering the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice to investigate all subversive activities of individuals and organizations, alien or otherwise, seeking or planning the overthrow of the Government by force or violence or other unlawful means, and also the deportation of all aliens advocating or planning the overthrow of the Government by force or violence, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Roberts, Wis., praying for continuance of the investigation of the munitions industry, which was referred to the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from William Evers, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate numerous telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the States of Connecticut, Illinois, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the ratification of the World Court protocols, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Kansas State Protective League of Women, Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of antilynching legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST presented the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF ARIZONA, TWELFTH LEGISLATURE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
REGULAR SESSION.

House Memorial 1

To the PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents:

Our Nation is suffering from the paralysis of industry and trade. The normal flow of commerce is obstructed, causing untold loss to basic industries and suffering and want to millions of citizens deprived of employment.

These deplorable conditions are so wide-spread that they are breeding a dangerous discontent, fostering un-Americanisms, and destroying the morale of the people to such an extent as to occasion apprehension for the safety of the Government.

It should be apparent that so long as the people have neither buying power nor the opportunity to create it, any effort to stimulate trade or industry must end in failure. All efforts to date have been either local in character or applied to the relief of certain classes of citizens, or designed to stabilize or stimulate certain trades or industries. Without decrying the limited and temporary benefits derived from such measures, we believe that in the end they can only fail to meet the Nation's needs.

The Townsend old-age revolving pension plan, which is simple, self-executing, self-liquidating, and Nation-wide in its application, is suggested as a practical means by which purchasing power may be immediately created, industry revived, and want and suffering dissipated. It contemplates no changes in the governmental structure nor the establishment of any new departments.

In support of this constructive proposal, we submit that the Townsend old-age revolving pension plan will fulfill the primary duty of the Government to provide a flexible, liquid, rapid-moving medium of exchange; make immediate openings for approximately 5,000,000 men to take the places vacated by as many pensioners; create 8,000,000 new jobs to supply the needs of that many persons who will be regularly expending $200 per month each, thus practically reestablishing normal conditions of employment, and will greatly lessen necessary expenditures for relief and do away with a large part of the crime, as it will do away with the incentive for the crime which now curses the land. Wherefore your memorialist prays:

1. That careful investigation be made of the provisions of the Townsend old-age pension plan, and if the claims made for said plan are found to be justified, that it be enacted into the law.

2. That the proposed legislation be so drawn as to merely suspend and not repeal existing pension laws.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Adopted by house January 22, 1935.

THOS. D. TWAY,
Speaker of the House.
LALLAH RUTH,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. NORRIS presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolution requesting the United States Government to establish a national arboretum at Nebraska City, Nebr.

Introduced by Senator Fred L. Carsten, of Cass

Whereas the rapid destruction of our forests and entirely inadequate reforestation efforts are bringing our State and Nation face to face with the serious dangers involved in wood shortage, rapidly increasing soil erosion, loss of subsoil moisture, and destruction of wildlife, not to mention the aesthetic values and opportunities for recreation lost by our lack of trees and shrubs; and

Whereas the United States Government has established a national arboretum near Washington where trees and woody shrubs from different parts of the world may be brought together, tested and compared to determine their relative merits for timber production, ornamental, and other purposes. There the laws of tree growth, reproduction, water conduction, nutrition, etc., and their relation to soil and other environmental conditions can be studied to excellent advantage; and

Whereas the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture said in its recent report to Congress on the forest problem of the United States: "Since many of the results to be obtained in arboreta are applicable only in the climatic regions within which the arboreta are located, there should be arboreta in all such regions"; and

Whereas Nebraska City, Nebr., would be an ideal location for a national arboretum that would furnish the whole Middle West with the inspiration and information needed for a reforestation program; and Nebraska City has the additional advantages of having near it a great variety of terrain, so that within the bounds of the five hundred to a thousand acres needed could be found hill and valley, dry land, and streams, as well as being already widely known as the home of J. Sterling Morton, the founder of Arbor Day: Be it therefore

Resolved, That we, the Senate of the State of Nebraska, do hereby urge the United States Government to establish a national aboretum at Nebraska City, Nebr., and thus create an institution which will go far to assure the permanent success of the forestry program so badly needed in the Middle West.

Mr. NORRIS also presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to include building of free interstate bridges across the Missouri River as Public Works Administration projects

(Introduced by Senators Neumann, Dafoe, Howell, Sullivan, Carsten, Wells, Crowley, Jelen, and McMahon)

Whereas in many instances the United States of America, through its Public Works Administration, has considered Federal aid, in whole or in part, on intrastate bridges within the State of Nebraska feasible projects to alleviate distress of the inhabitants of this State, accentuated by the 1934 destructive drought; and

Whereas the effect of the withering drought still pinches our people, and work relief is imperative if our State is effectively to carry on until private industry can absorb our employables now out of jobs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Nebraska in fiftieth session assembled,

1. That this house hereby respectfully petitions and memorializes the Congress of the United States to provide further assistance through its Public Works Administration to consider the immediate public necessity of 100-percent Federal participation in free interstate-bridge projects across the Missouri River at South Sioux City, Nebr.; Blair, Nebr.; Omaha, Nebr.; Plattsmouth, Nebr.; Nebraska City, Nebr.; Louisville, Nebr.; Decatur, Nebr.; Brownville, Nebr.; and Rulo, Nebr., or at such other locations across said river as good engineering and public necessity require.

2. That the secretary of the senate is hereby ordered and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the United States Senators representing the State of Nebraska, and to the Congressmen in the House of Representatives of the United States representing the State of Nebraska, to take such steps as may be necessary to provide for free interstate bridges across the Missouri River and thus afford the citizens of our State immediate relief which is desperately needed.

Mr. NORRIS also presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Nebraska, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolution—participation in the World Court

(Introduced by Senators Edward Gillette, of Phelps; A. L. Neumann, of Burt; Charles J. Warner, of Lancaster; W. C. Bullard, of Red Willow; Rolla C. Van Kirk, of Lancaster; Frank J. Brady, of Holt; A. T. Howard, of Scotts Bluff; and Sam J. Howell, of Douglas)

Whereas the United States Senate is discussing the proposal that this Nation enter the World Court and subject its citizens to foreign interference in disputes involving international policy; and

Whereas it has been the policy through the history of this Nation for its citizens to reach their own decisions in international affairs through their duly elected representatives; and

Whereas we believe a majority of the citizens of Nebraska strongly oppose entrance of the United States into foreign entanglements: Be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of Nebraska record itself in opposition to United States participation in the World Court, and that the secretary of this senate immediately forward copies of this resolution to Nebraska's representatives in the United States Senate, Senators GEORGE W. NORRIS and EDWARD R. BURKE.

FUNDS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred a brief resolution adopted by the council of the town of Harrison, N. J., urging an additional appropriation for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOWN OF HARRISON,

Resolution by Councilman O'Malley

Whereas an appreciable number of residents of the town of Harrison, Hudson County, N. J., who have made application to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for a mortgage loan upon their homes have received notice that their applications for a mortgage loan cannot be acted upon because the funds appropriated by Congress for the use of Home Owners' Loan Corporation has become exhausted: Therefore be it

Resolved by the council of the town of Harrison, in the County of Hudson and State of New Jersey: That the council respectfully petition and urge our duly elected Senators and Representatives to take such action as may be necessary to effectuate an additional appropriation of funds for use of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to United States Senators A. HARRY MOORE and WARREN A. BARBOUR and Representative FRED A. HARTLEY.

JOHN F. O'MALLEY.

JANUARY 22, 1935.

I, Francis J. McDonald, town clerk of the town of Harrison, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the council of the town of Harrison, N. J., at a meeting held January 22, 1935.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and the corporate seal of the town of Harrison this 24th day of January, A. D. 1935.

[SEAL] FRANCIS J. McDONALD, Town Clerk.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD in full and to lie on the table resolutions adopted by the faculty of Colby College, in my State, favoring the ratification of the World Court protocol.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the United States has advocated the judicial settlement of certain types of international disputes since the time of the First Hague Conference in 1899; and

Whereas the World Court has been successfully applying the judicial method to the settlement of international disputes for 12 years; and

Whereas the Senate voted for our adherence to the Court in 1926 if certain conditions were met, and the United States signed, under Executive authority, the three pending World Court treaties, because, in the judgment of the Department of State and other competent bodies, they do fully meet the Senate's conditions and will, when ratified, complete our adherence: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the faculty of Colby College expresses its earnest hope that the Senate of the United States will give its consent early in the 1935 session to ratification of the three pending World Court treaties so that the United States may complete its adherence to the Court and thus make clear to all the world its support of the settlement of international disputes by judicial process.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. AUSTIN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 406) to amend an act approved May 1, 1906, entitled "An act to create a board for the condemnation of insanitary buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 28) thereon.

By Mr. NYE:

A bill (S. 1468) for the relief of Charles Augustus Lathrop; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 1469) to transfer certain lands from the Veterans' Administration to the Department of the Interior for the benefit of Yavapai Indians, Arizona; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BYRD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 47) authorizing the President to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to James A. Austin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 4304) to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL LAND BANK, WICHITA, KANS.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 61), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the Wichita (Kans.) Federal Land Bank and allied institutions and departments located at such bank, and more particularly as follows:

(a) The extent and nature of the supervision exercised over said Wichita (Kans.) Land Bank and allied institutions by the Farm Credit Administration located at Washington.

(b) The alleged illegal and detrimental influence used by the said Farm Credit Administration over the members of the board of directors of said Wichita Land Bank in the selection and election of a president of the said land bank.

(c) The charge that alleged influence of an improper kind is being used, knowingly or unknowingly, by the Farm Credit Administration located at Washington in an attempted coercion of the members of the board of directors of the said Wichita (Kans.) Land Bank to force such members to vote for a president selected by such Farm Credit Administration in advance and contrary to the wishes of the members of said board of directors, and the charge that the said person suggested for election is being promoted by banking and commercial influences.

(d) The extent, if any, of the alleged coercion of officials of said Wichita (Kans.) Land Bank in relation to matters of the selection and the discharge of employees.

(e) The alleged existence of a ring within the said Wichita, Kans., institution which is alleged to be in full control of the said institution and that said institution is being managed and manipulated from partisan political considerations.

(f) The alleged detrimental influence upon such institution exerted by the Farm Credit Administration located at Washington in keeping on the board of directors of the said Wichita Land Bank a member who is alleged to be disqualified to hold such position under the law, rules, and regulations governing said institution.

(g) The alleged interference of the Farm Credit Administration located at Washington with the board of directors and other administrative officials of said institution in the proper discharge of their duties under the law, rules, and regulations governing said institution.

(h) The cause of the alleged failure of said Wichita Land Bank in giving attention to and taking care of the applications for loans arising from the territory embraced within such Federal land-bank district.

(i) The extent, if any, to which detrimental partisan politics has influenced the policies and activities of said Wichita institution.

(j) The extent, if any, of the alleged charge that partisan politics has dictated and controlled the selection and employment of attorneys to represent the said Wichita Land Bank and allied institutions in the conduct of its business.

(k) The committee is authorized and directed to investigate all matters connected with said Wichita (Kans.) Federal Land Bank and allied institutions with a view to the formulation and submission of legislation for the consideration of the Congress.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Congress until the final report is submitted, to require by subpena, or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. BULOW submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 62), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be held in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

INQUIRIES INTO DISASTERS AT SEA

Mr. WAGNER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 63), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas on September 8, 1934, the steamship Morro Castle, within 6 hours of its scheduled arrival in the port of New York, was swept by fire at sea with the loss of many lives; and

Whereas on January 24, 1935, the steamship Mohawk went down at sea with the loss of many additional lives; and

Whereas various investigations already held and now being held in connection with the Morro Castle disaster and the loss of the Mohawk, when combined with the records of other maritime tragedies in recent years, create a prima facie case that remediable conditions exist which do not tend to produce the utmost practicable degree of safety from the perils encountered upon the sea; and

Whereas it is imperative that life and property be accorded the utmost attainable degree of safety from such perils: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special select committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed (1) to collect, collate, coordinate, and make available to the Senate the results of (a) the inquiry into the Morro Castle disaster conducted by the Secretary of Commerce through the Steamboat Inspection Service of the Department of Commerce; (b) the inquiry into the Morro Castle disaster, and the actions taken in connection with or subsequent to such inquiry, by the United States attorney for the southern district of New York; (c) such inquiries into the Mohawk disaster as have been or may be conducted by the Secretary of Commerce through the Steamboat Inspection Service of the Department of Commerce and by the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, and the actions taken in connection with or subsequent to such inquiry; and (d) such other inquiries into the Morro Castle disaster, the Mohawk disaster, and other maritime tragedies as would, in the discretion of the committee, be helpful for the purposes of this resolution; (2) to make such further investigations of the Morro Castle and the Mohawk disasters, including the rescue operations carried on in connection therewith, as the committee shall deem advisable and necessary for the purposes of this resolution; (3) to investigate the adequacy and enforcement of the present legal standards of safety of ship construction and operation; (4) to investigate the prevalent methods and practices in the complementing of sea-going vessels, including all conditions of employment; (5) to investigate the adequacy and efficiency of the Steamboat Inspection Service; (6) to investigate whether the laws governing liability for loss of life and property at sea, the laws and usage of salvage, and the laws, usages, and practices of the business of marine insurance tend to encourage the installation and utilization of such devices and the promotion of such practices as are conducive to safety and to a paramount concern at all times for the preservation of life; and (7) to make a preliminary report of the results of its investigations as soon as practicable, to make further reports from time to time, but at least once during each regular session of the Senate until it has completed its investigations, and to submit a final report to the Senate, together with its recommendations for necessary legislation. The President of the Senate shall appoint members to fill any vacancies that may occur in the committee.

For the purposes of this resolution such committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth and succeeding Congresses until the final report is submitted, to employ such counsel, experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of such committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN MICHIGAN

Mr. VANDENBERG submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 64), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas there is great congestion in the district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan; and

Whereas there is an apparent need for a fourth district judge in said eastern district of Michigan; and

Whereas the eastern and western districts of Michigan cover vast geographical areas; and

Whereas great inconvenience in conducting the business of the district courts of said districts results from the traveling made necessary by the vastness of such areas; and

Whereas it may be advisable to redistrict the State of Michigan, creating three judicial districts therein, instead of providing for a fourth judge in the eastern district of said State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Department of Justice is requested to investigate the advisability of such redistricting and to report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation.

THE WORLD COURT

The Senate, in executive session, resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Mr. JOHNSON obtained the floor.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is absent in the Philippines upon business of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to announce that the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] are necessarily detained from the Senate; that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent on account of illness; and that the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator-elect from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] are absent on business of the Senate as members of the Philippine Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification, and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, as a very humble Member of this body, I wish, in the closing hours of this debate, to congratulate the Senate on the character of the debate that has been had here, to congratulate the individuals who have participated in it, and generally those who have been a part of the decision in this memorable question. I recognize, of course, that differences of opinion may exist; I recognize, of course, the right of any man upon this floor to his opinion and to have that opinion accorded the same respect that I hope may be accorded me for mine. I disagree emphatically, of course, with some things that have been said upon this floor and I disagree with those gentlemen who would undertake the policy that is now before us, fraught with such potential difficulties and perils to our country. Disagreeing with them, however, I recognize that they present their case in the same fashion that I endeavor to present mine. They are wrong, of course, but finding them thus wrong we will pass them by and, with Stern's recording angel, we "will drop a tear and blot it out of the page of life."

Mr. President, we have presented to us now the end of what has been another memorable contest in the Senate, and at the end of that contest there are a few things to which I wish to advert in order that they may be impressed upon the minds and the memories of those who desire to conserve their country's welfare. I bring them to you lest you forget; I bring them to you with the knowledge that your patriotism is as high as mine and that you desire as I desire, to do naught which shall detract from the future prosperity, the future glory, the future greatness or the future character of the great Nation to which both of us yield our adherence.

I recognize that outside this Chamber some of the things that I will advert to are old stuff; I recognize that some of the names that I will mention are mentioned now by certain editorial writers, and some others, and by those who arrogate to themselves a knowledge greater than that possessed ever before by man, only sneeringly and in contempt. I recognize that this discussion in the last few years has developed a peculiar psychology on the part of a number of people in this land, a number of people who forget all the wisdom of the past and all the men of the days gone by who made it possible for you and me to sit here in this body and made it possible that there should be a United States of America and a lasting people's government in this world.

The utterances of the distinguished gentlemen who are forever indulging in their jibes of those of bygone days you have read as I have read, and perhaps you understand, as I do not, the strange gyrations mentally of the minds of the internationalist writers of today and of those people who have grown so great that the limits of the United States of America no longer can confine their overgrown personalities and their marvelous mentalities.

Senators realize, as I do, that the gentlemen who write and who talk about "old stuff" and "forgotten men" in the history of this land, write themselves the great of today and the great of the past, and no wisdom of the years can affect them for they know it all. They, with their sneers for those whom we have ever honored, with their sneers regarding our experience or history, would strike from the memories of our youth the patriots who gave us the Republic.

We are dealing today with one simple proposition—shall we go into foreign politics? Phrase it as you will, belittle it as you may, minimize as you see fit anything in this discussion, the question in the last analysis is: Shall we go into foreign politics? That is the real question. As Mr. Beveridge said in that very excellent work of his of a few years ago:

> The manner of going in is not important. Once we are in we are in. We can depend upon that. We shall find it hard to get out after we make the plunge, no matter what style of bathing suit we wear.

There is the problem. Shall we go into politics foreign to ourselves and our institutions? Once we are in it does not make any difference whether we are in a little way or whether we are in a long way, or whether we have gone into one appendage of the League or whether we have gone into the League—once we are in, we are in. That is all there is to it. The difficulty of getting out will be obvious to the thoughtful and disinterested.

Of course—

Said Mr. Beveridge—

> Europe wants us in on any pretext. There is no doubt about that. Mr. Lloyd George declared in the House of Commons that "What really matters is getting the Americans in, with or without the League of Nations."

Getting us in! Getting us in! Oh, Senators may not have my antiquity of years, but if they will recall what transpired before the Great War they will remember that there were certain propagandists in this country with just a thought in mind—the single thought to get us in. That was the theory and that was the idea which was presented. Some of those propagandists are today yet propagandizing to get us into Europe.

> The latest English book in defense of the League, published this year—

It was 1924 that Beveridge was writing—

> admonishes the British people that they should do everything possible to facilitate American adhesion to the International Court and participation in such League activities as may interest her. It we can do these things, it is certain as anything can be that in 3 or 4 years at most the United States will be putting at the service of the League all the immense prestige conferred upon her by her size and her power.

I know that statement is undoubtedly true. It is written, of course, by one abroad, but it is the fact that none who are familiar with the history of this Nation in recent years can for an instant gainsay. Get us in! That is the point. American adhesion to the International Court or participation in the League—that is the point. Get us in; and when we are in, then, of course, all the internationalists of this land will tell of the necessity that exists for us to perform our moral obligations and, if necessary, become a part of the intrigue, the controversies, the broils, and possibly ultimately the wars on the other side of the ocean.

Today my text is "The Forgotten Men of American History." I would not dare stand here and read, because of its offensiveness to editorial writers in this land, George Washington's Farewell Address. It is out of date, say they. It is outworn, say they. Oh, Washington, they say, lived in another age, and he should not be heard. It is "old stuff", they repeat again and again. But I have prepared, from George Washington to Theodore Roosevelt, what has been said by these who have gone before, concerning matters abroad and concerning our participation in difficulties across the sea. I ask leave that these excerpts may be included in the RECORD, that I may not have to read them all, and then, with a reference here and there, I want to demonstrate that until 20 years ago there never was such a psychology in this country as the last 20 years has brought about; and the last 20 years bringing it about has brought a peculiar sort of people among us, with whom we had not been familiar, with a different attitude toward our country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from California is granted.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. JOHNSON. Senators will remember, of course, Hamilton and his position, Washington and his position. Senators will recall, because it has been printed so often, Thomas Jefferson's admonition to us. I recall, too, as other Senators probably do, old John Adams' statement in reference to our attitude toward Europe. Then Senators remember, doubtless, his remarkable son, who expressed himself in language that lasts today as the most eloquent probably that has been uttered in respect to the question, lasts all over this land, and ought to be all-controlling with our people. Adams, while Secretary of State, spoke his mind in no uncertain fashion. Emerson, out of Massachusetts, spoke his as well. Then came Andrew Jackson, and following Andrew Jackson came the great Democratic President, Grover Cleveland. William McKinley followed him, and Theodore Roosevelt, the last of the illustrious line who insisted upon the character of our foreign relations and the maintenance inviolate of the policy first declared by Washington.

I want to read an article on this subject by one who has been mentioned here often during this debate. I mention this article, and I read it, because John Bassett Moore is today, with an enriched experience and ability and an integrity that none questions, and with a learning that equals that, in his particular sphere, of any man on the face of the earth, still one of the greatest of Americans.

In Foreign Affairs, an American Quarterly Review, for July 1933, he wrote An Appeal to Reason, and he wrote this appeal because he saw, with his ripe experience, exactly the trend there was in the peculiar psychology of this country from those who call themselves internationalists.

Mr. Moore, in the course of this article, referred, first, to the doctrine as announced by Mr. Stimson.

In order to ensure entire precision I have explained the new psychology in the very words used by Mr. Stimson, its authoritative exponent and sponsor, in two issues of Foreign Affairs. Mr. Stimson, just as might have been expected, has not changed front on the Kellogg Pact. He still says that its efficacy must depend on public opinion and not on force. It is only when the sanctions of the Covenant and the alleged "decisions" of the League are invoked that he welcomes, as agencies of peace, the menaces and measures of war which the Covenant prescribes. I have no quarrel with Mr. Stimson. He is present in my reflections only as the spokesman, and as a sincere spokesman, of a group identified with a certain type of mind and thought, and with a belief in methods and measures which I, who modestly pray for peace in my own time, profoundly distrust not only because they have no visible moorings on earth or in the sky but also because they have infected many of my countrymen with confused notions of law and conduct which, while they endanger our most vital interests, hold out hopes of partisan intervention that encourage European governments to defer the readjustments which only they can make and which are essential to peace and tranquillity in that quarter. As long as we persist in our misguided role, so long will discussions of disarmament be dominated by thoughts of war rather than of peace.

Again, Mr. Moore takes up the thread of our birthright. Oh, it is a terrible thing to speak of our birthright now. According to the internationalists outside this Chamber, we have no birthright. Ours is simply to do, under some undisclosed, mysterious, spiritual mysticism, something for all the rest of the world rather than something first for our own.

In speaking on our birthright, he quotes, first, Washington's Farewell Address, which I dare not read, of course, because it is old stuff, and it "comes from a man who lived long ago"; as if wisdom were dependent upon the last few years, and had to emanate from some internationalist who believed that the duty of all of us was, first, to go abroad and attend to people over there.

Wisdom, like many other things, with age becomes better defined and better understood, and is of more value unto peoples. But the gentlemen who prate about what our duty is abroad can find no wisdom in all the past experience that counts for aught. What has been said by those who have been ours counts for nothing; there is nothing, indeed, that counts with them except some jittery organization which has not any understanding whatsoever of the question at issue or of its details.

Sagacious John Adams—

Writes Mr. Moore, after quoting Washington and Jefferson—who spent many years in Europe and signed our first treaty with Holland, as well as the treaty with Great Britain, acknowledging our independence, when a European diplomatist remarked that he seemed to be afraid of being made the tool of the powers of Europe, exclaimed, "Indeed I am."

What a terrible thing that is! I think I heard somebody upon this floor ask, "Are you afraid of these judges who sit in this sacrosanct Court?" I answer him that I am afraid of some of these judges who sit in this sacrosanct Court, and I am more afraid of their chancellories that direct their activities and command their services.

Old John Adams, when spoken to regarding the powers of Europe, and asked if he was afraid of being made a tool by the powers of Europe, exclaimed:

Indeed I am.

And when asked—

What powers?

Replied—

All of them.

What a terrible thing to say! Awful! But he had been there, and he had dealt with them, and he understood; and he added:

It is obvious that all the powers of Europe will be continually maneuvering with us to work us into their real or imaginary balances of power.

Why, of course! I read to you the other day the dispatch to the New York Times in 1926, when the word first came that America had joined the World Court, or was about to do so. Briand, the apostle of peace, said, "It is a beau geste; it is the first step"; and Chamberlain, the wily diplomat of Britain, said, "Don't say that! Sh-h-h-h! Don't say that", and Mr. Briand said nothing more; and the correspondent, in commenting upon it, said that after all, Europe regarded the joining of the World Court as perhaps not a particularly important matter, but Europe regarded our joining the World Court as all-important from the standpoint of our participation in world politics and European affairs. That is the point of what we are doing today, and that is the thing that I would prevent, were it possible to do so.

Said John Adams:

They will all wish to make of us a makeweight candle, when they are weighing out their pounds. Indeed, it is not surprising; for we shall very often, if not always, be able to turn the scale. But I think it ought to be our rule not to meddle; and that of all the powers of Europe not to desire us, or perhaps even to permit us, to interfere if they can help it.

Nothing more profoundly true was ever said—

Says Judge Moore—

and this was fully recognized by all our national administrations and by our greatest statesmen down to 20 years ago, when, to the disturbance of our interests and our happiness, we began to swing on the trapeze at international political performances and even to pay for the privilege of so doing.

Not long ago—

a callow stripling, when I mentioned the name of George Washington, curtly remarked that his ideas were out of date and unsuited to the modern world.

This international press says, "It is old stuff; old stuff by an old man, a forgotten man, a forgotten American!"

Not long ago a callow stripling, when I mentioned the name of George Washington, curtly remarked that his ideas were out of date and unsuited to the modern world. This is an essential postulate of the shallow dupes who, prating of our having lately become a "world power", urge that we blindly don an imported livery of "world service", to be paid for, on demand, in unestimated installments of blood and treasure. But it is a sad day when the children of a nation are taught to prattle ignorant and perverted slights of the men who, with steady and skillful hands, laid the foundations of its greatness and prosperity; men to whom, by reason of their exemplary valor, integrity, and wisdom, an understanding world has awarded the highest place among the immortals. Thomas Jefferson, who spoke with the authority of an intimate official association and with an intelligence that embraced all times and all climes, declared that in elevation of character, in sureness of judgment, in firmness of purpose, in inflexible justice, and in scrupulous obedience to the laws, civil and military, throughout his whole career, Washington furnished an example unparalleled in history. Jefferson himself stands before the world as a great political genius, whose ideas still stir men's minds. Alexander Hamilton, soldier, jurist, great administrator, of whom Webster said that "he touched the dead corpse of public credit, and it sprung upon its feet", is still studied as a profound political theorist at home and abroad. And what of Benjamin Franklin, discoverer, inventor, philosopher, consummate diplomatist at home and in all lands, of whom Charles Phillips eloquently said that his fame would revive the hopes of men in ages yet to come?

Such are the men whom our vaporers of current sublimities would shelve as fossils in our museums of natural history, on the hasty supposition that by various modern devices, by which men may more rapidly and more frequently communicate, and more quickly hurt or help one another, discordant races and people have been harmoniously united in thought and in action and in brotherly love.

* * * The times must be out of joint when a warlike ardor for peace depreciates the glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome; when new and untried visions are held superior to the proved philosophies of Plato and Aristotle, of Cicero and Seneca, of Bacon and John Locke; and when the wisdom of great statesmen, heard with reverence only 20 years ago, is suddenly rejected as having no current value.

Then, Judge Moore discusses the question of our being a world power and shows that always we have been:

It is useless—

He proceeds—

to continue the specification of instances. Nations, like individuals, may increase their power by combining with a due attention to their own business the extension of their friendly offices to brethren in trouble, and by conserving their militant resources for occasions when their vital interests are at stake. A nation that undertakes to meddle with every foreign disturbance is bound to become an international nuisance, to its own detriment as well as to the annoyance of other countries. Power is neither gained nor kept by such methods. Although megalomania may be sincere, it is noted for its mistakes.

He deals then with the question of isolationists, and says that we should not resent being called "isolationists", and that we have good ancestral justification, which he describes; and then, at the conclusion of that paragraph:

It would be as sensible to condemn as an "isolationist" a man who did not tie himself up with unnecessary contracts, and especially of the kind that were likely to impoverish or ruin him, without benefit to himself and perhaps with injury to others. Such epithets serve only to exemplify the want of knowledge and of understanding of those who employ them.

* * * * * * *

We also hear much of the "international mind." Would to God that we had more of it! But in devoutly expressing this wish I do not confine it to my own country, nor do I lack a definite conception of what an international mind ought to be. Having for many years been connected with the administration of foreign affairs, I can truthfully affirm that there is no nation toward which I cherish a feeling of enmity. I have always been a peacemaker; and, as an international judge, I am willing to stand on my record as one who strove to act without fear or favor. But I confess—

Oh, what a confession is this! Oh, how down upon our devoted heads will it draw the anathema of all these international writers and all these international newspapers.

I have always been—

He says—

a peacemaker * * *. But I confess—

I confess it, too, my friends—that of all countries I love my own the best.

Of all countries, I love my own the best!

No international mind is, in my opinion, to be desired or to be trusted that is not built on a national foundation. The man who cannot sing his national anthem with a whole heart is not fit to be entrusted with negotiations with foreign powers. No experienced diplomatist would trust out of his sight an adversary who did not seek to obtain for his own country a square deal. Only those who are disposed to maintain the rights and interests of their respective countries can treat with one another on the basis of mutual self-respect. The best diplomatists are those who are willing to give as well as to take; who can grasp and apply the equitable solution that assures to each that which is justly due; who, in leaving behind them no heart burning and resentments, conserve the interests of all. It is a pleasure to remember the men of this type with whom I have dealt.

We are told that invention and trade and industrial organization cannot be reversed. But nobody wishes or proposes to reverse them. We are told that the world has become too dependent on comforts to be willing to give them up; but, although dependence on comforts is not a sign of strength, either physical or mental, no one is specially advocating their abandonment. But the culmination is reached when we are told that we cannot "retire within our borders" and lead a life of "isolation."

When have we ever done such a thing, or proposed to do it?

The late Grand Duke Alexander of Russia, on revisiting the United States in 1928 after an absence of 13 years, said that on his return the impression he had got was that what he had admired as the robustness of American life "had given place to the sickening self-consciousness of an hysterical idealism", and had been superseded by the "same hodge podge of badly digested ideas" as had characterized the Guards Barracks in St. Petersburg 30 years back. "So this", he exclaimed, "was the American share of the Versailles spoils! It seemed bewildering that any nation should send 2,000,000 men across the ocean to fight for something that did not concern it in the least, tear up the map of the world, and lend billions of dollars to its competitors", all for the purpose of acquiring the worse traits of pre-war Europe.

I cannot, within the limits of the time that is mine, read to you all that I should like to read; but one further brief passage:

Esau, thinking that he was about to die, sold his birthright for a mess of pottage; but the Bible censures him for having despised his birthright. What would have been the nature of the censure if he had thrown his birthright wantonly away or had allowed himself to be cheated out of it? Europe is the victim of history, a seething mass of hereditary feuds. They exist in the western part as well as in the eastern, and they are peculiarly bitter in the southeastern where the war in 1914 originated. The Balkan Peninsula may be likened to a Vesuvius, always in danger of eruption. Once when I asked an Albanian to meet a Serbian he did not know, he hissed in reply: "He i-s-s my en-e-my!" The United States may, if it should unhappily see fit to do so, associate itself with these feuds and henceforth help to fight them out. It may embitter and help to perpetuate them, but it cannot end them.

I read that because it is the utterance of a philosopher and author, a man of tremendous ability, and a man of service and experience, and he expresses a view that I reecho. After all, where are our memories; where are our recollections of what occurred?

I remember sitting in this body with the solemn call of war upon us. I remember the men who came from abroad and talked to us from that platform. I recall the distinguished Englishman who told us, in words that brought tears to the eyes of all of us, how his nation was fighting, as ours, he hoped, would be fighting—fighting for the rest of humankind; not for aggrandizement, not for selfishness, not for pelf, not for power, not for territory, not for having new peoples; and at the very time he was talking to us thus, his pockets were bulging with secret treaties by which he and those who were associated with him had divided up the earth and all the lands they expected to come from the victory that we were to win for them!

That is a part of the game abroad. It is not a part of our game at home. We do not believe in that sort of thing. It is an altruism, a mysticism, and I think indeed it is an altruism which misses its mark, that takes so many people in their enthusiasms and their emotions into a contest such as that in which we are now engaged—doing it for what? Not for their country; not to solve all the ills that exist abroad, because none have been solved in the last 14 years as they should have been solved by those who were parties to them; not, indeed, for the benefit of humankind, but to go into that maelstrom with a misdirected emotional urge in order to play their part in world affairs—world affairs with which we have naught to do.

I will not yield to the longest-haired man there is in America who is prating about peace in the desire for peace. I want peace. I fought for peace as long as I could, and I will continue in the same attitude in the days to come as in the days gone by.

I recall during the war—and I have watched with great interest what the munitions investigation has been doing, and I congratulate the members of that committee upon their work—I recall during the war, young as I was then in service in this body, standing here and presenting an amendment to the tax bill to take 80 percent of excess profits from those who were making those excess profits during the war. I stood here and I saw, just as I have seen it in fights of this sort, both sides of the Chamber arrayed against me; and I recall how proud I was, when, after the long fight to take 80 percent of excess profits from men who were profiting out of the killing of our youth abroad, I received 17 votes in the United States Senate. Seventeen votes, and that was all! The RECORD will bear me out in that regard; and the RECORD will give the names, if Senators desire them, of those who voted the one way and those who voted the other way.

I am for peace. No man dare tell me I am not. I am not for taking this country into Europe, for it does not mean peace. When we have gone in there has always been difficulty; there has always been trouble; there always will be difficulty and trouble. Why go? Why go?

Oh, they tell us in ethereal tones, and in language soft and sweet, that we go solely for the purpose of stopping wars and bringing peace unto mankind; and yet they have not in all these 14 years stopped a single war nor done a single deed that looked toward the permanency of peace.

We have too many people in this country who want to look beyond our boundaries. We need have no feeling of prejudice or hostility to any other country on the face of the earth. I have none, never have had, and never will have. That is not the point that is involved here. They would not, however, think of coming over here to join us for the preservation of anything of ours in which they had no interest. If we are periling our institutions, or if in any degree we change the characteristics of our particular form of government, or if we are to be embroiled in Europe's interminable strife, troubles, and controversies, we ought not to go abroad in any way, in any shape, in any fashion, little or big, to join some foreign contraption over there.

Theodore Roosevelt in one of his very apt expressions said this on one occasion:

I do not believe that the United States should enter into a world-wide career of disinterested violence for the right; because where both the lands and the issues involved are remote from us our people wouldn't know with certainty where the right lay and wouldn't feel that we ought to go into the quarrel. We have enough to do that is our business.

Good God, have we not enough to do in this particular time that constitutes our own business? How about our 11,000,000 unemployed? How about our relief rolls? Stand here and talk upon the subject of going over to Europe, when there is legislation awaiting, and not only that, but when the highest thought and best statesmanship there is in this land should be devoted to the men in this country, Americans here, who need our aid.

Theodore Roosevelt again said—and I read these things so that the Senate may know that there has been no difference in the attitude of statesmen who have gone before from Washington to Roosevelt—Theodore Roosevelt said:

The professed internationalist usually sneers at nationalism, at patriotism, and at what we call Americanism.

Why, we see it every day, we read it every day, we have it before us, and dished out to us constantly by those who would take us abroad. Theodore Roosevelt said:

The professed internationalist usually sneers at nationalism, at patriotism, and at what we call "Americanism." He bids us forswear our love of country in the name of love of the world at large. We nationalists answer that he has begun at the wrong end; we say that, as the world now is, it is only the man who ardently loves his country first who in actual practice can help any other country at all.

Are we quite so supine and indifferent that we look upon the right to go abroad as something bestowed upon us as a favor? The only man who can render service in this time and render it well is the man who loves his own country first, and who would not go abroad except it be at his country's behest and in his country's behalf.

William McKinley stated the policy—if he still has any weight among the Republicans upon this side:

It has been the policy of the United States since the foundation of the Government to cultivate relations of peace and amity with all nations of the world, and this accords with my conception of our duty now.

We have cherished the policy of noninterference with the affairs of foreign governments wisely inaugurated by Washington.

Oh, if McKinley were here today and he made a remark about Washington of that sort, how he would be held up to contempt, ridicule, and obloquy by the internationalists who edit papers and who look forward, some of them, to a decoration from a foreign power.

We have cherished the policy of noninterference with the affairs of foreign governments wisely inaugurated by Washington * * * content to leave undisturbed with them the government of their own domestic concerns.

There is another statement by Grover Cleveland that I want to read also. Grover Cleveland once penned a message when the Venezuelan dispute was before the world—a message that will last after every man who stands upon this floor is long forgotten. It rang with the truest patriotism, with firmness, devotion to peace, and devotion to country. That message every Senator should read if he wants to be stirred by the patriotism of a really great President. Cleveland said on another occasion:

The genius of our institutions, the needs of our people in their home life, and the attention which is demanded for the settlement and development of the resources of our vast territory dictate the scrupulous avoidance of any departure from that foreign policy commended by the history, the traditions, and the prosperity of our Republic. It is the policy of independence, favored by our position and defended by our known love of justice and by our own power. It is the policy of peace suitable to our interests. It is the policy of neutrality, rejecting any share in foreign broils and ambitions upon other continents and repelling their intrusion here. It is the policy of Monroe and of Washington and Jefferson, "Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliance with none."

Oh, in the last 20 years a strange psychology has assailed us in this land. These, all these to whom I have referred, are the forgotten men of the Republic of America. These are the men whom you dare not now quote, and whom, if you do, you are quoting "old stuff", and you are being told by gentlemen of the internationalist press that these men have become merely anachronisms in the history of the world. These are now the forgotten men of our history, Mr. President.

You, sirs, over there may win the vote in this contest—I do not know. You, sirs, over there may be able in one fashion or another to be successful in what you design. You may, in your view, win. But the victory, sirs, is ours, for we stand with the forgotten men of American history, the forgotten men who made the American Republic.

EXHIBIT A

George Washington to Thomas Jefferson, 1788: "We shall feel more than ever the want of an efficient general government to * * * connect the political views and interests of the several States under one head in such a manner as will effectually prevent them from forming separate, improper, or, indeed, any connection with the European powers which can involve them in their political disputes. For our situation is such as makes it not only unnecessary but extremely imprudent for us to take a part in their quarrels."

George Washington: "I hope the United States of America will be able to keep disengaged from the labyrinth of European policies and wars. It should be the policy of the United States to administer to their wants without being engaged in their quarrels."

Gen. George Washington to C. C. Pinckney, July 8, 1796: "It is a fact too notorious to be denied that the greatest embarrassments under which the administration of this Government labors proceed from the counteraction of people among ourselves, who are disposed to promote the views of another nation than to establish national character of their own."

John Adams: "The moral character of the United States is of more importance than any alliance."

John Adams, after leaving the Presidency, wrote: "National defense is one of the cardinal duties of a statesman. On this head I recollect nothing with which to reproach myself. The delightful imaginations of universal and perpetual peace have often amused but have never been credited by me."

Thomas Jefferson, extracts from his writings: "We have a perfect horror of everything like connecting ourselves with the politics of Europe." (To Wm. Short, 1801.)

"Commerce with all nations, alliance with none, should be our motto." (To T. Lomax, March 1799.)

"We wish not to meddle with the internal affairs of any country nor with the general affairs of Europe." (To W. F. Dumas, 1793.)

"The fundamental principle of our Government is never to entangle us with the broils of Europe." (To M. Coray, 1823.)

"I know that it is a maxim with us, and I think it a wise one, not to entangle ourselves with the affairs of Europe." (1787.)

"Better keep together as we are, haul off from Europe as soon as we can, and from all attachments to any portion of it." (To John Taylor, 1798.)

"All entanglements with that quarter of the globe (Europe) should be avoided if we mean that peace and justice shall be the polar stars of the American societies." (To J. Correa, 1820.)

"I join you in a sense of the necessity of restoring freedom of the ocean. But I doubt, with you, whether the United States ought to join in an armed confederacy for that purpose; or, rather, I am satisfied they ought not." (To George Logan, 1801.)

"Our Nation has wisely avoided entangling itself in the system of European interests, has taken no side between its rival powers, attached itself to none of its ever-changing confederacies." (Reply to address of Baltimore Baptists, 1808.)

"I have ever deemed it fundamental for the United States never to take active part in the quarrels of Europe. Their political interests are entirely distinct from ours. Their mutual jealousies, their balance of power, their complicated alliances, their forms and principles of government, are all foreign to us. They are nations of eternal war." (To President Monroe, 1823.)

"It ought to be the very first object of our pursuits to have nothing to do with the European interests and politics. Let them be free or slaves at will, navigators or agricultural, swallowed into one government or divided into a thousand, we have nothing to fear from them in any form." (To George Logan, March 1801.)

Thomas Jefferson, from his first inaugural address: "Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none."

John Quincy Adams, while Secretary of State: "The political system of the United States is also essentially extra-European. To stand in firm and cautious independence of all entanglements in the European system has been a cardinal point of their policy under every administration of their government, from the peace of 1783 to this day. If at the original adoption of their system there could have been any doubt of its justice or wisdom, there can be none at this time (July 25, 1820.) Every year's experience rivets it more deeply in the principles and opinions of the Nation. Yet in proportion as the importance of the United States as one of the members of the general society of nations increases in the eyes of the others, the difficulties of maintaining this system and the temptations to depart from it increase and multiply with it."

Letter of Adams to Addington, November 19, 1923: "No congress" (referring to the Holy Alliance) "he maintained, could give Europe a right 'to stretch the arm of power across the Atlantic'" * * * "The very atmosphere of such an assembly must be considered by this Government as infected—and unfit for their plenipotentiary to breathe in." "The ground I wish to take", he wrote in his diary, "is that of earnest remonstrance against the interference of the European powers by force in South America—but to disclaim all interference on our part with Europe."

"As the Holy Alliance has come to edify and instruct us with their principles, it is due in candor to them and in justice to ourselves to return the compliment" (p. 122, Holy Alliance).

Emerson on the Holy Alliance: "Aloof from contagion during the long progress of their decline, America hath ample interval to lay deep and solid foundations for the greatness of the New World.

"Let the young American withdraw his eyes from all but his own country, and try, if he can, to find employment there * * *. In this age the despots of Europe are engaged in the common cause of tightening the bonds of monarchy about the thriving liberties and the laws of men; and the unprivileged orders, the bulk of human society, gasping for breath beneath their chains, and darting impatient glances toward the free institution of other countries. To America, therefore, monarchs look with apprehension, and the people with hope."

Ralph Waldo Emerson: "Let the passion for America cast out the passion for Europe. Here let there be what the earth waits for—exalted manhood. What this country longs for is personalities, grand persons, to counteract its materialities. For it is the rule of the universe that corn shall serve man, and not man corn.

"They who find America insipid—they for whom London and Paris have spoiled their own homes—they can be spared to return to those cities. I not only see a career at home for more genius than we have, but for more than there is in the world."

Andrew Jackson: "Cultivate free commerce and honest friendship with all nations, but make entangling alliances with none. Our best wishes on all occasions, our good offices when required, will be afforded to promote the domestic peace and foreign tranquillity of all nations with whom we have any intercourse. Any intervention in their affairs further than this is contrary to our principles."

Grover Cleveland: "The genius of our institutions, the needs of our people in their home life, and the attention which is demanded for the settlement and development of the resources of our vast territory dictate the scrupulous avoidance of any departure from that foreign policy commended by the history, the traditions, and the prosperity of our Republic. It is the policy of independence, favored by our position and defended by our known love of justice, and by our own power. It is the policy of peace suitable to our interests. It is the policy of neutrality, rejecting any share in foreign broils and ambitions upon other continents and repelling their intrusion here. It is the policy of Monroe, and of Washington, and Jefferson—'Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliance with none.'"

William McKinley: "It has been the policy of the United States since the foundation of the Government to cultivate relations of peace and amity with all the nations of the world, and this accords with my conception of our duty now.

"We have cherished the policy of noninterference with the affairs of foreign governments, wisely inaugurated by Washington * * * content to leave undisturbed with them the settlement of their own domestic concerns."

Theodore Roosevelt: "I do not believe that the United States should enter into a world-wide career of distinterested violence for the right; because where both the lands and the issues involved are remote from us our people wouldn't know with certainty where the right lay and wouldn't feel that we ought to go into the quarrel. We have enough to do that is our business." Theodore Roosevelt in his book The Great Adventure: "The professed internationalist usually sneers at nationalism, at patriotism, and at what we call 'Americanism.' He bids us foreswear our love of country in the name of love of the world at large. We nationalists answer that he has begun at the wrong end; we say that, as the world now is, it is only the man who ardently loves his country first who in actual practice can help any other country at all."

Hamilton's letter of March 17, 1783: "We have, I fear, men among us and men in trust who have a hankering after British connection. We have others whose confidence in France savors of credulity. The intrigues of the former, the incautiousness of the latter may be both, though in different degrees, injurious to the American interest, and make it difficult for prudent men to steer a proper course."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I call up at this time the reservation submitted by me to the resolution of adherence on the part of the United States to the World Court protocols. I send the reservation to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed reservation will be read for the information of the Senate.

The proposed reservation was read, as follows:

Resolved further, That adherence to the protocols and statute is upon the express condition and understanding that the doctrine pronounced by President James Monroe, known and commonly called the "Monroe Doctrine", is and shall in no manner be affected or modified by the said World Court, and that the rights and duties assumed and heretofore exercised by the United States under said Monroe Doctrine shall never be affected by the said World Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer the reservation?

Mr. LONG. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to be recognized on the resolution of adherence or upon his reservation? Under the unanimous-consent agreement, which comes into force at 1 o'clock, the Senator may be recognized either upon the resolution or upon his reservation, upon the resolution for 30 minutes, upon the reservation for 15 minutes.

Mr. LONG. I wish to take up the reservation and speak on that first. Then I will have the right to take my 30 minutes on the resolution itself if I shall desire to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will have that right.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Coolidge | King | Radcliffe |
| Ashurst | Costigan | La Follette | Reynolds |
| Austin | Couzens | Lewis | Robinson |

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] caused by illness, the absence of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] caused by illness, and to announce again the fact that the Members of the Senate comprising the Philippine Commission have not returned from their duties in that connection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

STANDARD OIL OR MONROE DOCTRINE, WHICH?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have called up for consideration at this time a reservation to the World Court resolution. For the benefit of the Senators who have returned to the Chamber under the quorum call, I wish to read the reservation so that they may hear it and have it in mind. It is as follows:

Resolved further, That adherence to the protocols and statute is upon the express condition and understanding that the doctrine pronounced by President James Monroe, known and commonly called the "Monroe Doctrine", is and shall in no manner be affected or modified by the said World Court, and that the rights and duties assumed and heretofore exercised by the United States under said Monroe Doctrine shall never be affected by the said World Court.

I do not know whether there is going to be any opposition to this reservation or not. I do not think there ought to be. If there is not going to be any opposition to the Monroe Doctrine being kept intact as it has been for a hundred years, I shall not now take any time of the Senate. In other words, I hope it is to be accepted more or less in a formal manner, and if I can be assured that there is to be no opposition to it, I do not care to take any time of the Senate. May I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas how he feels about it?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, so far as I am authorized to speak, I cannot accept the reservation offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I regret that very much, Mr. President. Whether that is the only objection we will have I cannot say; nevertheless, I will have to take it as being serious.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator may be assured that it is a serious statement. I would not want to deprive the Senator of the opportunity to discuss his proposed reservation on the theory that I was not sincere. I am sincere. I do not believe the reservation is either necessary or would be helpful.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we have been living in this country under the Monroe Doctrine for a little over a hundred years. It is a democratic principle. It was promulgated by the President of the United States to save this country and contiguous territory from aggression, from involvement. Said President James Monroe to Europe—and I translate his words into the common parlance of the layman's understanding—"Stay out of America"; and only last year the United States Senate went on record as extending the Monroe Doctrine by saying to America, "Stay out of the Orient."

Many years ago, when President Theodore Roosevelt was faced with the proposition of German warships cruising in and about South America, he said to them, "Stay out of America"; said Roosevelt to Europe, "Stay out of America." Said Monroe to Europe, "Stay out of America." Said Washington to America, "Stay out of Europe." Said the United States Senate to America, "Stay out of the Orient."

Now, are we going to make all these words meaningless that have been affirmed here up to 12 months ago? Are we going to take the cornerstones of every one of these principles that were intended to keep America from being involved in strife and turmoil and protected from foreign aggression on contiguous territory and on this continent and smash them today and hold them to be nonexistent? Has anyone dared to stand on the floor of the Senate and inform the Members of this body and the people of the United States in general that the League of Nations or the World Court, or whatever it may be called—and I care not under what kind of label it comes; I have a label that I will give it in a few minutes of my own [laughter]—intends to do away with the Monroe Doctrine? Who is there here so bold as will admit what I conceive to be the truth, whether it is admitted or not, and which I will prove to be true and practically to be recognized by this resolution—who is there so bold as to stand here now and say, "I am casting my vote to abrogate the Monroe Doctrine and to do away with America's sovereignty over that principle"? That is what we are doing. If you doubt that we are doing that, why would there be any opposition to a proposed reservation which says that the World Court shall not affect the Monroe Doctrine or the traditions under which we have lived as a result of that doctrine?

The Monroe Doctrine has not been used, unfortunately, in its broad sense for the purpose for which it was originally promulgated. It was originally promulgated and inhered as a tradition of this country on the ground that America was a strong brother, lending his arm to the protection of the weaker brother to the south, but as time went on the big capitalistic interests of this country perverted the principles of the Monroe Doctrine to their own use and made it an instrument for the protection of their aggressions, in many instances under the guise of United States protection. That was the principle under which the United Fruit Co. operated; it was the principle under which the United States allowed the Standard Oil Co. to operate; and today, with the Standard Oil Co. having gone as far as it can, with the port of New Orleans formerly used for its aggressions, murders, and war, but now bottled against it; today they have got to transfer the scene of activity and of sovereignty to a foreign shore in order that they may carry on the immediate aggressions at hand.

I showed on the floor of the Senate something no one has undertaken to dispute. I said on the floor of the Senate on a certain day and date that the League of Nations is undertaking to do the bidding of the Standard Oil Co. I showed on the floor of the Senate what no one questioned—and I am almost ashamed, Mr. President, to say that even those who understand the facts may yet vote in favor of the World Court—as to the activities of the Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana and the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey. I say "the Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana", but it is the Standard Oil Co. of Texas; it is the concern that was convicted and held to be a criminal, that ran out of the State of Texas, came to Louisiana, and rechartered its existence as the Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana; and today, when one drives eastward, coming from Texas into Louisiana, he finds a great big sign on or over the public road where Texas joins Louisiana, where the best part of Texas may be found, a sign, intended, perhaps, as a benediction upon the tourist coming our way, which reads:

> You are now entering the State of Louisiana, where Standard Oil products may be purchased.

A few days ago I presented the facts about the Standard Oil Co. I produced on the floor of the Senate, which no one would question, the award which had been made in 1878 by the President of the United States giving and granting and conceding, with the consent of all South American countries, to the Republic of Paraguay, the territory known as the "Chaco."

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield to my friend.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to challenge the facts and the conclusions the Senator has presented. I do not think that he can say, or that the record will support him if he says it, that the consent of all the states of South America was given to the awarding of the Chaco to Paraguay. I undertake to say that the records will show that Paraguay itself recognized in the treaty when the matter was submitted to President Hayes that the rights of Bolivia were not at all involved in that matter.

Mr. LONG. Correct. Bolivia drew a map in 1848 showing that that territory belonged to Paraguay. I put that map in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The rights of Bolivia were not involved because Bolivia, with its own published map, published to the United States and the world by metes and bounds, gave that territory, and more than was involved in the Hayes award, to the Republic of Paraguay.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield further to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I will ask the Senator if it is not true that when President Hayes had the matter under consideration Bolivia filed a claim and a brief claiming that territory, but because Bolivia was not a party to the original treaty submitting the matter to President Hayes, her claims were not then considered by the President at all?

Mr. LONG. I do not know about that particular point, but I do know that Villa Hayes, formerly called Villa Occidental and which following that award was changed to the name of Villa Hayes, was awarded to Paraguay and was published in the map by Bolivia itself in 1878. Not only that, but following that award made in that dispute in 1878, Bolivia sent representatives to Paraguay to recognize the award and to consent to it. It has never been heard from since.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. But was not that an arbitration between the Argentine Republic and Paraguay? The Senator is talking about an award made as against the Argentine Republic, and says that President Hayes did hold and his judgment was that Argentina had no claim to the Chaco and that it belonged to Paraguay. But was not Bolivia insisting then that it belonged to her and her rights were not determined, and did not Paraguay in the letters of her Premier and Secretary of State specifically say, before they reached a conclusion with Argentine, that the rights of Bolivia were not to be affected by the arbitration at all?

Mr. LONG. That is not in it at all. On the contrary, the facts are just the opposite.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will be so kind as to permit me to do so, at the first opportunity I shall submit the letter of the Secretary of State of Paraguay, in which he specifically states, not once but two or three times, that the rights of Bolivia are reserved from consideration.

Mr. LONG. The Senator might submit that, but I shall submit to him the official map of Bolivia from 1848 on down showing that territory as being Paraguayan territory, together with the history of a recorded visit made by Bolivian officials, following the Hayes award, in which they recognized the award.

Not only that, but they have been recognizing that for 60 years. If Bolivia was not satisfied with the award made in 1878, where has Bolivia been for a period of 60 years with its map showing all the time that the territory belongs to Paraguay? It is not the map of Paraguay. It is not the map of the United States. It is the official map of the Republic of Bolivia which has been filed with or seen in every country in the world showing the metes and bounds of the Bolivian and the Paraguayan territory and showing the Paraguayan territory to include the Chaco.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield further to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. What interest has the United States Senate or any Senator of the United States in a controversy between two friendly nations? What interest has the Senator from Louisiana in a controversy between Paraguay and Bolivia? I ask that particularly because he is making an argument against our becoming involved with any foreign countries at all, yet he is taking sides in favor of Paraguay and against Bolivia to make a speech in the United States Senate, where Bolivia cannot answer it through diplomatic channels or otherwise. He is making a speech in favor of Paraguay and against Bolivia and taking advantage——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana on the amendment has expired.

Mr. LONG. I will take my 30 minutes on the resolution of adherence.

Mr. LOGAN. It seems to me he is taking advantage of the opportunity to make a speech for Paraguay without giving Bolivia a chance at all to be heard.

Mr. LONG. I should not object to Bolivia being heard if the Senator from Kentucky knows anything in her favor. I do not know of anyone who knows anything in her favor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Have the boundaries between Bolivia and Paraguay ever been fixed?

Mr. LONG. Yes; by a map of Bolivia, for one thing, fixing the boundaries.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am asking if there has not been a dispute from the very creation of the Governments as to the boundaries? The dispute became concrete when the two began to advance and open up unoccupied territory which had never been assigned or determined as belonging to either. I do not wish to take the Senator's time if he would prefer me not to do so.

Mr. LONG. That is all right. I will get 5 minutes additional if the Senator takes too much time.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I could not consent to that.

Mr. LONG. Very well; go ahead and I will take my time.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator realizes that the Paraguay River runs substantially north and south, and the Pilcomayo River runs substantially southeast by northwest, from the northwest. The territory which President Hayes arbitrated was assigned to Paraguay in an arbitration between Paraguay and Argentina, but Bolivia was not a party to that arbitration. My information is, and I have made some investigation into the matter, that the oil fields about which the Senator has spoken are approximately 400 miles, the distance from Washington, D. C., to Columbus, Ohio, from the limitations of the Hayes award, and that the League of Nations, or its committee, in efforts to work out a peaceful settlement of the dispute, actually excluded from consideration for the purpose of settlement the award that was made by President Hayes.

Mr. LONG. No; that is not my understanding.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall not press that further in the time of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. When the Senator from Arkansas looks into the question he will find that the fight did not come up over the oil fields that were at that time being developed. That is where the Senator is confused.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I am not confused.

Mr. LONG. The fight came up over the fact that the Republic of Bolivia demanded a right to transport oil by pipe line to the deep water of the Paraguay River, and in order to do that they had to go through the Villa Hayes itself. When I made the speech on the floor of the Senate last year the Bolivian envoy said that Bolivia was fighting because it would not recognize an award made by President Hayes. That was a statement from Bolivia. There is no way of getting around this thing. They have hemmed it in tightly.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course Bolivia does not recognize that award because Bolivia was not a party to the arbitration at all and never was called upon to recognize the award.

Mr. LONG. Then the Senator from Kentucky agrees with me and not with the Senator from Arkansas! [Laughter.]

Mr. LOGAN. No; I agree with the Senator from Arkansas fully. The Senator from Arkansas is absolutely correct.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it is going to be impossible to get these two minds together in the time I have at my disposal. I shall have to proceed or else concede that I am out of understanding with both of them.

The Standard Oil Co. went a little bit further. They were not satisfied. This land stood placid and peaceful. My friend from Arkansas said he understands they are not contesting the Hayes award and my friend from Kentucky said he understands they are; but whichever the case may be, both will vote together whether they agree with the conclusions on this question, so I shall not have to try to reconcile them for the ultimate result.

The fact of the matter is that the situation had been absolutely peaceful for a period of 54 years and there was not a breath of excitement, Bolivia standing on the map which she had published in 1848—a map published not by Paraguay, not by President Hayes, but by Bolivia itself in the year 1848—until they found oil on the soil of Bolivia, whereupon Bolivia said that they could not go across the territory of Argentina, because Argentina was too big a country for them to attack, but that they would go to the Paraguay River by taking the Paraguayan territory for their route to deep water. That is what they did.

As a result of that we could not afford to have the Standard Oil Co. changing America's own award, so, therefore, this "big brother" doctrine, which we announced in order that we might take care of these little countries, became a Standard Oil doctrine to pervert the principle. When they had gone as far as they could, when they had gone to where they did not dare to come back to Washington because nobody in Washington itself dared to dispute the award of the President made in this city in 1878, partly in view of the fact that Bolivia had sent envoys down to Paraguay to recognize it and made trade arrangements after that time—therefore they hiked over to the League of Nations with the Standard Oil Co.

How did this award start? Here is the map [indicating] to which I have been referring. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] is going to learn something, even if I do offer it myself. I am going to hand him the map. This is the Bolivian map. We have not heard any dispute about that map which I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at least a year ago. There is Bolivia's map. The Standard Oil Co. wanted that territory. When the Standard Oil Co. made its agreement with Bolivia it was stipulated as to any oils which they took from the Republic of Bolivia during peace time they should pay the Republic of Bolivia a royalty of 11 percent on the oil taken from the ground, and during war times they should pay 14 percent. In other words, they made a war agreement in the beginning, realizing that they had to go to war in order to extend the pipe line to the Paraguay River.

How did they start this war? Bolivia's credit was very bad. They had sold $68,000,000 worth of bonds in the United States through Dillon, Reed & Co. and used that money down there for various and sundry purposes. Most of it, I suppose, had been squandered. That is the charge made in this country.

After they had spent $68,000,000, how were they going to carry on the war? They used Standard Oil scrip. Bolivia's money would not buy anything down in that South American territory because Bolivian currency had been depreciated by reason of the fact that they owed $68,000,000 and were in default even then. Some of their wall-paper bonds had been sold throughout the United States. In order to get money they went into other countries like Argentina and Brazil and used the scrip of the Standard Oil Co. as money. The great imperialistic Standard Oil Co., trampling upon the award that had been made by the President of the United States, trampling upon a recognition that had been given by the Republic of Bolivia, trampling upon the recognition of its own map made 30 years before he had made the award—finding Bolivia with $68,000,000 worth of unpaid bonds in default in the United States, the imperialistic Standard Oil Co. went down to Argentina and established a radio station in order to help that war against Paraguay and gave this scrip to be used by Bolivia for the purchase of supplies.

I am informed by reliable authorities, and it will be proved if ever this matter is gone into by the investigation of the Senate, as I am told it will be, that in order to ship the war material down into Bolivia it went in there consigned to the Standard Oil Co. as drilling machinery for exploitation, when in fact and in truth it was guns and ammunition for the use of Bolivia, to conquer for the Standard Oil Co.'s ownership territory that belonged to Paraguay, that had been awarded by America!

Why, Mr. President, this ex-convict that came from Texas to Louisiana, this dastardly angel of crime and murder that has raised its fangs of woe not only on the soil of Bolivia and Paraguay but here in America, this—the Standard Oil Co.—again takes the law. Wherever there is law that it is made to observe, it undertakes to have itself made the master of the law that it has to observe. Wherever it neither becomes the law nor the master of the law, there is in the wake of its aggression and prosperous drive, murder, assassination, and whatever else has become necessary for its control. So its agents hie themselves to Europe. They cannot come to the United States.

Somebody wants to know why this drive is on in America, at this time of our peril and distress, to ratify the World Court protocols. Why this hurry, hurry, hurry to ratify the World Court protocols at a time when one-half the people of the United States are unemployed, at a time when babies starve and cry and die for the same milk that is poured into the Mississippi River, because we have too much; at a time when people shiver and cry for clothes to put on their backs when the cotton from which they might be made is plowed under or not allowed to be planted, to keep down an oversupply; at a time when the cattle and the hogs are slaughtered in order that we may not have too much meat, while people are crying for the food and dying and starving for the lack of it? Why, under circumstances of that kind, is the United States Senate faced today with all these things sidetracked, with the demand to hurry, hurry, hurry to get the United States into the World Court in time for the World Court to pass on the territory that the United States formally gave to Paraguay, but which the Standard Oil Co. of the United States is calling upon the World Court to give to Bolivia? "Hurry, hurry, hurry!" The drive is not to feed twenty to thirty to forty million unemployed, starving people. The drive is to give two or three billion dollars more to the Standard Oil Co. through aid to the Bolivian arms. That is why it is being done.

So I have offered a reservation.

The character of this Standard Oil Co. is shown domestically. If I might be permitted to read to the Senate for a moment, I will read you the words of a Standard Oil agent in Louisiana, uttered on last Saturday, the 26th day of January. I will read to you what was uttered by a Standard Oil agent, sent out before an armed mob gathering, largely composed of Standard Oil employees, armed with grenades and with guns. I will read to you what the agent in charge of the Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana said to his gathering on this occasion, and I will read from the Baton Rouge Morning Advocate, a paper owned and controlled, body and soul, by the Standard Oil Co.

Here is what he said—Mr. O'Rourke, chief agent of the Standard Oil Co. in charge of revolutionary activities inside the United States, on their pay roll, is quoted as follows in the newspaper:

"The reason for this protest meeting", Mr. O'Rourke declared, "is that a man by the name of Sidney Songy was arrested by city police and questioned with the view of obtaining information to swear out conspiracy warrants against myself and about 70 more persons.

"The idea was that a group of us were conspiring to kill HUEY P. LONG, and said I had advocated as much."

Does he deny it? Just listen a minute, gentlemen of the Senate. I continue his statement as quoted in the Standard Oil Co. journal. Says this Standard Oil agent:

Now, I want my position clearly understood. I have hidden nothing I have said, but have declared it on Third Street and publicly. I hereby pronounce HUEY LONG public enemy no. 1.

[Laughter.]

Just a moment. Continuing to quote the Standard Oil gathering, their leader, Mr. O'Rourke, who is still a leader in charge of their revolutions inside America right now, says:

When he goes, Louisiana will again have a republican form of government.

In other words, he says, "They have a man around there named Songy that they are questioning to find out if 70 others have this conspiracy of murder; and I here and now make my position clear, that I pronounce HUEY LONG a public enemy, and that he must be killed for the benefit of this country."

That is this Standard Oil hired agent. They do not only go to Bolivia and have them killed by the thousands and near millions; they have come to America. If coming back to America for the purpose of murder will save any voice being raised to contest their aggressions in the Chaco, they will come to America to do it.

And so it seems I am chosen for their elimination.

What boots it for them if, having flaunted the awards made under the Monroe Doctrine, they come back now in order to avoid them, and, with their controlled World Court—I say that advisedly—with their controlled World Court they undertake to wipe out what has been adjudicated?

So I have proposed this reservation, Mr. President, not only for this case, not for Paraguay, not for Bolivia, but for the sanctity of the men and women of 150 years ago who handed down to this country and to this generation and to those to come after us a country on a principle that "We have guaranteed you against foreign entanglements and against foreign aggression; we have guaranteed the life and blood of humanity under the Monroe Doctrine, that it shall never be held to the hazard of foreign exploitation."

Now, in this day and time, with the Panama Canal constructed, which I am told can be destroyed by one bomb, are we going to let the Germans, the Japanese, the English, the French, the Hindus, the Chinese, or anybody else decide upon the rights of the territory necessary for the existence of this country, by having these disputes, already settled by proper awards of the United States, transferred to The Hague or to Geneva or to the foreign powers for other settlements? Are we going to let Japan and England, owing us money, and France, owing us money, and Germany, owing us money, and Russia, owing us money, have votes in a court that will determine the integrity of the Panama Canal, and even rights affecting our own borders? Or are we going to hold in violate the sacred Monroe Doctrine, which is one of the foundation stones of this country? Unless we adopt this amendment, Mr. President, that is what the ratification of this World Court protocol means.

I again read this reservation:

Resolved further, That adherence to the protocols and statute is upon the express condition and understanding that the doctrine pronounced by President James Monroe, known and commonly called the "Monroe Doctrine", is and shall in no manner be affected or modified by the said World Court, and that the rights and duties assumed and heretofore exercised by the United States under said Monroe Doctrine shall never be affected by the said World Court.

I hope, Mr. President, that this reservation will be ratified by a majority of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I address myself to the reservation of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG].

The reservation proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] embraces in general language all the traditional policies of the United States. On a previous occasion I expressed the opinion that that reservation was not necessary, for the reason that entry into the World Court does not affect or involve any domestic question of the United States, or any traditional policy of this Government. Now, the Senator from Louisiana says, "If that is so, why not reaffirm the Monroe Doctrine?"

The answer to that is that there are many things that are true that have no relation to the World Court, and therefore have no appropriate place in an arrangement concerning it. For instance, there are the Ten Commandments, in which the Senator from Louisiana and I both believe, and which the Senator from Louisiana observes. [Laughter.] No one proposes to incorporate the Ten Commandments in this resolution of adherence. It is impracticable to do that.

There is another reason which I think is controlling, and that is that the language which is already incorporated in the resolution of adherence in better form preserves the understanding that the United States, in entering the World Court, does not abandon its principles and policies.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Monroe Doctrine is reserved in the previous reservation?

Mr. ROBINSON. All the traditional policies of the United States are reserved; certainly.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator mean that the Monroe Doctrine is reserved?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have said it many times, and I shall not say it again. I have said that all the traditional policies of the United States are reserved.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator say that the Monroe Doctrine is reserved—"yes" or "no"?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have said it over and over again. The Monroe Doctrine is one of the traditional policies of the United States.

Mr. LONG. All right. Then——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have only 15 minutes, and I have to use a little of my time myself.

Mr. LONG. Then my reservation will not do any harm.

Mr. ROBINSON. It will not do any good, and I shall not support it.

Mr. President, I think the entire discussion of the Senator from Louisiana is irrelevant to the issues that are before the Senate. He is a great advocate. No one can state a subject or a matter more impressively than can the Senator from Louisiana; but I am going to point out now a consideration which shows that all his talk of war, whether in Louisiana between the Senator from Louisiana and the Standard Oil Co. or in the world at large, has nothing in God's world to do with the World Court. I might suggest, however, that perhaps one of the best things that could be done by the Senate would be to refer the war in Louisiana between the Senator from Louisiana and the Standard Oil Co. and others to the World Court; and then we might hope for at least temporary peace, if not permanent peace. [Laughter.]

The jurisdiction of the World Court is limited to cases which nations refer to it, which nations agree it shall consider. If Bolivia and Paraguay, who are in dispute about the Chaco, agree that the question in dispute shall be referred to the World Court, it will go there; but there is no power to compel the Court or to permit the Court to take jurisdiction unless those nations do so agree, either through signing the compulsory clause or through a special agreement for consideration of the matter.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. Does not the Senator remember that the League of Nations said the other day that they were going to take punitive steps against Paraguay if they did not agree to arbitration?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the World Court has nothing to do with the League of Nations in that matter. The idea that it has is the fundamental mistake which is running all through this debate. In some mysterious and strange manner the opponents of the World Court are attempting to attach to it the duties and responsibilities of the League of Nations; but the League of Nations, as I explained on a former occasion, is taking this attitude because of the refusal of one of the parties to the controversy to submit to a peaceful settlement of the dispute, that action being construed to be in violation of their agreement and undertaking not to resort to war as an instrument of national policy, and to pursue only pacific methods in the settlement of their disputes.

It would be a good thing—good for the peace of the world, for the happiness of the people of Bolivia and Paraguay—if they would give the World Court jurisdiction of their controversy; far better than that they should pursue the course which has been followed during the past few years, in which great suffering, devastation, waste, and destruction of life and property have been occurring because of the war. I know of no better instance in which peace-minded persons might encourage the use of the World Court than in the case of the controversy between Paraguay and Bolivia. It would be very helpful if they should submit the controversy to the World Court, and it would encourage peace lovers throughout the world.

It is a strange thing to me how the Senator from Louisiana reaches the conclusion that we have been in a great hurry to get into the World Court. The question has been before the Senate in one way or another during the last 10 or 11 years, and no final action has been taken. I point out now, as I did on a recent occasion, that the only agency which has come out of the smoke and thunder of the conflicts of the past for the judicial settlement of international disputes is the Permanent Court of International Justice; and they who do believe in peace, who do hope for the prevention of war, ought either to support the World Court or to suggest some substitute for it.

Must humanity go staggering down the future carrying the unbearable burdens of past conflicts in fright and fear of future wars? Is there no power or strength in the statesmanship of the world to demonstrate that courage which was displayed by valiant soldiers in action during the World War? If we do that, if we display the courage they showed when they sank to their last resting place beneath the white and black crosses that lift their arms in mute appeal to Almighty God—if we do our duty, we shall do something to safeguard humanity against the wars of the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reservation proposed by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. May we not have the yeas and nays on the reservation?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. LONG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask that the reservation be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the reservation.

The legislative clerk read the reservation submitted by Mr. LONG, as follows:

Resolved further, That adherence to the protocols and statute is upon the express condition and understanding that the doctrine pronounced by President James Monroe, known and commonly called the "Monroe Doctrine", is and shall in no manner be affected or modified by the said World Court, and that the rights and duties assumed and heretofore exercised by the United States under said Monroe Doctrine shall never be affected by the said World Court.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Coolidge | King | Radcliffe |
| Ashurst | Costigan | La Follette | Reynolds |
| Austin | Couzens | Lewis | Robinson |

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], these Senators being necessarily detained on official business.

I make reannouncement of the absence of the Senators whose absence was suggested on previous roll calls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, merely expressing in passing my concurrence with the views expressed by the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that since the adoption of the so-called "Vandenberg reservation" the reservation tendered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is not helpful, I will take this opportunity to speak very briefly on the broad issue before the Senate.

In recording my judgment it may be useful to preface it by an extract from an address on the World Court delivered in New York City before a group of members of the bar on June 2, 1930, by the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. It goes without saying that he is exceptionally qualified to speak from intimate association as a former member of the World Court; also patriotically, without any suspicion of undue radicalism; and authoritatively, as an experienced advocate and expounder of America's Constitution and laws.

On the date mentioned, Chief Justice Hughes declared that the then proposed conditions of adherence to the World Court, which are essentially those which the Senate now has before it, supported by administration spokesmen, fully protect the interests of the country. He concluded as follows:

> The judicial settlement of international disputes cannot be adequately secured by mere sporadic, occasional efforts. There should be continuity, permanency, the opportunity for the growth of confidence, and for the firm establishment of the tradition both of competency and judicial independence. As a nation devoted to the interests of peace, we have the utmost concern in this development. To hold aloof is to belie our aspiration and to fail to do our part. * * * In supporting the World Court in the manner proposed we lose nothing that we could otherwise preserve; we take no serious risks that we could otherwise avoid; we enhance rather than impair our ultimate security; and we heighten the mutual confidence which rests on demonstrated respect for the essential institutions of international justice.

It will be noted that the President and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States are not divided.

Mr. President, there is little that is new to be said on the important subject of the proposed adherence of the United States to the Permanent World Court of International Justice. Indeed the debates here, so far as they either advance unanswerable logic or echo tempestuous emotion—except for an occasional touch in some of the addresses of the golden age of American eloquence—appear to be less original contributions than reflections of earlier days and battles long ago. The contest is ended. The essential argument is concluded. Possibly a few declarations of faith are still in order but no other justification can be urged for prolonged postponement of the balloting.

The reasons specially appealing to my judgment for adherence to the World Court are these:

First. In the history and experience of mankind, for the most part, and certainly where property has been the chief subject matter of controversy, the judicial settlement of disputes has tended to survive both conciliation and arbitration as a sound and better method of guarding society against appeals to violence.

Second. The age-old flaw and continuously fatal defect in international relations has been the absence of authoritative agencies for determining issues in the war-breeding "no man's land" between sovereign states which, because of their conceded theoretical independence, have felt free to proceed against other sovereign states with lawless aggression. Just outside the horizon of national laws still stretches the crime-infested jungle of international anarchy. It, therefore, is increasingly important that there should be a common meeting place for discussion and settlement of disputes in the full light of informed national and world public opinion, with the aid of the most useful types of fair, able, and independent agencies.

Third. Our own national history provides conclusive evidence of the indispensable value of a continuing tribunal established to stand impartially between the threats and rivalries and temporary blindness of competing sovereignties. Practically every reason advanced against the World Court was at one time or another seriously urged in this country against our Supreme Court by those who feared to see the 13 colonies united under a national banner. Able spokesmen in certain colonies even insisted that our Supreme Court would be composed of foreigners, residing in other American colonies which eventually joined the Union, who would with deliberate hostility pass upon problems of primary interest to the respective colonies when they became States of the Union under the Federal Constitution. Happily time and experience have dissipated those fears.

Fourth. The proposed experiment is not calculated to disturb any but the most sensitive among our citizens, for America is not committed by the proposed protocols and the cautious reservations accompanying them to any adjudication of its disputes with other nations except with its own consent. Indeed, our sole unescapable commitment would appear to be an indication of our willingness to bear our share in the moderate expense of an international tribunal to which controversies between nations may by mutual agreement be referred.

Fifth. Our country has been the principal advocate of the desirability and was the original promoter of a permanent world court, and the names and records of American leaders who have endorsed it sufficiently testify to the intelligence and patriotism of the proposal. All Presidents from McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt to Franklin Roosevelt have, without exception, endorsed such a tribunal as worthy of American adherence, and during the past 15 years, again without exception, our Presidents of both political parties have urged adherence to the existing World Court as consistent with and even required by true loyalty to American ideals, traditions, and practices.

Sixth. Leaders of local, State, and American bar associations, among whom are included the most technically equipped and critical analysts of the significance and binding effect of language, have given the present protocols a clean bill of health, and public opinion generally may, I believe, be regarded as sustaining the pending proposal as a desirable initial effort to advance peace in the world, to substitute reason for the violence which in our destructive scientific age literally threatens to engulf the human race in suicide, and to promote a world of more cooperative and more prosperous relations and living conditions for all the sons and daughters of men.

Seventh. The World War conclusively demonstrated that no past war, even that which afflicted mankind from 1914 to 1918, has been comparable to the sum of all evils which will afflict mankind in lost and ruined lives and annihilated property if another such titanic struggle begins. It, therefore, proved that unless we recognize in principle the existence of a world community and lend the influence of our mighty Nation to sound institutional devices for promoting peace and economic well-being, world security in the future will be far less than the past.

Eighth. The ills in which some argue the World Court may involve us are the identical ills which have overtaken us in the absence of such a court—an unparalleled World War; millions of the bravest and best of the young men of America fighting and leaving their—and our—heroic dead on foreign soil, toward which, without recourse, we were irresistibly drawn in spite of all our heartfelt declarations of pacific neutrality; and all the resulting human wreckage and widening paralysis which still knock for remedial legislation at the doors of Congress. Surely we are imperatively ordered by common sense to forge new instrumentalities with which to shield ourselves from these age-old perils.

Finally, we are called upon by the most solemn pledges the living can give the dead to do our part by every reasonable device to put an end to war. Those who served at home and those of us who during the World War crossed seas, in every lane of which lurked mortal treachery, and who returned from foreign battlefields, gas, shell-shock, and other hospitals, and front-line trenches determined to give our all to the prevention of such recurring horrors, have no illusions about the hungry quicksands that lie in wait to bury civilization, unless we promptly bridge their ancient menace for the safe passage of the feet of coming generations. We have no alternative. We must do our part, building for the future ethically, materially, institutionally, and, of course, more and more equally and humanely, under the warning guidance of overwhelming experience.

If there were justification for believing that in the coming Senate test we are called upon to vote against the maintenance of America's system of government and our achieved and growing share in the world's proper evolution, or if our developed constitutional system of rights and duties could be regarded as in essentials threatened by our action, our support should, of course, be withheld. The truth rejects that contention. Adherence to the World Court, through the often determining weight of our country on the side of peace and under the conditions to be specified, will be distinguished by one concession only—an indication of our willingness to join other nations in maintaining a tribunal to which resort may voluntarily be had in lieu of war to seek to settle international disputes by practical, peaceful, and impartial means. And if, unhappily, after turning in the direction of a permanent World Court, this Nation ever deems it necessary to revert to its present uninsured independence, let us do so in the full light of recent history with its clear proof that such a step, however unavoidable, is backward and not forward. For just as surely as our informed Nation concludes that its true path follows the ancient claim of an unreasoning right to draw the sword, our ultimate destiny will be as certainly written as that of the Roman Empire, which perished by the sword.

Mr. President, beyond these general observations, in which there is little novelty, I have no desire to continue the discussion, and will conclude my remarks by asking that, following them, out of countless endorsements sent me, there be placed in the RECORD various resolutions of the American Bar Association and, as illustrative expressions of supporting western public sentiment, favorable resolutions of the Bar Association of Denver, my home city, and of the Bar Association of Larimer County, one of Colorado's most noted agricultural regions; also certain other representative resolutions, from which will be omitted any attempt to list the names of many prominent individual Colorado endorsers, urging America's prompt adherence to the World Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

RESOLUTION OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

(1) RESOLUTION OF AUGUST 10, 1922

The American Bar Association, at its forty-fifth annual meeting, held in the city of San Francisco on the 10th day of August 1922, expresses the hope that a way may be found by which the Government of the United States may avail itself of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

(2) RESOLUTION OF AUGUST 31, 1923

Resolved, The American Bar Association joins in what it believes to be the wise judgment of the American people that the United States ought to become one [of the supporters] of the Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague, and that our Government should therefore adhere to the protocol establishing the Court in the manner set forth by the President in his message of February 24, 1923.

(3) MOTION OF OCTOBER 24, 1929

SILAS H. STRAWN, of Illinois. I move that the report of the committee on international law be received and approved.

The motion was seconded.

Chairman WHITMAN. It has been moved and seconded that the report of the committee on international law be received and approved. The adoption of this report carries with it the approval of the American Bar Association of the World Court as to the terms and conditions set forth in the report. With that in mind, are you ready for a vote?

The motion thereupon was carried and the report approved.

(4) MOTION OF SEPTEMBER 18, 1931

Mr. SCOTT. The desire of your committee [on international law] at the present time is that the former action taken by this association be reaffirmed by this meeting by formal approval of the last paragraph of the report, which reads:

"Your committee, believing that the Permanent Court of International Justice is the greatest of international instrumentalities for the preservation of peace and of justice between nations, recurs to the approval given to the participation of the Government of the United States in the World Court, upon the terms and conditions set forth in the protocol of accession of the United States. It requests the American Bar Association to reaffirm at its forthcoming session in Atlantic City the action taken at the meeting of the association in Memphis in 1929; that the Government of the United States shall adhere to the Permanent Court of International Justice, upon the terms and conditions as stated in the protocol of adherence, to which it is a signatory; and the association respectfully requests and earnestly urges the Senate of the United States to advise and consent to the protocol of signature of the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, executed December 16, 1920, to the protocol of revision of the statute of the said Permanent Court, and to the protocol of accession of the United States, signed September 14, 1929, to which the Government of the United States became a signatory on December 9, 1929, which protocols were transmitted to the Senate on December 10, 1930, by the President of the United States."

On behalf of the committee, composed of George W. Wickersham, John W. Davis, William Cullen Dennis, Manley O. Hudson, and its chairman, I have the honor to request that the bar association, in its meeting on this occasion, reaffirm its attitude in the terms of the recommendation which I have had the honor of laying before you. I move the adoption of the report and the recommendation which it covers.

SILAS H. STRAWN, of Illinois. I second the motion.

The motion was carried and report adopted.

(5) RESOLUTION OF AUGUST 28, 1934

Resolved by the American Bar Association, That the association urges the Senate of the United States to give its consent and advice to the prompt ratification of the protocols already laid before it by the President providing that the United States join the treaty which establishes the Permanent Court of International Justice.

---

RESOLUTION OF THE DENVER BAR ASSOCIATION, JANUARY 13, 1930

Whereas the representative of the United States at Berne, acting under the direction of the President of the United States, has signed the protocol of signature of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, the protocol of adherence of the United States to said protocol of signature, and also has signed the protocol of revision of the statute referred to, all to the end that the United States may become a member of said Court; and

Whereas the Permanent Court of International Justice, or World Court, as it is more commonly called, is a great constructive agency for the maintenance of international peace, needs increasing support from the public opinion of the world, and is needed in turn, not only by other nations but, from the standpoint of enlightened self-interest, by our own Nation as well; and

Whereas the United States may now safely become a member of said Court under the protocols referred to without either sacrifice of sovereignty or violation of traditional policies in international affairs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Denver Bar Association earnestly favors the ratification of these protocols by the Senate of the United States; that a copy of this resolution, together with a copy of the report of the committee of the association, which is hereby approved, be sent to the Senators representing Colorado at Washington; and that a copy of the resolution be sent to the President of the United States.

RESOLUTION OF THE LARIMER COUNTY BAR ASSOCIATION, OCTOBER 20, 1932

Resolved, That it is the consensus of opinion of this association that the United States should adhere to the three protocols of accession to the World Court, and that the secretary be instructed so to advise the Members of Congress and United States Senators from Colorado.

---

NOVEMBER 3, 1932.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Synod of Colorado of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America at its meeting in Denver, Colo., October 4–6, 1932:

"Whereas for 6 years now the question of our entry into the World Court has remained unsettled, in spite of the fact that the United States Senate, by a vote of 76 to 17, passed a resolution in 1926 providing for our entry into the World Court; and

Whereas there are now awaiting the Senate's ratification three treaties which are expected to come up for action in the Senate at the session opening in December 1932; and

Whereas these treaties, in the judgment of the administration and the Department of State, amply protect the United States in every possible contingency and successfully meet the reservations which the Senate attached to its 1926 resolution of adherence: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Presbyterian Synod of Colorado hereby urges early ratification of these treaties by the Senate of the United States.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN,
Denver, Colo., June 19, 1932.

The Denver section, Council of Jewish Women, ask you to use your influence to have the Senate act favorably on the ratification of the protocols concerning the World Court when such action comes before you, and we sincerely hope you may use your good offices to have a definite date fixed for debate on this subject before adjournment.

Sincerely,

FLORA A. HORNBEIN,
Chairman Committee on Peace.

RESOLUTION ENDORSING THE WORLD COURT TREATIES UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED IN JUNE 1933 BY THE COLORADO FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS

Whereas the General Federation of Women's Clubs is on record as approving the adherence of the United States to the World Court; and

Whereas both the Republican and Democratic national platforms of last June endorsed ratification of the pending treaties which have already been signed by the United States; and

Whereas the completion of our adherence to the Court, as one of the outstanding agencies for the pacific settlement of international disputes, would contribute to the restoration of international confidence and freedom from the fear of war which, in turn, would contribute to economic recovery throughout the world; and

Whereas the World Court has functioned successfully for 11 years, in that time settling 45 questions, some of them delicate and difficult; and

Whereas the Court was established along lines suggested by the United States to the other nations so long as the First Hague Conference in 1899: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Colorado Federation of Women's Clubs commends the favorable attitude toward the Court shown by Senators COSTIGAN and ADAMS and urges them to use their best efforts to secure ratification of the Court treaties at the earliest practicable time; and be it further

Resolved, That Senator COSTIGAN is hereby requested to read this resolution into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[Night letter]

JANUARY 18, 1935.

President FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
White House, Washington, D. C.:

Colorado World Court Committee, consisting of 125 outstanding citizens of both parties in Colorado, earnestly express hope that Senate act promptly and favorably upon resolution for adherence to World Court reported by Committee on Foreign Relations January 10.

L. WARD BANNISTER,
Chairman.
MRS. OWEN E. LE FEVRE,
Vice Chairman.
PLATT R. LAWTON,
Secretary.

JANUARY 15, 1935.

Whereas the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States is again committed to the consideration of the adherence of the United States to the World Court; and

Whereas there has been an overwhelming expression of opinion favorable to our adherence to the World Court on the part of the outstanding leaders of American life in the political, social, educational, religious, and business organizations of the country; and

Whereas under present world conditions we believe that this country should strengthen wherever possible the machinery for international peace: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Church Men's Planning Commission of Denver, Colo., petition the United States Senate to take prompt and favorable action in the ratification of the World Court protocols and that copies of this resolution be sent to Senators ROBINSON, COSTIGAN, AND ADAMS.

THE CHURCH MEN'S PLANNING COMMISSION OF DENVER, COLO.,
ALFRED G. BROWN, Chairman.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, during the almost 16 years which have elapsed since the proposition of committing this country to the League of Nations or some of its instrumentalities was first raised in this body, the question has been discussed thoroughly from almost every angle. It is with some trepidation that I approach it here today, for I realize that the debate has been conducted by men who have been here this entire period and are more familiar with the subject than I could possibly be. But, sir, I would not feel that I was true to those whom I seek to represent here if I did not raise my voice to protest with every power of my being against the adoption of the pending resolution of adherence to the World Court. I would feel, sir, that I was false to my own convictions and had betrayed my own conscience did I not oppose the resolution of adherence, viewing it, as I do, as an abandonment of the time-honored foreign policy under which our country has prospered and grown great and populous.

I realize, sir, that we are led to understand from the press of the country that the die is already cast, that the question is already decided, and that those who oppose the World Court or the League Court speak here only by sufferance. We are told that in a short while more than two-thirds of this body will vote to commit our beloved country to this undertaking. I pray that this is not true. If it comes to pass it will be sad news to millions of people throughout the length and breadth of the United States who, though they may not understand all the complex issues involved, feel that today the admonitions of George Washington and the other founders of the Republic are just as applicable as they were when our Nation was launched upon the sea of time 150 years ago.

A PART AND PARCEL OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Perhaps those who oppose the adoption of the pending resolution serve a useful purpose here for the future, for when further steps shall be taken to commit this Nation to full membership in the League of Nations, perhaps some of this debate will be of avail. The World Court is surely but the first step of those who, having endeavored for years and years to commit this country to the League of Nations, having failed by direct methods, in their new program now attempt to take the question up piecemeal and step by step, lulling the people of this country into a false sense of security by talk of reservations and of duty to humanity, and thus to project us into this alien body. When we shall have gone into the World Court and sit with the other countries that are parties to the League and join in the election of judges and the adjudication of disputes referred to the Court by foreign countries, we will have taken a long step toward membership in the League of Nations. If we should ever go all the way, as many of those who urge us to adopt this resolution would have us go, and commit this country to membership in the League of Nations, we will pledge the lives of the youth of this country and the wealth of America to enforcing the sanctions of the League and perhaps the judgments of the World Court in settling Asiatic brawls and European quarrels that are of no remote concern to us. I do not know of a single individual or organization that through all these years has been laboring to force this Nation into the League of Nations that is not today endeavoring to secure the adoption of the pending resolution for our adherence to the World Court.

As an illustration of that, I have here some of the propaganda that is going the rounds. Every Member of this body has received a letter to the same tenor and effect. It reads:

Now, at last, when a vote is pending in the Senate on the adherence of the United States to the World Court, hundreds of thousands of us are looking to you with hope and confidence for your favorable vote.

May I call your attention to the fact that all political parties for many years in their platforms have gone on record as being in favor of the World Court?

Does that come, sir, from a World Court association? It is headed "The League of Nations Association, Inc." and comes from its national headquarters.

No one in this debate has denied that the World Court is a creature of the League of Nations and that it came into existence by virtue of article 14 of the Covenant of the League. How can it be said that it is not part of the League of Nations when the judges are elected by the League, when they are paid by the League, and their salaries are prescribed by the League, and when the Court cannot even determine a matter that is submitted to it by mutual consent without notifying the Secretary General of the League? The Secretary General conducts the election of the judges of the World Court for the League of Nations, and the League has the power to pension the judges who preside upon this Court. Even the money America will send to pay the expenses of operation of this Court will pass through the coffers of the League of Nations.

It will be exceedingly difficult to convince an ordinary mind that the Court is not part of the League, when the League created the Court, names the judges, fixes the amount of their compensation, and pays them.

We are told we are protected by reservations; that America's vital interests and traditional policies are safeguarded by those reservations and understandings. The mere fact that it was necessary to attach reservations to the protocol of accession and to the resolution this body passed in 1926 is sufficient to put any American on guard that there are many dangers lurking in our future pathway if we adhere to the Court.

But, sir, when we consider the reservations that were adopted by the Senate in 1926 and the shape and form in which this matter comes before us today, it is easy to see that the whittling process is already under way; that we are not to be permitted to go into the Court on our own terms but on the terms of Europe; and that there is a great deal of doubt as to whether or not these reservations and understandings, which were considered the very minimum of protection to the people of the United States in joining this Court, have not been emasculated or confused, and are today capable of two constructions.

RESERVATIONS DO NOT PROTECT

I cannot agree with those who say there is no question about all of the reservations being embraced in the pending resolution. I wish every Member of this body would read the brief on this subject submitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations by an eminent international lawyer, Hon. Reuben Clark. To my mind practically every reservation in its present form is capable of misunderstanding and double construction. We must remember that it was said by an eminent British statesman, "Let them come in; we will construe their reservations"; and that under the articles this Court is the judge of whether or not it has jurisdiction. There is likely to be misunderstanding as to each and every one of the reservations unless it be the one which provides that the United States shall defray its part of the cost of the Court. I doubt not there will be no misunderstanding on that score so long as we are sending money over to Europe to pay the expenses of their Court.

Why is there any pressing reason at this hour for America to seek to become a party to European affairs? It cannot be to protect the interests of the United States. We have no quarrels to adjudicate. It cannot be to protect the interests of any other nation from aggression by the United States. We have never been a militaristic people. There is nothing in our history or background that would tend to show that we are ever likely to be a militaristic people.

We have no differences to submit to the Court. America has a proud record of arbitration with foreign countries. It has been said here in the last few days that our controversy with Canada over the sinking of the I'm Alone was a matter that could have been properly referred to the World Court of the League of Nations for adjudication. To my mind, it is one of the most striking reasons and illustrations why we should not go into the Court. How much better it was for an American jurist and a Canadian jurist to sit down and quietly work out the matter without arousing national passions and prejudices through a great open hearing before the World Court, 3,000 miles from our shores. How much better it was for those whose interests were involved to pass upon the matter than to have judges from 15 countries, of different tongues and nationalities and systems of law, decide the dispute. There two men worked out the matter amicably and without the slightest indication of international feeling. Could the members of the World Court do better?

Mr. President, I ask at this point to place in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the names of the officers, judges, and members of the World Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OFFICERS, JUDGES, AND MEMBERS OF THE WORLD COURT (AS OF JAN. 1, 1934)

A. Officers and judges of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

1. President of the Court, Sir Cecil James Barrington Hurst (Great Britain).
2. Vice president of the Court, J. Gustavo Guerrero (Salvador).
3. Registrar of the Court, Ake Hammarskjold (Sweden).
4. Deputy registrar of the Court, M. L. J. H. Jorstad (Norway).
5. Judges: Mineitciro Adatci (Japan), Rafael Altamira y Crevea (Spain), Dionisio Anzilotti (Italy), Antonio Sanchez de Bustamante y Sirven (Cuba), W. Jan Mariu van Eysinga (Netherlands), Henri Fromageot (France), J. Gustavo Guerrero (Salvador), Cecil James Barrington Hurst (Great Britain), Frank Billings Kellogg (United States), Demetre Negulesco (Rumania), Edouard Rolin-Jaequemyns (Belgium), Michel Rostworowski (Poland), Walter Schuecking (Germany), Francisco Jose Urrutia (Colombia), Wang Chung Hui (China).

OUTNUMBERED, OUTVOTED, AND DESPISED

Mr. RUSSELL. America's interests will be protected more fully by direct arbitration with any nation with which we might be engaged in a controversy than it would be by submission to such a court. In the selection of the judges who might be called on to decide the fate of America, England would have 7 votes in the Assembly of the League of Nations to our 1, and our great Republic would have no more voting strength in the Assembly than the small Negro Republics of Haiti and Liberia.

We are told, sir, that though we may not need this Court, though we have no questions to submit to it, though no perils immediately await us or any other nation at our hands, yet it is a matter of duty to the rest of the world to go into the Court and make our contribution to peace. Mr. President, how any man in this Nation can be under any illusion today that our meddling in the affairs of Europe promotes peace or is in anywise appreciated is, in the light of very recent experience, more than I can understand.

Within the lifetime and recollection of every person here today America's sons marched away from these shores and went 3,000 miles to fight in the great war that was to end all wars. Some of them did not thoroughly understand the issued involved, but all had held up before them this ideal of a war that was to bring everlasting peace. In that war we gave the blood of our sons and we gave lavishly of our national wealth. We saw the hearts of mothers broken; we saw thousands of men return so maimed on the cruel wheel of war that theirs is a living death. But what has been the result? We asked for nothing out of that war but peace and good will. Our allies were not so idealistic. Italy dismembered Austria; France took Alsace-Lorraine and forged a ring of steel around her ancient enemy, Germany, with corridors and buffer states; England picked up colonies in every quarter of the globe; Japan secured valuable concessions in China and the mandated islands of the Pacific.

Today, when we merely ask for a portion, and a small portion, of the honest debts the European nations owe us, we are met with a flat refusal and scorned and despised by our debtors. Who would say they would not be delighted to get us into a Court where they could procure a judgment that these debts were not debts at all, but were merely America's contribution to the war? We hear this argument advanced by many of our debtors today.

Men talk today of maintaining peace when there is no peace. There has been but a brief period since the armistice of November 11, 1918, when guns have not been fired in anger in some part of the world. Will our mere entry into the World Court, with all the hazards involved to our country, change the character of human passions and harness the prejudices of thousands of years, and thereby bring peace to all the nations?

There is no peace today in South America. There is no peace today in Asia. There is no peace today in Africa. If peace is brought where war now rages, it will only be by the action of armed forces. I will not commit America to such an enterprise.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I want to ask the Senator if there has not been more war in South America since the League of Nations started than during any similar period before the League of Nations came into existence?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not an expert on South American history. I do know that a very bloody war has been raging there between two members of the League of Nations and adherents to the World Court. That war started since those countries entered this combine that we are told will end all war and bring on an era of everlasting peace. It is only in this country that men stand on the floors of their parliaments and contend that America's action in entering the Court or the League will bring peace. It is well known throughout the length and breadth of the other nations of the world that any nation that had the power to do so has defied the League and trampled upon its rulings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia on the amendment has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall take my time on the resolution.

I heard the great leader of our party here make an appeal that would touch the hearts of all mankind who are praying for peace, and say that our action in entering this organization will contribute to that end. How do those who have been in the League and who are members of the World Court, both in the Council and in the Assembly, since its inception, view the possibilities of peace that flow from those bodies?

Instead of depending on the League of Nations for peace, they maintain the greatest armies and armaments which the world has ever seen. Without resorting to open discussions in the halls of the League and the forum of the Court, we still hear the age-old cry of a balance of power and secret treaties of offense and defense.

AMERICA AT PEACE; EUROPE WAR-MINDED

It is easy to know what Europe is thinking today because most of the nations there are ruled by the iron hand of a single man and when he speaks he voices the thought of the great majority of his people. To my mind Mussolini is today the strongest character in Europe, whether he and his policies are worthy of admiration or not. What does he say when he comes to define the system of government that he has imposed upon Italy? Here is what he said:

> Fascism * * * does not believe either in the possibility or the utility of perpetual peace. It, therefore, repudiates pacifism, which betrays a tendency to give up the struggle and implies cowardice in the face of the necessity of sacrifice.

Those of you who expect peace to come from joining hands with Europe listen to this:

> Only war raises all human energies to the maximum and sets a seal of nobility on the peoples which have the virtues to undertake it. All other tests are mere substitutes, which never place man face to face with himself in the alternatives of life or death.

Any doctrine, therefore, which starts from the initial postulate of peace is foreign to fascism.

Equally unrelated to the spirit of fascism are all those international and League of Nations institutions—even if they are accepted for the usefulness they may have in certain political situations—which, as history proves, may be scattered to the winds when sentimental, ideal, or practical elements cause storms to rage in the hearts of peoples.

Here is war glorified by an entire nation. This is the view of one who dominates a member of the Assembly and of the Council of the League, and a nation that has a judge on the Court. We are asked to join this in the cause of peace. This reflects the spirit of a Europe which is today an armed camp. And yet honest and misguided people insist that if we will only join the League and its Court the time of the millennium would be at hand, and peace would reign permanently on earth.

Mussolini tells us differently. He frankly puts us on notice that he intends to adhere to the League of Nations and its actions only as long as it will serve his political ends, but that when it comes in conflict with material interests, it will be scattered to the winds.

It might be said that that is only the viewpoint of the stronger nations and it is our duty to go into the Court and these other international supergovernments to protect the welfare of the weaker nations of the earth. Mr. President, I believe that no American citizen today would doubt the probity of the character of the people of Finland. If there is any nation today that has respect for international understandings, that lives up to the letters of its obligations, it is Finland. Of all the nations we loaned hundreds of millions of dollars after the war was over to rebuild that which had been destroyed and to develop resources and new industries, only Finland has repaid us in full according to the terms of her agreement. They are a people who believe in international understanding. Have they any faith or confidence in the World Court or the League of Nations or any of these other organizations which we are told are panaceas for all the ills of mankind and will bring about everlasting peace?

Listen to the words of Gen. Justus Mannerheim, the President of the Council of National Defense of Finland, and the man who conducted military operations which restored order in that country:

General Mannerheim emphasized that Finland's peaceable disposition is an insufficient guarantee of peace. * * *

"Recently there has been much talk of settling international conflicts by peaceful means, but it is still futile to base our independence on international agreements, as is seen by numerous recent disputes which despite mediation have been ultimately settled by arms."

So I say, sir, that even those who today are carrying on the operations of the League of Nations have no hope that it will bring peace. If we would stay out of the next European war, we had best leave it and its creatures alone.

Mr. President, as I view our relation to the other nations of the world, these United States can be a more powerful factor for peace outside the World Court and without membership in the League of Nations than we could possibly be by joining these bodies. In the League or Court our great influence would be necessarily limited or greatly circumscribed.

As 1 of 60 nations participating in these matters, it would be almost lost or dissipated. When foreign nations shall have exhausted the means provided by the Court and by the League, giving those bodies full credit for a sincere desire to adjust their controversies according to the dictates of right and justice, where shall they appeal if there is still disagreement? Only to the arbitrament of the sword. The United States, standing aloof, and with other nations knowing that we have no reason to take sides for or against one or the other, might then have an opportunity to speak with the voice of reason and be heard at least long enough to delay hostilities until a cooling time could come about.

We have no secret compacts or alliances. All of our foreign questions are treated where all the world may hear. We are far removed from the touchous problems which are likely to cause war, and this places us in an enviable position where we may really be an instrumentality for peace if we do not surrender this advantage for a political connection with those who have problems which are likely to cause difficulties.

I realize, sir, that we live in an age of change. I know that this Congress believes in departing to some extent from the paths this Nation has followed in the past. Some of these changes I shall support; but if we make an error on some purely domestic question, we have within our own hands the means of correcting it. If we violate our Constitution, the Supreme Court of these United States, a wholly American institution, can declare our action void, as they have done within the past few days, and doubtless will do again. If we should enact some law that was constitutional but injurious to the people of the United States, this Congress or the succeeding Congress would have the right to repeal it. But if we should deceive ourselves on this issue, if we should err and adhere to a tribunal established in Europe and largely dominated by European nations, what man can foretell the full consequences of our action?

"AMERICA FIRST" THE WATCHWORD

Mr. President, my views are frankly those of a nationalist. For that I have no apologies to make. I cannot understand the processes of thought of some of the internationalists of this country today. Some of them say that "a man is proud of his country when he has nothing else to be proud of." I read those words in print but a few weeks ago. I cannot see that it is honest to take all the blessings of American citizenship and not appreciate the sacrifices that have been made in order that we might enjoy them.

I am a citizen of the United States of America first. After America's best interests have been served, I am a citizen of the world. I desire peace on earth among all mankind; but my first concern is to keep America out of wars. I am interested in the welfare of humanity wherever the race of mankind is found; but I would not sacrifice the life of one American youth, in a quarrel in which he has no stake and which he does not understand, to save the lives of 10,000 citizens of another land.

There is no doubt in my mind, sir, as to my duty in this matter. If there were doubt in my mind, I should resolve it in favor of America's traditional policy of good will toward all people, and entangling political commitments with none.

If there were a question in my mind as to whether or not the utopia that has been painted here could be achieved, if there were even a semblance of fear that it would prove to be a mirage that would lead us off into the desert of foreign complications, I would decide this issue in favor of the foreign policy which has enabled us to reach the exalted position we occupy today.

In my humble way I believe that the mature thought of Washington, Jefferson, Monroe, and the other founders has been vindicated by every happening since they left us their wise advice. Despite economic cycles and recurrent depressions, we have done very well as a Nation in the past 150 years. We have made more progress than any other country has ever made in, I might say, a thousand years. We have largely contributed to carry all civilization forward with us. My faith in this policy, under which we have prospered and grown great, is as deep as it is in these modern-day prophets who advise us to abandon it. When I look about me today I can see no reason presented by the condition of world affairs that would justify us in projecting the United States into a foreign body that cannot possibly benefit the American people, and may result in incalculable confusion and woe.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to modify my reservation, just changing the verbiage, so that it will read according to the draft, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the modified amendment.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That adherence to the protocols and statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice is upon the express condition and with the clear understanding that the American policy commonly known and referred to as the "Monroe Doctrine" is and shall in no matter be affected or in any respect modified, nor shall the United States, by reason of such adherence, be regarded as waiving or in any respect changing its attitude toward the policy known as the "Monroe Doctrine."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the modified reservation offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DICKINSON (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is necessarily absent from the Senate today, and, therefore, withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." If the Senator from Kentucky were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and, therefore, refrain from voting. If the Senator from New York were present, my understanding is that he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absences announced by me upon the previous roll call and the reasons therefor.

I wish further to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] are detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] on account of public business. I am informed that he has a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. I am not informed how either Senator would vote on this question if present.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 46, as follows:

So Mr. LONG's reservation, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I offer the reservation which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the reservation proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On line 10, page 2, after the comma, strike out "over an objection by" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "without the consent of."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment which I offer is to clarify beyond doubt the meaning of the resolution.

On line 10, page 2, of the resolution, my amendment proposes to strike out the phrase "over an objection by" and to insert in lieu thereof the phrase "without the consent of."

I refer, of course, to the consent of the United States in the event the resolution shall be adopted.

A casual perusal of the phrase "over an objection by" may not create in the mind of the reader any serious doubt as to its meaning, but literally it would mean that if the United States took negative action, or no action whatsoever, the Court could proceed on the theory that silence gives consent. In such event, we would be committed to a judgment or decree of the Court, perhaps against our desire and pleasure. Therefore, it seems to me that great clarification is embodied in the phrase "without the consent of."

This means, Mr. President, that the United States must take an affirmative and a positive action, and in so doing would commit this Government to cooperation with the Court and adherence to its decrees.

The phrase "without the consent of" was originally incorporated in the resolution in the Walsh-Fess report, but has been omitted in the report submitted by the senior Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reservation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate for just a moment. The language incorporated in the resolution, and which the Senator from Pennsylvania seeks to change, is, in my judgment, preferable to the language he offers, for the reasons which I shall attempt to give.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would point out the line and the place where the amendment is proposed to be inserted.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in my remarks I stated that the amendment would come on line 10, page 2 of the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to have the opportunity, within the 15 minutes I may occupy, to explain why the language in the pending resolution is preferable to the language the Senator offers.

Under the language which the Senator from Pennsylvania has offered, all requests for advisory opinions must be consented to by the United States. Under the language I have incorporated in the resolution, unless the United States shall object, there will be opportunity for the entertainment of a request for an advisory opinion.

From a practical standpoint, this is the way it will operate. Under the Root formula, notice must be served on the United States of every request for an advisory opinion. Under the language which the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes, the United States must consent before any advisory opinion may be entertained or rendered. Under the language I have proposed, unless the United States shall have an objection, it need not take any action.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator point out in the protocol just where is to be found, or state without pointing it out, the language whereby it is provided that the United States must have this notice?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. I can state it from memory, though I cannot number the paragraph from memory. When a request for an advisory opinion is pending before either the Assembly or the Council, notice must be served on all states' members of the Court, including the United States, and that provision has been carried over into the statute. If the request comes before the Court, notice is given. So that in every instance of a request for an advisory opinion, the United States is given the opportunity to object to it. What I am seeking to do is to save the United States the inconvenience of consenting to the entertainment of an opinion or the rendition of an opinion when it feels that there is no interest on our part in the subject matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator has answered now the question that interested me. If the United States has notice of a request and does not object, I can see no reason why they should not go ahead.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is exactly my position.

Mr. NORRIS. If it were a case where the United States did not have notice or there was no notice provided for, it would be a different case.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, certainly; but the interest of the United States in that respect is amply safeguarded. It must have notice of every request for an opinion, and it is given the opportunity to file a statement with the Court and to make objection in every case. It is my thought that there is no occasion to require the United States to delve into every question affected by a request for an advisory opinion, for many of them will relate to subjects matter in which we have no interest or concern whatever.

I think that is all I care to say about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reservation proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to a roll call on the reservation if the Senator asks for it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the yeas and nays because the Senator from Pennsylvania requested it, and so that a yea-and-nay vote may be recorded.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to a record of it. I shall be glad to have the Senate go on record about the matter. The issue is very clear to me.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. It is my understanding that if he were present he would vote "nay" on this question. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. I repeat the announcement of the general pair with my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] on this question.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DICKINSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. If he were present, I understand that he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HASTINGS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], who is temporarily detained on official business, and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to reannounce the absences of the Senators whose names I have given on the previous roll calls, and again announce the reasons for their absences.

I also wish to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are detained on official business of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 54, as follows:

YEAS—27

|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Frazier | McCarran | Shipstead |
| Barbour | Gerry | McGill | Steiwer |

So the reservation proposed by Mr. DAVIS was rejected.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there are some reservations which have not as yet been disposed of. I find that it will not be possible to take the final vote on the resolution of adherence today. There is a matter of legislative importance that should be disposed of, and, after the Executive Calendar shall have been acted upon, it is my purpose to move to proceed to consider legislative business, with the expectation that the remaining issues pertaining to the World Court may go over until tomorrow, when ample time probably will be afforded to conclude the whole subject.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask what is the legislative matter to which the Senator refers?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is a deficiency appropriation carried in House Joint Resolution 88, and it is necessary to have it disposed of before the 1st of next month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank R. McNinch, of North Carolina, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has requested that that nomination go over for the day. I make the request, on his behalf, that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

Mr. MCCARRAN subsequently said: Mr. President, the matter of the first nomination to the Federal Power Commission was read when my attention was distracted. Am I to understand it was confirmed?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it was passed over at the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. MCCARRAN. I want to join in that request.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of W. A. Ayres, of Kansas, to be Commissioner of the Federal Trade Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Garland S. Ferguson, Jr., of North Carolina, to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

NATIONAL MEDIATION BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John Carmody, of New York, to be a member of the National Mediation Board, for the term expiring February 1, 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John Carmody, of New York, to be a member of the National Mediation Board, for the term expiring February 1, 1938.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James W. Carmalt, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the National Mediation Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William M. Leiserson, of Ohio, to be a member of the National Mediation Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Lee M. Eddy, of Missouri, to be a member of the Railroad Retirement Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Murray Latimer, of New York, to be Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John T. Williamson, of Illinois, to be a member of the Railroad Retirement Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Alex Smith to be United States marshal, northern district of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc with the exception of the nomination of Samuel M. Glading to be postmaster at Wenonah, N. J., and I ask that his nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the post-office nominations, with the exception requested, are confirmed en bloc, and the nomination of Samuel M. Glading is recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS AND OTHER COMMISSIONS

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 88.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) making additional appropriations for the Federal Communications Commission, the National Mediation Board, and the Securities and Exchange Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, at the top of page 2, to insert:

SENATE

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, fiscal year 1935, $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 3, to insert:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, fiscal year 1935, $75,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for services, personal, professional, or otherwise, in excess of the rate of $3,600 per annum: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for per diem and subsistence expenses except in accordance with the provisions of the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 15, to insert:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA-VIRGINIA BOUNDARY COMMISSION

For an additional amount for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of Public Act No. 125, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a commission to establish the boundary line between the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Virginia", approved March 21, 1934, including salaries, travel, and subsistence expenses as authorized by law, fiscal year 1935, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 22, to strike out "$825,000" and insert "$975,000", so as to read:

For all authorized expenditures of the Securities and Exchange Commission in performing the duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law and for other personal services, including employment of experts when necessary; contract stenographic reporting services; supplies and equipment; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, directories, periodicals, newspaper and press clippings; travel expenses, including the expense of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Commission, at meetings concerned with the work of the Securities and Exchange Commission; garage rental; foreign postage; mileage and witness fees; rent of building and equipment at the seat of Government and elsewhere; and other necessary expenses; $975,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, by direction of the committee, I ask to submit an additional amendment. I may say that the amendment has to do with the clarification of the present law in reference to the payments of salaries of Senators for short terms and following appointments. Mr. Pace, the financial officer of the Senate, says that this amendment is essential in order that his books may be kept straight. It does not involve any additional appropriation whatsoever, but it is merely a clarifying amendment. I move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 5, it is proposed to insert the following:

Salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate shall commence on the day of their appointment and continue until their successors are elected and qualified: Provided, That when Senators have been elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate to succeed appointees, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following their election.

Salaries of Senators elected during a session to succeed appointees shall commence on the day they qualify: Provided, That when Senators have been elected during a session to succeed appointees, but have not qualified, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following the sine die adjournment of the Senate.

When no appointments have been made the salaries of Senators elected to fill such vacancies shall commence on the day following their election.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Colorado explain the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the situation as to that amendment is perhaps best explained by the very terms of the amendment itself. The finance officer of the Senate, as I understand, has explained that in the statute as it now exists there is some slight ambiguity in reference to the times of payment of salary when Senators are appointed to fill a vacancy caused by death and when they are elected for less than a full term, and he has asked that that ambiguity be clarified by this amendment, which, as I have said, makes no difference whatever in the pay scale of any Senator and involves no additional obligation on the part of the Government. The amendment is made up of three sections, one of which refers to the salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate, and provides that—

Salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate shall commence on the day of their appointment and continue until their successors are elected and qualified: Provided, That when Senators have been elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate to succeed appointees, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following their election.

Then the second paragraph reads as follows:

Salaries of Senators elected during a session to succeed appointees shall commence on the day they qualify: Provided, That when Senators have been elected during a session to succeed appointees, but have not qualified, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following the sine die adjournment of the Senate.

The third paragraph reads:

When no appointments have been made, the salaries of Senators elected to fill such vacancies shall commence on the day following their election.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted the floor in my own right. If the Senator from Colorado has not concluded, I will wait.

Mr. ADAMS. I have concluded.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President, let me say that the law regarding the oath of office and the commencement of the term of office of a Senator needs clarification; it needs some amendment. Ridiculous situations arise. I am not sure whether it is the fault of the Federal law or of the State laws. I have had the question under consideration for a good while, but I have never examined it fully. For instance, we have had a case, this time from my State, where an appointment was made after the death of my recent colleague, the late Senator Howell, and subsequently a different man was elected to fill the vacancy in the term ending on the 3d day of January. The situation arose that the appointee, who had been serving here, retired upon the election of a person to fill out the unexpired term which expired on the 3d of January, and a new Senator, my present colleague [Mr. BURKE], was elected for the full term beginning on the 3d of January.

We had this predicament: A man was elected as a Senator from the State commencing the day after the election and serving until the 3d day of January, or not quite 2 months. During that time there was no session of the Senate, and, as a matter of fact, he never took the oath of office, but he had been elected and served for those 2 months. He was entitled to have a full office force and entitled to draw the salary. I am not complaining about that. He would have made a very fine Senator if he had served the full term.

A similar case came up in recent years from the State of Georgia where a person was appointed to fill a vacancy, the appointment expiring upon the election of the successor who in that case, as in the one I have been discussing, was elected to fill the unexpired term. It all occurred during a recess of Congress. The person given the certificate of election would have had no opportunity in that case to present it, of course. In the Georgia case, by courtesy of the elected Senator, the appointee was given an opportunity to submit her certificate of election, take her seat, be recognized by the Chair, and make a speech. At the conclusion of her speech the Senator-elect presented his credentials and was sworn in, and the lady went out of office.

In the case I have mentioned, which came later from the State of Nebraska, the appointed Senator for the 2 months' period did not even have the privilege or the opportunity of being sworn in because the Senator who was elected for the whole term very properly presented his credentials and was sworn in. The other gentleman, who had been drawing the salary and who had a complete office force at his command, was not sworn in at all.

I bring this to the attention of the committee because of the amendment they have brought before us. We ought to amend the law, it seems to me, so that instead of the appointee's term expiring the day after election in November and the new Senator being elected to hold office from November to January, the appointee's term ought not to expire until the 3d of January. Unless we should have a special session in the interim between election day in November and the 3d of January, the elected Senator never could be sworn in. Such an amendment would get us out of the ridiculous position in which we have found ourselves twice and which may happen many times in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have on the table an amendment which I ask to have reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Nevada proposes at the end of the joint resolution to insert the following new section:

COMPENSATION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 2. (a) Section 3 (b) of title II of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall not exceed 5 percent during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935", and inserting in lieu thereof "shall not, during the portion of the fiscal year 1935 prior to January 1, 1935, exceed 5 percent, and after December 31, 1934, there shall be no such reduction."

(b) Subsections (b) and (c) of section 21 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, are amended by striking out "the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935", wherever such phrase appears, and inserting in lieu thereof "that portion of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, prior to January 1, 1935."

(c) Nothing in this resolution shall be construed as permitting any reduction in rates of compensation in effect at the time of the passage of this resolution.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not desire to make a point of order against the amendment. I ask the Senator from Nevada if he would not agree to modify his amendment fixing the date for the restoration of pay at the beginning of the next quarter, April 1, instead of the retroactive date of January 1?

I know the Senator prefers the date of January 1, but it would involve administrative difficulties, the preparation of pay rolls, and the sending of checks to men no longer in the Government service, the calculation of the 5 percent on the amount of compensation of day laborers throughout the country, and similar difficulties. It is exceedingly difficult to comply with the retroactive feature. If the Senator could agree to modify his amendment, I certainly should be glad to give it my support; and I am satisfied it will find greater support in the Senate if it were modified in that regard.

Mr. McCARRAN. In reply to the learned Senator from South Carolina, I desire to say that it has been my desire all the time to make to the toiling masses of the country a full restoration of their pay. I believe the conditions prevailing in the country today warrant full restoration of pay. I believe the call which has been made, and legitimately made, by the administration upon private concerns and private industry for an increase of pay warrants an increase of pay to Federal employees.

Nevertheless, I am never so content with my position, however secure I might feel myself, that I would not yield to a fair, legitimate, honest compromise. The suggestion made by the learned Senator from South Carolina whereby the great mass of Federal employees will be restored to their full pay on April 1 is entirely acceptable to me. I am willing to accept the modification suggested by him.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. Would the Senator further accept an amendment to make certain that which I know will meet his approval, that the language of subsection (a) does not restore to those officials of the Government who receive more than $10,000 per year the amount of money in excess of $10,000?

In order to make that clear, by virtue of the Treasury-Post Office Department Appropriation Act of 1933 a limitation of $10,000 was placed upon the salary of any official in the Government, with the exception of Members of the Supreme Court and members of the Cabinet and, as I recall, the Director of the Veterans' Administration. The language of the amendment as drawn would, I am afraid, restore such salaries in excess of $10,000. If that language were eliminated, then the amendment of the Senator would simply provide for restoration of the 5 percent to every employee of the Government upon whom it was imposed. If that be the purpose, I ask the Senator to agree to the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand the purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to my amendment, and I am entirely content to accept it so far as I may.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, on page 2, in line 1, to strike out "January" and insert "April"; in line 2, to strike out "December 31, 1934," and insert "March 31, 1935"; in line 8, to strike out "January" and insert "April"; and after the numerals "1935" in line 8, to insert:

Except that this amendatory provision shall not apply to section 107 (a) (1), (2), (3), and (4) of part II of the Legislative Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1933 (relating to certain special salary reductions).

So as to make the amendment read:

At the end of the bill to insert:

"COMPENSATION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 2. (a) Section 3 (b) of title II of the act entitled 'An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government', approved March 20, 1933, as amended, is amended by striking out 'shall not exceed 5 percent during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'shall not, during the portion of the fiscal year 1935 prior to April 1, 1935, exceed 5 percent, and after March 31, 1935, there shall be no such reduction.'

"(b) Subsections (b) and (c) of section 21 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, are amended by striking out 'the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935,' wherever such phrase appears and inserting in lieu thereof 'that portion of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, prior to April 1, 1935; except that this amendatory provision shall not apply to section 107 (a) (1), (2), (3), and (4) of part II of the Legislative Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1933 (relating to certain special salary reductions).'

"(c) Nothing in this resolution shall be construed as permitting any reduction in rates of compensation in effect at the time of the passage of this resolution."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada if he included in his amendment a provision for the necessary appropriation?

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not.

Mr. BYRNES. By reason of the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Nevada it is necessary to provide the funds to effectuate its purpose. To provide those funds I send to the desk the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, insert:

(d) There is hereby appropriated so much as may be necessary for the payment of sums due, and payable out of the Treasury of the United States, by reason of the discontinuance of the reduction of compensation provided for in this resolution; and limitations on amounts for personal services are hereby respectively increased in proportion to the increase in appropriations for personal services made in this subsection. In the case of officers and employees of the municipal government of the District of Columbia, such sums shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States in the manner prescribed by the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the joint resolution be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution making additional appropriations for the Federal Communications Commission, the National Mediation Board, and the Securities and Exchange Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes."

EXECUTIVE SESSION—THE WORLD COURT

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 28, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, conscious that there is a power in the earth which transcends the works of man, we linger here in prayer and breathe "Abba Father." By faith, hope, and love may we discern Thy presence, recognizing the invisible world, its glory and inspiration. Holy Spirit, render divinely solemn our obligations and our obedience. Keep us, blessed Lord, from the tragedy of that love that never finds an object, from that ability that never finds a sphere, and from that life that never finds a mission. We beseech Thee to save us from that blind worldliness that closes the windows of the soul and shuts its door on God. O may we make with Thee a perpetual covenant which shall never be forgotten. Ever keep alive in us aspirations that need not be ashamed. Let them never be mocked or denied. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 25, 1935, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1175. An act to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3410) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes."

AMENDMENT TO BANKHEAD BILL

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of an amendment to the Bankhead bill which I have just filed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted I extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to an amendment that I am today introducing to the Bankhead bill, and also as a part of my remarks I extend in the RECORD, a copy of the amendment so introduced.

In the outset let me say that I have given this bill a great deal of thought because it so vitally affects that portion of Georgia that I represent, the ninth district, and it is only now that I have satisfied my mind that there is a solution that will correct the greatest evil emanating from the control of cotton production.

I regard the outstanding feature of this H. R. 4882 to be that portion giving to the small farmer raising cotton an exemption or freedom from tax, sufficient to at least help him in defraying his expenses for fertilizer and actual necessaries of life for himself and family, this to be in keeping with the number of his dependents. It is not the small farmer or producer that is causing an overproduction of cotton, and this amendment will in no way vitiate the effect of the Bankhead bill. I have personal knowledge of several instances in my district where the allotment was so inadequate that it really caused want and suffering, this being where the producer was poor and had a very large family. In one case in particular a man with eight children was only given 1,180 pounds of lint cotton.

This amendment will at least give relief to these small farmers in a small way, and yet the effect of the Bankhead bill will remain and serve the purpose for which it was intended. If this bill is permitted to remain in its present status, it will be in the future, as it has in the past, very hurtful to these small producers.

Another feature of this amendment that would be of value to the proper handling of this measure is the selection of the committees and community committees by the local authorities of the different counties, who are acquainted with the parties at interest, and can more equitably make the allotments, they knowing the surroundings of each of the parties to be dealt with.

The last portion of the amendment provides for adequate compensation to be paid to the ginners of the counties who are compelled to make reports and otherwise assist in the collection of these taxes. The amount of work required of them has been tremendous, and it is not in keeping with the policy of the administration, I am sure, that they should be compelled to do this work and receive no compensation for it.

Below I quote a resolution passed by the Georgia Legislature in regard to this last:

Whereas the terms of the Bankhead bill makes no provision for the payment for the collection of taxes imposed thereunder by cotton ginners; and

Whereas the Treasury Department required that the operators of cotton ginneries should collect such taxes and did not stipulate any compensation therefor; and

Whereas the collection of taxes at ginneries for account of the United States Government entailed an enormous amount of time and effort and necessitated the employment of additional salaried help in connection with the operation of ginneries, which, under no conception, could be construed as legitimate expense imposed upon the owner and/or operators of cotton ginneries: Be it

Resolved—

1. That the Congress of the United States is earnestly requested to enact such legislation as will fairly compensate the extra expense incurred in the collection of taxes imposed upon the ginneries during the years 1934 and 1935.

2. That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Senators and Congressmen from the State of Georgia.

The Bankhead bill as a whole is, in my opinion, the solution to the overproduction of cotton and with the evils corrected as set out in the amendment I have today introduced, truly believe it will prove to be of inestimable value to the Nation.

A bill to exempt a limited quantity of cotton produced by small producers from the cotton ginning tax; to fix a reasonable compensation to be paid where the operators of cotton gins are required to collect such tax, and to provide for the selection of members of county and community committees under the Cotton Act of 1934

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved April 21, 1934, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) Where during the crop year 1935–36 cotton is harvested on land with respect to which an allotment of tax-exempt cotton has been made to the producer thereon (or on his behalf as share cropper or tenant), if the allotment made is less than 5 bales (500 pounds), the tax shall be imposed under this act upon cotton so produced on the following basis: Two bales exempt for head of each family; one-half bale for each dependent of said producer, exclusive of himself and wife, said exemption not to exceed 5 bales. Exemption certificates shall not be issued representing cotton exempt from tax under this subsection, but the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe regulations providing for the identification of such cotton and for establishing the right to such exemption. The person establishing his right to such exemption in accordance with such regulations shall be entitled to receive bale tags for such cotton under section 10. The amount of cotton which the Secretary of Agriculture ascertains under section 3 (a) should be allotted for marketing from production during the crop year 1935–36 shall include the amount which he estimates will be tax-exempt under the provisions of this subsection and the amount of cotton apportioned in pursuance of section 3 (b) shall be reduced by the amount of his estimate under this subsection.

The last sentence of section 23 of such act, as amended (relating to the definition of "bale"), is amended by inserting "4 (h)", after "3."

SEC. 2. That section 6 of the act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:

"Where the operators of cotton gins are required to collect such taxes imposed under such act that said operators of said gins be paid a reasonable compensation for their services, said compensation to be paid out of the taxes collected on cotton subject to penalty under said act for and during the year 1934–35."

SEC. 3. That section 6 of the aforesaid act be further amended by adding the following paragraph:

"Members of county committees and community committees authorized to make allotments within any county or community shall be selected by the county commissioners, and in the event there are no county commissioners, that the ordinaries (or officials holding like office) of the respective counties or communities in which such members are authorized to act make the selection, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to inform the House that by reason of the authority conferred upon him by House Resolution 72, he did on January 26, 1935, administer the oath of office to Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD at the Naval Hospital in the city of Washington.

In this same connection the Speaker wishes to say that he was very happy to find the gentleman from Alabama improving and very hopeful of being able to be back in the House before a great while; and the gentleman from Alabama wished me to convey his regards to all of his colleagues in the House. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 75

Whereas William B. Bankhead, a Representative for the State of Alabama, has been unable from sickness to appear in person to be sworn as a Member of this House but has sworn to and subscribed the oath of office before the Speaker, authorized by resolution of this House to administer the oath, and that said oath of office has been presented in his behalf to the House, and there being no contest or question as to his election: Therefore

Resolved, That said oath be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said William B. Bankhead as a Member of this House.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a resolution passed by the Nebraska State Senate January 22, 1935, memorializing the Congress of the United States to include building of three interstate bridges across the Missouri River as public works projects.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have always inserted these matters in the RECORD.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, those petitions which come to us from States are usually referred to the end of the RECORD after the day's proceedings. It is not customary to insert them in the body of the RECORD because there are so many of them. I, personally, however, have no objection.

Mr. SNELL. I have no objection in this instance but we do not want to start this habit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to follows:

Resolution

Memorializing the Congress of the United States to include building of free interstate bridges across the Missouri River as Public Works Administration projects

(Introduced by Senators Neumann, Dafoe, Howell, Sullivan, Carsten, Wells, Crowley, Jelen, and McMahon)

Preamble

Whereas in many instances the United States of America, through its Public Works Administration, has considered Federal aid, in whole or in part, on intrastate bridges within the State of Nebraska feasible projects to alleviate distress of the inhabitants of this State accentuated by the 1934 destructive drought; and

Whereas the effect of the withering drought still pinches our people and work relief is imperative if our State is effectively to carry on until private industry can absorb our employables now out of jobs: Now, therefore, be it

1. That this house hereby respectfully petitions and memorializes the Congress of the United States to provide further assistance through its Public Works Administration to consider the immediate public necessity of 100 percent Federal participation in free interstate bridge projects across the Missouri River at South Sioux City, Nebr.; Blair, Nebr.; Omaha, Nebr.; Plattsmouth, Nebr.; Nebraska City, Nebr.; Louisville, Nebr.; Decatur, Nebr.; Brownville, Nebr.; and Rulo, Nebr.; or at such other locations across said river as good engineering and public necessity require.

2. That the secretary of the senate is hereby ordered and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the United States Senators representing the State of Nebraska and to the Congressmen in the House of Representatives of the United States representing the State of Nebraska, to take such steps as may be necessary to provide for free interstate bridges across the Missouri River and thus afford the citizens of our State immediate relief, which is desperately needed.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order tomorrow to consider the bill (S. 1175) to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object to taking up this bill, because I think it is very important that it should be taken up right away, can the gentleman inform the House whether hearings on the bill are available at the present time?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the hearings have just been concluded. We hope to have them available very shortly. I may say for the information of the gentleman from New York that the hearings are short. Because the House bill has just been reported we are going to take up the Senate bill in order to expedite passage.

Mr. SNELL. Will the hearings be printed in plenty of time to give us an opportunity to study the provisions of the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am sure the gentleman will be satisfied with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Has there been a liberalization of the powers of the R. F. C. with reference to granting loans to industry, and so forth?

Mr. STEAGALL. We think we have liberalized the provisions of the law in a way that will meet the wishes of the gentleman from New York and the rest of us who have found greater difficulty in obtaining industrial loans than we had hoped would be the case under the law passed in the last session.

Mr. SNELL. How much general debate will there be on the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. That I am unable to say; the House has not yet decided that.

Mr. SNELL. There is no objection on this side so far as I know.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman if he would ask for sufficient time in general debate to give some of us opportunity to be heard. I am interested and would like some time.

Mr. STEAGALL. I think we can accommodate the situation.

Mr. PATMAN. I would be very glad if the gentleman could assure me that I may have some time.

Mr. STEAGALL. I should be glad to do so, but I cannot say to the gentleman just what arrangements will be made about the time.

Mr. PATMAN. But the gentleman will keep it in mind?

Mr. STEAGALL. I certainly will.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that it shall be in order tomorrow to consider the bill (S. 1175) extending the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the general rules of the House?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish also to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill (S. 1175) to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 1175. An act to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

THE TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

Pending this motion, may I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that we let general debate continue throughout the day without limit of time, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and one-half by myself.

Mr. TABER. That is satisfactory to me.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, with Mr. BULWINKLE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, one of the most important pieces of legislation passed by the Seventy-third Congress was that which extended the financial aid of the Government to the help of distressed small businesses and industries. Such aid had been available to larger industries, financial institutions, and railroads through the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The small business man and small manufacturer, however, whose business in many cases forms the main commercial enterprise of many small towns, found himself strapped so far as credit was concerned. He had no recourse for the financial aid which he so sorely needed. Thousands of these concerns went bankrupt, in many instances paralyzing the commercial activities of entire communities.

As recovery began to take form, stimulated and encouraged by the new deal legislation, new orders and increased business offered hope for renewed activity to countless of these small businesses and industries which had survived the depression. Ordinarily they would have gone to their banks, obtained the credit and loans which they needed, expanded their operations which had been dormant or greatly curtailed during the previous 3 or 4 years, added to their employment rolls, and, in general, contributed materially to the returning prosperity of the community in which they were located.

But there were no credit facilities to be had. Banks either could not or would not loan to these small businesses and industries, which form the background of the commercial enterprise of this country. They cried aloud for help, and help was not forthcoming where ordinarily it would have been.

It was to save the situation that Congress passed in the closing days of the last session the loans-to-industry law, which opened up the resources of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve System to the small industrial concerns.

A new hope spread through industry and business. Thousands who had been hanging on literally by the "skin of their teeth" breathed again freely, seeing in this far-sighted and liberal legislation a chance to go on, to develop, and to give employment and join with other concerns in the prosperity which was returning to America.

Applications for loans poured into the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve banks. Within a few weeks after the passage of the law the facilities of these two agencies were opened up to the industrialists who applied for loans.

It is 7 months since the law was passed; it is fully 6 months since the offices set up under the law began operating. The law was passed as an emergency legislation to relieve a situation existing 6 months ago and not some time in the distant future. How many concerns which have applied for help, to which they were entitled under the provisions of the law, have actually received such help? The figures of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve banks combined indicate that something around 20 percent of the total amount of money authorized by Congress for the purpose of aiding America's small businesses and industries has been so used up to the present time. At that rate it would require something like 5 years to use up all the money which was authorized and which sum of money was intended for immediate use to help American business which needed that help at once. They will not need help 5 years from today—many of them will be beyond help 5 months from today.

In my own district I know of a number of concerns which applied for help under the provisions of this law and did not receive it. In some of these instances a conservative banker reviewed the cases for me and advised they were good risks. That situation must be true in other parts of the country because of the appallingly low number of loans which have been granted by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and Federal Reserve banks.

The information which is available at this time concerning the extent of assistance which has been given to the small manufacturer and the small business man under the provisions of the loans-to-industry law indicate that in round figures $34,522,000 has been loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and $55,000,000 has been loaned by the Federal Reserve banks.

May I say here that that $55,000,000 represents both the amount of commitments actually made and the loans which have been approved but the funds of which have not yet been disbursed.

In other words, whereas the law authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to use up to $300,000,000 of its funds for the purpose of loaning direct to industry and authorized the Federal Reserve banks to loan up to $280,000,000 for this purpose, to date but a total of $89,522,000 has been so used. About 20 percent of the assistance which Congress intended that it should receive during the past 7 months has actually been given to the small American industry and business.

Obviously something has to be done, and done immediately. The law must be liberalized along lines which will enable the small business man and manufacturer, whom it is intended to aid, to secure that assistance—first, without suffering the long delay which applications thus far submitted for the most part have had to endure; secondly, without the great expense which the preparation of data and information for submission to the loaning agency in connection with the application has entailed to the manufacturer and business man; and, third, a more personal attitude on the part of the loaning agency toward the applicant. We must deviate from the hard-boiled methods of making such unreasonable demands for collateral as automatically rule the applicant out. The emergency has not yet passed, and in the administration of this law we have no right to be more stringent than reasonable care and the adequate protection of the loan requires.

In this connection it might be advisable to consider the establishment of intermediate-credit banks to handle this matter of loaning direct to industry. Such intermediate banks would be set up only for the purpose of dealing with trade and industry. Their functions would be quite apart from those of the ordinary commercial bank. They would operate solely for the purpose of investigating applications for loans, advising the applicants; and if the loan were granted, act in a supervisory capacity until such time as the loan was repaid and the concern back on its feet. Theirs would be the exclusive task of assisting American trade and industry to regain its foothold on American enterprise.

In connection with credit banks for industry, it is analogous to cite the existence of the Federal intermediate-credit banks which have been established for agriculture and which operate solely for the relief and the assistance of agricultural enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an analysis of the report of an investigation which has been made on the credit requirements of the small industry for recovery, which was prepared for the Small Industries Committee Business Advisory and Planning Council by Dr. Theodore N. Beckman, who was in charge of the survey.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUMMARY, CONCLUSIONS, AND RECOMMENDATIONS

From data submitted herewith it is apparent that a strong feeling has been prevalent for some time that the "small business man" has suffered unduly during the depression and that he has not benefited substantially from new-deal legislation. Especially numerous were complaints against the present credit situation. Serious charges have been made to the effect that it is virtually impossible for the small industrialist to obtain needed capital for working purposes or for long-time requirements, that banks and other normal credit sources have refused to extend necessary and justifiable accommodations, and that industrial recovery will come to naught unless recognition is given to the needs of small business and adequate provision is made to meet them.

This survey was undertaken by the Department of Commerce, with the cooperation of the Business Advisory and Planning Council, in response to a growing demand for the real facts. It was done in the hope that needed light will be thrown on this dark spot of our economic life, and that the findings, if corroborative of the allegations, may suggest constructive measures which will speed recovery and extricate the small business man from his financial difficulties.

SCOPE OF THE SURVEY

For the sake of simplicity and homogeneity, it was decided to limit the investigation to industry and not to include trade, construction, etc. Questionnaires prepared by the Bureau of the Census were sent to every manufacturer employing on an average of from 30 to 190 wage earners in 1933, but for final tabulation purposes returns were included from concerns employing no less than 21 and no more than 250 wage earners. The response was immediate and enthusiastic. Such keen interest was displayed in this inquiry that of the 16,500 firms to which the questionnaire was sent, over 46 percent submitted returns. Of these, 6,158 have been found satisfactory for tabulation purposes. Further evidence of unusual interest in the survey is revealed by the fact that 829 manufacturers took advantage of the space provided on the schedule for comments, while several hundred others submitted supplemental letters, expressing their views of the situation at considerable length. The material contained in many of these letters was deemed so valuable and pertinent that 263 of them were excerpted for special study.

Small manufacturer in American industrial life: An analysis of the place of the small manufacturer in American industry disclosed the startling information that of all the manufacturing establishments in existence in 1929, 97.1 percent operated on a small scale, employing no wage earners or less than 250 per establishment. These small industrialists absorbed 48.1 percent of the wage earners employed in industry, in addition to a large number of proprietors and firm members.

In some industries the small manufacturer loomed even larger as an employer of labor. In 7 of the 13 industrial groups into which the concerns have been divided, over one-half of the wage earners were absorbed by the small manufacturer, and in 3 of the major industrial divisions they cared for more than two-thirds of all employees in their respective industries.

On the other hand, less than 3 percent of the manufacturing establishments employed almost 52 percent of the wage earners in industry. This represents a concentration of power in the distribution of employment that is fraught with grave danger.

The existence of the small manufacturer is necessary to prevent monopolistic abuses unless undue Federal regulation and control of industry is resorted to. Thus, continued welfare of the small manufacturer is socially desirable and wholesome. It tends to deflect criticism from the industrial giants, allays fear of control by the few, and maintains a balance in our economic life. Benefits from their continued profitable operation also inure to the numerous small communities in which small manufacturers are located, through deposits of funds in local banks, stabilization of employment, and through the consumption of locally produced materials. Small industry is so intimately woven into the economic and social fabric of the Nation that no recovery is possible without assurance of its economic well-being.

Extent of the credit problem: This study does not deal with the problem of trade credit; it concerns itself entirely with credit from banks and other financial sources. Whether adequate credit of this type is available to small business men is no longer a matter of debate or opinion. Of the 6,158 concerns included in this analysis, 71.2 percent have been classified as borrowers of capital and 28.8 percent as nonborrowers or as concerns with no credit experience. From data it is evident that restrictive policies of financial institutions have exacted a heavy toll from small manufacturers. Of the 4,387 concerns with borrowing relationships, 44.8 percent reported credit difficulty, i. e., they were unable to secure any credit or their credit lines were unduly and dangerously restricted. Projecting this percentage to embrace all manufacturers employing less than 250 wage earners each, it is estimated that at least 65,000 are restricted in their operations by unusual credit stringency. It is probable that manufacturers employing less than 21 wage earners have suffered to a greater extent from credit restriction; hence, this estimate is deemed very conservative.

In nine of the Federal Reserve districts the percentage of borrowing manufacturers experiencing credit difficulty was over 40 and in no district did this figure fall below 32 percent. Nor was this situation confined to a few industries. On the contrary, practically every phase of American industrial life was affected by the restrictive influence of our financial structure. Manufacturers of food products and textiles suffered as heavily as producers of heavy goods. In most instances the smaller firms in each group studied suffered to a proportionately greater extent, indicating possible size discrimination even among the relatively small concerns included in this survey.

Future credit requirements: Of the 1,964 manufacturers reporting credit difficulty, 1,253 estimated that they would need during the present year $50,915,000 to meet maturing obligations; 517 estimated that they will require $14,779,000 during 1935 for the same purpose. Annual estimated requirements were thus made through 1938. Projection of these estimates to include all manufacturers of similar size and position in the United States indicates over $2,000,000,000 will be required during the 5-year period from 1934 through 1938 by manufacturers employing from 21 to 250 wage earners to meet maturing obligations already contracted at the close of 1933 and those expected to be incurred under normal operations. Assuming that the average length of these loans is at the medial between 1 and 5 years, a revolving fund of at least $1,100,000,000 would be required to meet anticipated needs of small manufacturers having credit difficulty. In addition, they will require funds for working capital, the amount of which could not even be approximated from the data now available.

Financial position and credit standing of small manufacturers reporting credit difficulty: It has been often stated that banks are anxious to make loans to sound concerns but such firms do not want to borrow. An analysis has therefore been made of the financial condition and credit standing of the firms whose applications for credit were refused or whose credit limits were seriously restricted. Financial data submitted by each firm included in the survey were carefully edited to make sure of their contents and were next subjected to analysis.

Two of the most important ratios normally used in the analysis of credit risks were developed for each concern for 1933 and, wherever given, also for 1929 and 1926. Similar ratios were also developed for concerns reporting no such difficulty in order that comparisons may be made between the two classes of risks. Surprising as it may seem, a great many of the manufacturers who could secure but limited funds or none at all were financially sound and would normally be regarded as most acceptable credit risks. Of the 1,964 firms reporting credit difficulty, no less than 450 or 22.9 percent had current ratios of 3, and over 818 or 41.7 percent had current ratios of 2 or more. Furthermore, 644 or 32.2 percent of these firms enjoyed net worth of debt ratios of 3 or more and 49.5 percent of the establishments had such ratios of 2 or better.

Again, 17.5 percent of the firms reporting credit difficulty had both current ratios and net worth to debt ratios of 3 and over, and 32.7 percent of the firms had both ratios as high as 2 or better. It would appear, therefore, that at least one-third of the firms suffering from credit refusal or restriction had $2 in current assets for every dollar of current liabilities and had $2 of their own funds in the business for every dollar owed to creditors which is the equivalent of saying that they had $3 in assets to meet every dollar of liabilities. Certainly such a financial condition should entitle the manufacturers to reasonable credit accommodations, particularly in view of the fact that a large percentage of the manufacturers who reported no credit difficulty were in no better financial condition. It is indeed an economic mystery of mysteries. It is a financial puzzle that baffles the sincerest thought.

A further analysis of data submitted by 1,346 identical firms for 1926 and 1929, as well as for 1933, showed that the change in their financial condition has been rather small. Approximately 13 percent of the firms registered a decline in their current ratios from 3 or better to a lower ratio grouping, and the firms with a ratio under 1.0 increased from 11.4 percent in 1926 and 10.1 percent in 1929 to 21.8 percent in 1933. The shifts in the intermediate groups were also slight, indicating that most of these establishments were in as good a financial condition in 1933 as they were in the prosperous year of 1929, or in the normal year of 1926, yet were unable to secure needed accommodations from banks.

In order to check the credit worthiness of these manufacturers further, a test was made of 620 firms each of which enjoyed both a current ratio and a net worth to debt ratio of 2 or better. Credit ratings were examined for each of these firms in Dun & Bradstreet's rating book. Although these are only small industrialists, it was found that 236, or 38.1 percent, of the firms were rated high and 157, or 25.5 percent, were rated good. In other words, almost two-thirds of these firms were most acceptable credit risks not only on the basis of their sound financial position, but also on account of their credit worthiness as judged by character or willingness to pay their obligations at maturity and by their capacity as determined by efficient business management. Another 78 of the firms were rated fair. Many of these are normally acceptable credit risks. It is therefore certain, on the basis of this analysis, that at least one-half of the manufacturers reporting credit difficulty would have enjoyed normal credit accommodation had it not been for a drastic and sudden change in the standards, policies, and requirements of banks and other financial organizations, and that probably many others would have qualified under normal competitive conditions.

Normal sources of credit: This survey furnishes valuable information as to the sources normally used by small manufacturers to finance their businesses. Of the 1,964 concerns reporting credit difficulty, 1,872 indicated sources normally used by them. Study of these data shows that 81.9 percent of the firms normally depended upon banks for credit accommodations for working-capital requirements. Approximately 8 percent supplied their own working capital, while 6.1 percent used personal and private loans, and 3.1 percent obtained such funds from the sale of stocks.

Likewise, 2,217 of the 2,423 firms reporting no credit difficulty reported on this item. Their reliance upon banks was even greater, 89.5 percent of the establishments advising such a source for working capital loans. Only 5.7 percent financed their own requirements, while 3 percent obtained personal or private loans.

It is apparent, therefore, that the dependence of small manufacturers on banks as a source of credit for working capital has been of the first magnitude. Sudden disruption of their industrial life necessarily has resulted from credit restriction.

Further than this, the small manufacturer has been encouraged by banking institutions to use them for both intermediate and long-term loans, as well as for short-term credit. Of the 1,153 firms suffering from credit restriction which reported sources used for long-term requirements, 17 percent were dependent upon commercial banks, notwithstanding the fact that commercial banks are not technically regarded as investment-credit sources. Bonds or stocks and mortgage companies were used by only 25 percent of the firms reporting difficulty.

The data are much the same for firms reporting no credit difficulty. Of the 724 concerns supplying information on this point, 19.9 percent used commercial banks and approximately 25 percent used normal investment-credit sources for long-term loans.

The most tragic story was told, however, by the 47.9 percent of the firms having credit difficulty and the 40.1 percent experiencing no commercial-credit difficulty which reported that no sources were available to them for long-term credit. Stated otherwise, it appears that while 44.8 percent of all firms reporting credit experience either could secure no loans or were severely restricted, an additional 40 percent of the remainder who considered their credit unrestricted had no available sources for long-term credit. Conservation in the preparation of this survey has led to the consideration of only 44.8 percent of the firms borrowing as having credit difficulty because this number so replied to a direct query concerning difficulty in obtaining credit. It is manifest, however, that restriction of long-term credit was a fact insofar as 40.1 percent of the firms reporting no commercial-credit difficulty is concerned. If these concerns were included with those experiencing difficulty, the number of manufacturers affected by credit stringency would be 66.9 percent of all borrowing concerns.

Complaints by manufacturers: Criticism of the inadequacy of the present sources of capital credit was received from a large number of small manufacturers. Contrary to what might have been expected, serious criticisms were advanced by all classes of manufacturers regardless of whether they had credit difficulty or whether they customarily borrowed. The nature and extent of these criticisms are an excellent barometer of the credit problems of small industry. Very few appear to be sarcastic or vindictive. On the whole, they appear to be the result of careful thought and are sincerely prepared expositions of manufacturers who have been the foundation of our industrial order. They are the prayerful appeal of men who have faced the depression with stolid faith, hoping against hope that their business could survive. The bias manifested by them is trivial compared with the faith and courage expressed.

Their criticisms are principally leveled against the sudden changes in bank policy, the attitude of bank examiners, the failure of the Federal Reserve System to meet the situation, and the utter collapse of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a means of direct aid to industry.

They contend, and from the factual material available there is much merit to their argument, that the mania for liquidity on the part of certain bankers and fostered by Federal bank examiners is largely responsible for the failure of other heroic efforts on the part of the present administration to bring prosperity out of chaos. They further contend that the amassing of large sums in the hands of bankers without distribution of these moneys to industry through loans reduces employment, restricts production, and curtails consumption.

They also complain that such new-deal legislation as the class amendment to the Federal Reserve Act and the industrial loan amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act are not put into effect by those responsible for their enforcement because they, too, are bankers and cannot, or will not, use the discretionary powers envisioned by the administration and Congress to assist industry.

These are not an expression of the views of the author of this report, but are a summation of the thought of small industrialists.

That there is justification for some of these criticisms is indicated by the urgent needs of small industry as viewed by the manufacturers themselves. Many reported unfilled orders now on hand for which working capital cannot be secured. Others require funds to purchase machinery and equipment, to expand their plants, conduct sales campaigns, etc. Still others require funds to continue their whole-hearted compliance with National Recovery Administration codes which necessitate increased employment and purchase of raw materials at higher costs. Indeed, in many cases the urgency of immediate credit aid is so great that some firms, with large unfilled orders already on hand, face complete shut-down of their plants with consequent unemployment and bankruptcy.

Recommendations: While the factual data presented in this survey deal entirely with small industrialists, their predicament is undoubtedly also shared by establishments in other economic activities. It is believed that channels of trade and commerce are likewise affected by the lack of financial aid for small wholesale and retail establishments. Due in part to N. R. A. codes, it is claimed, even normal trade-credit accommodations have been restricted. In the consideration of remedies, therefore, their position should also be taken into account and adequate provision be made to meet their needs.

Chapter IX of this report sets forth in some detail policy and regulatory measures to be taken and permanent legislative remedies, the former of which, it is recommended, be placed in immediate effect.

In general, capital requirements of small business enterprises now operating may be divided into three types. First, there are seasonal and other temporary capital requirements incident to current operations. Second, there is the capital required to maintain goods in process of production or trade, aside from fluctuations of a seasonal nature. Third, there is the capital required for maintenance of plant and equipment or for the procurement of additional plant and equipment to meet growing needs. The distress now experienced by small business is apparently equally severe in all three of these fields of credit.

Obviously there is no panacea for the present ills. Progressive action must be taken on a wide front to meet and overcome the obstacles faced by industry. No one of the three-policy or regulatory recommendations made herein will in itself solve the present predicament of small industry, nor will any one of the legislative measures proposed accomplish this purpose alone, but the effect of all of them will go far toward mitigating this suffering.

Federal bank examiners: It is recommended that—

(1) Federal examining policy be immediately changed by specifically instructing bank examiners to stop marking as "slow loans" notes now held by banks and made by small manufacturing establishments of character and which are properly secured;

(2) Bank examiners be instructed to consider the stable character of small manufacturing establishments when auditing bank records with a view of extending rather than restricting credit;

(3) Bank examiners cease their insistence upon loans of a self-liquidating nature until such time as new and permanent sources of intermediate-term credit are made available;

(4) Bank examiners be instructed to obtain the viewpoint of industrialists in carrying out their duties and not maintain only the financial outlook; and

(5) Provision be made to supervise the activities of bank examiners to assure compliance with these regulations rather than leaving the matter to their individual discretion.

Federal Reserve banks: Whether or not the Federal Reserve System should engage in making loans directly to industry is not a question under consideration in this survey. Such loans have been authorized by law and an attempt has been made by the Federal Reserve Board to make the law effective. To date, however, the results are highly unsatisfactory. It is therefore recommended that the Federal Reserve Board amend its policy toward industrial loans by directing all affiliates to—

(1) Appoint to Federal Reserve district industrial advisory committees men who are in fact representatives of small industry and who have no official banking connections;

(2) Grant loans on a "reasonable and sound basis", as provided by law, including in this judgment not alone present ability to repay loans but character and credit standing as normally applied in the analysis of credit risks;

(3) Change the present policy of insisting upon an unusual degree of liquidity and requiring that loans be fully repaid within 3 or 6 months, which is in direct contravention to the intent of Congress in legislating that such loans be granted up to 5 years; and

(4) Encourage affiliates when passing upon applications of small manufacturers to use a latitude of discretion conducive to the expansion of credit.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation: It is further recommended that the Reconconstruction Finance Corporation take immediate steps to change its present policy to carry out the intent of the law "for the purpose of maintaining and increasing the employment of labor" by:

(1) Simplifying the machinery by which applications for loans to industry are considered.

(2) Setting a definite time limit by which officials of the Corporation must take action upon applications.

(3) Eliminating some of the red-tape as reflected by the size of the application and the number and variety of documents of which it is composed, thereby reducing the cost incident to the filing of applications and the complexity of the process.

(4) Reducing the collateral and other requirements to a minimum commensurate with reasonable safety.

(5) Considering on a just basis the character and credit standing of applicants for loans as differentiated from a consideration of present financial strength or profitable operation.

(6) Permitting the refinancing of present obligations, so as to carry out the intent of the law as emergency legislation.

Coordination of our banking system: Commercial banking in the United States is now being administered by 61 different authorities. About 40 percent of all banking is conducted under divergent laws of 48 States and the District of Columbia; the remaining 60 percent, in actual practice, is under the jurisdiction not of one Federal Reserve System, but of 12 such systems, because of the great latitude under which each Federal Reserve bank operates. Consequently, no national-bank credit policy is possible, nor is it possible for banks to exercise the necessary regulatory or controlling influence over economic activity.

In order to speed economic rehabilitation and establish banking on a sound basis, it is recommended that legislation be enacted to coordinate and unify our commercial banking system so as to eliminate free competition in banking, lax and divergent supervision, and strong local influence. This can be done, first, by encouraging banks to join the Federal Reserve System, and second, by coordinating all such banking under the System.

To accomplish the first step, Congress should amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act to:

(1) Require all banks operating under this act to become members of the Federal Reserve System; and

(2) Make bank operation without the benefit of Federal deposit insurance unprofitable by placing a sufficiently heavy tax upon such operations.

The second step is not so much a matter of legislation as it is a problem of administration. The Federal Reserve System should be administered in the spirit of the law creating it by—

(1) Assuming the responsibilities given to it under the law; and

(2) Bringing about greater homogeneity in the development and promulgation of all national credit policies.

The growing tendency on the part of officials of the Federal Reserve Board to pass on to each district the responsibilities which by law rest primarily upon it probably has contributed to a large extent to present ultraconservative banking practice. For example, the regulations and instructions issued by the Board dealing with the industrial and commercial loan provisions of the Glass Act of June 19, 1934, in effect give to each Federal Reserve bank the authority to interpret the act in any manner it sees fit, while at the same time it places responsibility upon each bank that is fundamentally only the prerogative of the Federal Reserve Board. This attempt to place discretion with full responsibility upon each bank has resulted in no discretion, to the great detriment of industry and commerce.

Securities Act: A limited number of manufacturers have expressed their belief that an amendment to the Securities Act is desirable in order that security flotations by small manufacturing establishments may be facilitated. On the basis of a study of the facts in the situation, it is recommended that—

(1) Registration of securities be simplified and adapted to the special needs of each type of security issue and each type of issuer. It is probable that after the first period of experimentation the Securities and Exchange Commission will so modify the requirements for registration that the task will be simplified for small concerns. No change in the law is necessary to accomplish this purpose.

(2) In the examination of the registration statement and the prospectus that is prepared for prospective purchasers of the security, less weight than at present be placed on the financial statement of the issuer and more on the management ability. It is probable that in the long run more failures in business are caused by inefficiency than by lack of capital. Inability to operate a business properly may result in a rapid dissipation of capital, to the detriment of investors. This, again, is a matter of policy which in time the Commission may adopt of its own accord, and which requires no further legislation.

(3) The Securities Act be modified so as to eliminate penalties for the "omission of material facts", unless such information is specifically requested by the Commission. No responsible business man should object to those parts of the act which require that information given in the registration statement and in the prospectus be true and representative of actual conditions. Issuers furnishing false and misleading information in connection with the sale of a security should be subject to punishment just as those who use false or fraudulent methods in other respects. It is also not unreasonable to require that sellers of securities to the public furnish information to the public with reference to such securities, just as it is required of sellers of commodities sold in interstate commerce. But to punish issuers for the "omission of material facts" is just as harsh as to punish vendors of merchandise for failure voluntarily to point out the weakness or undesirable features of their products.

Industrial and commercial intermediate-credit banks: As has been pointed out in a previous connection, approximately 20 percent of the manufacturers reporting on the subject utilized banks for intermediate needs extending over a period of 1 to 5 years. The virtual cessation of lending by banks, except for short-term purposes and that on a restricted scale, has had an especially disastrous effect upon small enterprises. In an effort to remain solvent and to protect depositors, borrowers have been sadly neglected.

Assuming that the remedial measures recommended up to this point will be adopted, the problem of securing capital for intermediate-term needs will still remain unsolved, although in a large percent of the cases it represents the most urgent need. Loans for 60 to 90 days will not help to finance the large volume of more or less permanent working capital necessary to start raw materials through a long productive process or to replace depleted current assets resulting from the depression. The withdrawal of commercial bankers from this field leaves the small firm in an unusually precarious position. It is, therefore, recommended that an intermediate-term credit system be established for industry and trade. The need for such a system has long been recognized by authorities, bankers, and business men.

In the report of the National Industrial Conference Board on "The Availability of Bank Credit", published in 1932, it was pointed out, first, that commercial banks prior to the depression extended "a considerable volume of intermediate credit", and second, "that it is natural that business demands for such credit should be greater after 3 years of operating reverses than formerly", due to an impaired working capital condition. The question is then raised whether there is not a "real defect in the American banking system because of the absence of specialized" institutions dealing in intermediate credit, just as in the case of the Federal Intermediate Credit Banks established for agriculture.

Therefore, the recommendation is made that an Industrial and Commercial Intermediate Credit System be established by an act of Congress, so that the small industrial and commercial borrower may have credit facilities similar to those already in existence to finance agriculture, urban real estate, railroads, and large industrial enterprises. This system is to consist of a Central Intermediate Credit Bank and 12 regional Intermediate Credit Banks as follows:

1. The Central Intermediate Credit Bank to be located in New York City so as to obviate the necessity for a separate fiscal agent and to be in close proximity to industry and trade.

2. The Central Intermediate Credit Bank to be managed by a governor and a board of directors.

3. Funds for lending purposes to be obtained by the Central Intermediate Credit Bank through—

a. An initial capital stock of $100,000,000 to be purchased by the Treasury of the United States.

b. An additional capital stock of $100,000,000 to be subscribed by the Treasury of the United States, subject to call, in whole or in part, by the directors of the central intermediate credit bank, on 30 days' notice to the Secretary of the Treasury.

c. Issue and sale of collateral trust debentures, with a maturity of not more than 5 years and not in excess of 10 times the paid-in capital and surplus.

4. It shall be the function of the Central Intermediate Credit Bank—

a. To make loans to the 12 regional Intermediate Credit Banks on terms and conditions prescribed by the governor, who is also to be chairman of the board of directors of the Central Intermediate Credit Bank.

b. To issue rules and regulations to the regional banks and to exercise complete supervision over them.

5. The 12 regional intermediate credit banks for industry and trade to be located in the same cities in which the Federal Reserve banks are located.

6. It shall be their function—

a. To make loans directly to industrial and commercial enterprises. Individual loans will be large enough to justify direct participation and thus eliminate the red tape which usually characterizes indirect procedure.

b. To discount paper for banks and trust companies arising out of intermediate loans to industry and trade.

7. Borrowers from the regional Intermediate Credit Banks to subscribe to the stock in the Central Intermediate Credit Bank an amount equal to at least 5 percent of the loan obtained.

8. Interest rates charged on intermediate loans by the regional banks to be at least 1 percent per annum higher than the rediscount rate by the Central Intermediate Credit Bank, but not less than 3 percent nor more than 6 percent.

It is not the intention of this survey to present the legislative details of the laws proposed or to point out the exact form which the proposed regulatory or policy measures should take in the administration of existing laws. An attempt has been made merely to present the substance of the remedies proposed and of recommendations embodied in this report. To date, the march to economic recovery has been seriously retarded. It is believed that the remedies herein proposed point the way to lasting improvement in business and to increased employment along a wide front.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, this report substantiates the statements which I have made today. The material in this report is the compilation of information which has been gathered in a survey conducted to secure an accurate picture of the situation confronting the small industries of the United States. The purpose of this survey, as is the purpose of my criticism against the present functioning of the loans-to-industry law, is to arrive at an efficacious solution of this all-important problem to American commercial enterprise.

While it is not my intention to offer Dr. Beckman's report as the cure-all of American industrial credit evils, I do believe that it offers considerable provocation for serious thought which will bring about corrective steps at once. Bearing as it does the stamp of officialdom, it emphasizes the need for immediate remedial action. Again I repeat that American industry needs our help today and not some time in the distant future.

Mr. BOLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BOLTON. I have listened very carefully to the gentleman's remarks, and I am wondering if his membership on the Banking and Currency Committee leads him to believe that the difficulty with industry lies either in the administration of the law or in the law itself?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Both. The law itself was intended, and the Congress intended in the writing of the law, that a liberal interpretation should be placed upon the law. Unfortunately the law contained the phrase "full and adequate security" which I may say to the gentleman has now been stricken out. Because this phrase left considerable to the judgment it obstructed the effective operation of the law. What I am calling to the attention of the Congress is that the law is being operated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Reserve banks, and organizations which are primarily banking institutions and which have the bankers' attitude. Their interpretation of the law has in many cases been so harsh that applicants for loans, which in my opinion were justified, were unable to receive such loans. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I prefer not to yield until I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, a practice has recently grown up that I feel should be brought to the attention of the Members of this House, and which I feel should perhaps be made the subject of an investigation by the members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, so that those responsible for it may be given an opportunity to defend themselves and to make an explanation.

During the present administration it has been the practice of the Postmaster General, when there were new issues of stamps, to requisition from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing the first few sheets printed, before they had been gummed and perforated, autograph them, and present them to a favored few of his friends. I am told that when the Mother's Day stamp was issued Mr. Farley autographed and presented the first full sheet of 200 subjects to Mrs. Roosevelt. Later he inscribed one of these imperforate sheets of stamps for the President, Colonel Howe, and one for his own children—Betty, Ann, and James Jr.

With the printing of the Wisconsin stamp which followed, sheets are said to have been autographed by the Postmaster General for the President, his secretary, Third Assistant Postmaster General, and this time one for each of Mr. Farley's three children.

When the National Park stamps were issued in July of last year the weekly Philatelic Gossip commented:

As usual, sheets were autographed for officials of the administration, including the President.

The first sheet having been presented to Mr. Secretary Ickes.

The American Philatelic Society feels that this new deal in philately is a discrimination against the rank and file of stamp collectors, because sheets of imperforate stamps are not made available to them for purchase, but are autographed and given to a favored few, and in most instances those few officials of the Government.

The president of the local chapter of the society in my own county informs me that he knows of collectors who have paid as high as $175 each for the imperforate stamps in pairs and in blocks. Two weeks ago, out of Norfolk, Va., there came a little dispatch for the papers saying that one of those special souvenir sheets of Mother's Day issue, unperforated and ungummed, had turned up in the philatelic market and was quoted at some outlandish price between $20,000 and $30,000. It develops that a sheet of imperforate and ungummed stamps is a museum piece and of great value. I am credibly informed that there are 9,000,000 stamp collectors in the United States who purchased stamps last year amounting to almost a million dollars. Any little irregularity in a stamp creates a value entirely unrelated to its nominal price. The Postmaster General has brought out a lot of new issues on the theory that the people are getting tired of the old ones. Up to the present time he has turned out 20 special issues. There were 10 of various denominations in the national parks series; 1 for the town of Newburgh, N. Y., 2 for the Chicago exposition, 1 for the N. R. A., 1 for Kosciusko, the Zeppelin flight stamp, the Byrd "Little America" stamp, the Maryland commemorative stamp, the Mother's Day issue, the Wisconsin Tercentenary stamp.

There has been considerable comment upon this practice in the press and a number of stamp clubs and chapters of the American Philatelic Society from Maine to California, including the Westchester County chapter, in my own home county, have passed several resolutions protesting it. In a resolution adopted January 18, 1935, the Westchester County Chapter No. 85, asked that the officers of the American Philatelic Society call to the attention of the Post Office Department the policy of issuing imperforate presentation sheets of stamps which they say causes confusion and is detrimental to the best interests of American philately. The members believe that the practice has continued to the further detriment of collectors of the United States' stamps, as some of those imperforate stamps have already been offered for sale and there is nothing to prevent any and all of them being offered at some future time. The resolution asks further that the Post Office Department recall and deliver to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, for destruction, all such irregular and contraband productions. It was further resolved that a copy of the resolution be forwarded to President Roosevelt, a fellow member of the American Philatelic Society, with the request that he personally intervene in the matter in the interest of collectors in general and for the preservation of the credit of philately in the United States. This resolution was passed after it was absolutely authenticated several new stamps, including the Mother's Day and the National Parks stamps, had been issued before being perforated and had found their way into the hands of dealers. The members, in adopting the resolution, felt that such issuances and practices have a strong tendency to cast suspicion that favoritism is practiced by the head of an important department of our Federal Government, who, like Caesar's wife, should be above and beyond suspicion.

In a poll taken by the National Federation of Stamp Clubs it was found that the clubs are almost unanimously against the policy of giving out imperforate sheets of stamps to favored individuals.

One of our colleagues has received a letter from a constituent commenting on the practice of the Postmaster General to which I have referred. I want to read from his letter:

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman give the name of the writer of the letter?

Mr. MILLARD. I will give it to the committee later.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman give it now?

Mr. MILLARD. No.

Mr. RANKIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I object to the gentleman reading the letter if he will not tell us who wrote it.

Mr. MILLARD. I am doing this in my own time.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman cannot read anything of that nature in his own time except by unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not have the floor.

Mr. MILLARD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the objection which the gentleman from Mississippi makes may be sustained, but when the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] gives the information to the House and tells us he will give the writer's name to the committee, it seems to me that is fair and it seems to me he should be allowed to read the letter. I appreciate the gentleman may follow up his suggestion with an objection.

Mr. RANKIN. I think the gentleman from New York should give the name of the man writing the letter.

Mr. MILLARD. The name of the man is George R. M. Ewing, 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi withdraw his objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; the gentleman has complied with my request.

Mr. MILLARD (reading):

Postmaster General Farley is presenting entire sheets of new stamps to some of his friends, including the President. These sheets are not perforated nor are they cut apart into small panes of 50 to 100 as we buy them in the post office. Consequently they constitute an entirely different variety of stamp from the perforated stamps sold in the post offices. It is absolutely impossible for any private citizen to buy any of these imperforate stamps. Consequently anyone getting one of these sheets pays Farley the face value and gets a sheet of stamps that is worth thousands of dollars in the philatelic market.

As an example, several weeks ago I saw an unperforated sheet of Mother's Day stamps—200 stamps on the sheet (when cut into panes, we bought them in small panes of 50) and it bore the signature of Mr. Farley on one of the sheet margins. The sheet of stamps was sent to the Scott Stamp & Coin Co., 1 West Forty-seventh Street, New York City, for them to purchase and the owner asked $20,000 for the sheet. They cost 3 cents a stamp and he asked $100 a stamp from the dealers. The Scott Co. refused to buy the sheet and sent it back. They will not divulge the name of the owner to private individuals, but Hugh M. Clark (head of the Scott Co.) has twice requested the local postal authorities to send up an inspector to question him, and he would give the inspector the information. His invitation has been absolutely ignored to date.

Not only sheets of Mother's Day issue but of every issue brought out under Farley's supervision has been distributed, and some day these are coming on the market—if not by the present holders, then by their estates—and stamp collectors are going to be forced to absorb United States stamps that they never had the opportunity to acquire when they were current. Naturally they will be forced to pay through the nose—as they are being asked to do at the present time.

I, personally, have been offered blocks of the 4-cent national parks and the 8-cent national parks imperforated (and these can only come from the presentation sheets) at $250 per stamp, $500 for a pair of stamps, and $1,000 for a block of four. They were offered to me by a dealer, and he said they were offered to him from a source in Washington in exchange for United States stamps that the owner desired for his collection. I refused to buy and the dealer later told me that he declined the order as he couldn't place the stamps at that price—but, a few days later, he received the same identical want list from a dealer in Washington. In other words, the owner found a Washington dealer he could do business with.

So that you will not think that it is a case of "sour grapes" with me relative to these unperforated sheets, I want you to know that I own a pair of unperforated 2-cent national parks stamps that I bought from a dealer (Eugene Klein) in Philadelphia in September and paid him $250 for them. This was before I was aware of what was going on, and they were represented to me as having been found in a post office out west. If we succeed in getting the Department to issue these sheets unperforated, the value of my pair will drop from $250 to 4 cents; nevertheless I want to see it done.

In my boyhood days, like most of the rest of us, I collected stamps but have never done so very seriously, and while I agree with the collectors that there is unfair discrimination here, I feel that a much more serious situation has arisen whereby an official of the Federal Government can make unlimited presentations of gifts not purchasable in the open market, but which have a value in that market of $20,000, or one even approximating that amount. From this it is quite obvious that the monetary value of Mr. Farley's gifts is tremendous.

I think my colleagues in the House will believe with me that the Postmaster General should be given an opportunity to make an explanation and I ask that this House authorize the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to call the Postmaster General and give him this opportunity, and that he place before the committee copies of all requisitions and invoices drawn by the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General on the Bureau of Engraving and Printing by the Philatelic Agency or other sales agencies for imperforate stamps since March 4, 1933, or beginning with the Newburgh proclamation of peace commemorative stamp, and all correspondence connected therewith.

Following is copy of the resolution of inquiry which I have introduced today and which will be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby directed to furnish to the House of Representatives the following information:

1. Whether imperforate, incomplete, or specially marked stamps have, since January 1, 1933, been issued by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at the request of or with the consent of the Post Office Department or any officer or employee of that Department.

2. Whether imperforate, incomplete, or specially marked stamps, since January 1, 1933, have been knowingly distributed by the Post Office Department, or any officer or employee of that Department, other than through the regular channels of the Post Office Department for sale to the public.

3. Whether any stamps of special issues, since January 1, 1933, have been distributed other than through the usual channels of the Post Office Department for sale to the public.

4. The name or names of officers or employees of the Post Office Department, if any, who have since January 1, 1933, authorized or consented to the distribution of imperforate, incomplete, or specially marked stamps or have distributed such stamps or any stamps other than through the regular channels of sale to the public, and the name or names of the person or persons to whom such distribution has been made and the price or prices, if any, paid by persons receiving such stamps.

This is a resolution which I placed on the desk this morning and which will be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I think the rights of 9,000,000 stamp collectors should be protected, and therefore I am bringing this matter before the House at the present time.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLARD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. May I ask the gentleman if he has any information as to the accuracy of the statement that appeared in the public press as follows:

Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Howe, and Mr. Farley each have received unperforated, ungummed sheets of all issues. There being few, if any, other such sheets in existence, each has received $340,000 worth of stamps.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 3 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH (reading):

Mr. Ickes, with his 10 sheets of the park issues would have $200,000 worth of stamps, although for some reason the park issue seemed to command less money.

Mr. MILLARD. I have not all of that information, but I do have information that the President has received all 20 and that Mr. Ickes has received 10. After the Philatelic Society investigated, they gave me the information and the proof that other people have received these stamps. How many I do not know. That is the idea of this inquiry I am suggesting.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLARD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the gentleman himself made any inquiry of the Post Office Department for information with reference to this matter?

Mr. MILLARD. I think my secretary called up there yesterday.

Mr. McCORMACK. Your secretary?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman himself has not called up, but has introduced this so-called "resolution." Is that correct?

Mr. MILLARD. That is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Has this practice been indulged in by Postmasters General in the past?

Mr. MILLARD. I understand not.

Mr. RANKIN. Where did the gentleman get that information?

Mr. MILLARD. From the Post Office Department this morning.

Mr. RANKIN. From the Postmaster General?

Mr. MILLARD. Not from the Postmaster General, but from someone in the office there. I called up and wanted to know if this had been the practice and they said that never have they issued unperforated and ungummed stamps before this time.

Mr. KELLER. Did they admit it had been done this time?

Mr. MILLARD. Oh, yes; the Postmaster General admits that; and it is only a question of amount.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand from the gentleman's argument, he does not contend that the Government lost any money in these transactions?

Mr. MILLARD. The Government did not lose any money; no. They paid 3 cents apiece for them, but they got $60 instead of $20,000, which they would be worth to the philatelists.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLARD. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman knows that by reason of the issuance of these stamps millions of dollars of revenue come into the Post Office Department. This is a very substantial source of income.

Mr. MILLARD. Not these stamps, I will say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, yes; from these new stamps.

Mr. MILLARD. Not from unperforated and ungummed stamps.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I mean from the issuance of new stamps. I understand the issuance of the George Washington Bicentennial stamps brought in $1,000,000.

Mr. MILLARD. That is correct; but that has nothing to do with this argument. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] did not at least show the Postmaster General the courtesy to first take this proposition up with him. I am sure that the Postmaster General will be pleased to give the facts.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] admits that the Government lost nothing in this transaction; but from the headlines that appeared in the papers you would think there had been a raid on the Federal Treasury, and even from a reading of the gentleman's interview of last Sunday, until you got almost to the last of it, you would have received that impression.

If there has been anything done that should not have been done, I for one am more than willing to have it investigated; but it seems to me that the gentleman from New York is rather hurried in his attempt to rush into the Well of the House and raise this question against the present Postmaster General when he slept through a former administration, when a former Postmaster General was making mail contracts that were unconscionable, unreasonable, and by which the Government was losing millions of dollars.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman has stated there was no raid on the Treasury, but if what the gentleman from New York has stated on the floor here is true someone certainly received something that they should not have received.

Mr. RANKIN. As I said, I am not objecting to the investigation, but I am calling attention to the fact—and the gentleman from Wisconsin will agree with me—that the gentleman from New York was a Member of the House when these mail contracts were being made that no man in good conscience can defend on the floor of this House or elsewhere. I want to congratulate the gentleman from New York on his revival of righteousness; and now, while they can do so without losing any political prestige, I should like to see it spread through the entire Membership on the other side of the House. I should like to see it become retroactive. I hope it will even extend back as far as Teapot Dome, because they must get forgiveness for all their sins if they are going to be received back into the fold of righteousness by the American people. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BOILEAU. I have always regarded the gentleman from Mississippi as being very fair.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman and return the compliment.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think, however, in this instance, the gentleman is apparently putting up a smoke screen of somebody else's misbehavior to cover up, apparently, what I would not say is misbehavior, but certainly an indiscretion.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I am not objecting to this investigation at all, but I do think, in all fairness to the Postmaster General, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] should have taken this up with him before coming into the well of the House and making this attack.

But the point to which I was calling attention is the fact that during all the days of a former administration, when mail contracts were being made by which subsidies were given to certain interests that were shown to have contributed heavily to the Republican campaign fund, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] was as meek as a mouse so far as raising the question of the propriety of such dealings was concerned.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman is not erecting a smoke screen, because a smoke screen obscures. The gentleman is drawing a herring across the trail, which detracts.

Mr. RANKIN. I will ask the gentleman from New Jersey not to follow the herring, as he did under the former administration.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have just looked at the resolution and I find it has no title on it as most resolutions have. Does not the gentleman think that for the benefit of the country in these days of relief measures it might be entitled "A bill for the relief of the distressed philatelists"?

Mr. SNELL. You can do almost anything under your present relief bill, and you can probably attend to that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Mississippi 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] is entirely correct. He has made a good suggestion.

But you know it makes a great deal of difference whose ox is gored.

The point I am making is the fact that stamp collectors are being gouged, according to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD]; but in the other case I mentioned the American taxpayers were being gouged for millions of dollars, and the gentleman from New York took no notice of it, so far as the RECORD shows.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Something has been said about a smoke screen and dragging a herring across the path. The gentleman knows that the herring came from the Republican side because of the wonderful activities of the chairman of the Democratic committee.

Mr. RANKIN. Nobody discovered it until it was mentioned by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PERKINS], whom I regard as one of the ablest men on the Republican side. Things must be bad when he rises to protest, for he sat here under Republican misrule for 12 years and said nothing.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I will.

Mr. ALLEN. Are the rugs in the Postmaster General's office still there?

Mr. RANKIN.. I think the ones the Democrats bought are still there. The others probably disappeared with the Republican administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], Chairman of the Post Office Committee, and myself have introduced practically identical bills which would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury on recommendation of the Postmaster General to purchase closed State and national banks suitable for post offices and at the same time relieve bank depositors throughout the United States. We all know that throughout the United States there are hundreds of closed banks that are now empty. We know that it is practically impossible to sell these wonderfully constructed buildings to any business man to be used as a business house. They are lying idle, while the United States Government is renting inadequate buildings for postal use. In many instances the Government is building post offices in the same towns where these closed banks are located. In one town in my district—and there are probably similar cases in every district—a State bank has closed its doors. The cost of the bank building was $60,000. It was built about 10 years ago. It would cost the Government about 20 percent of the construction cost. It is located in the center of the town and would make an ideal post office. Under existing law the Government can only buy sites and build post offices. To me it seems ridiculous that the Government cannot buy a bank building at a cost of 20 percent, admitting that the particular bank would meet all the requirements for a post office. Most of the closed banks are in good condition, but for those that need repair or remodeling my bill provides that the Government can spend 10 percent for necessary repairs on closed bank buildings costing $50,000 or over; it provides for 20 percent of purchase price for repairs on buildings purchased for under $50,000.

Enactment of this bill will facilitate the payment of depositors, because, as I have stated, most bank buildings are unsuitable for general business, therefore would continue to be idle, thus making a continual drain on the depositors for taxes and continual repairs.

I would like to see this bill enacted into law.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CROSS].

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as a result of an utter collapse of their ancient, unscientific monetary systems, there is taking place in every enlightened country in the world rapid reformation of their monetary systems.

And we with more unemployment and more suffering than any other country as the result of the deficiencies of our system should quit hesitating and face the facts and reform our system before it is too late.

The subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, of which I was a member, appointed at the last session of Congress to investigate our monetary system, held extended hearings and as a result of those hearings, as well as my personal investigations, I introduced H. R. 2747, and I earnestly hope every Member of this Congress will give it that serious, earnest consideration that the critical condition of our country and the importance of the subject demands.

Mr. Chairman, with its marvelous climate and fertile soil, its matchless rivers and harbors, the United States covers the choicest portion of the globe. Populated by 125,000,000 sturdy, industrious people, with its countless factories, its warehouses bursting with every fabric that goes to clothe, its graneries filled with every cereal, and its farms and ranches stocked with every animal to feed mankind, measured in true values it is richer than ever in its history, and should be enjoying an era of unparalleled prosperity.

The things that supply the necessities and comforts of men, the houses that shelter, the products that feed and clothe them are as valuable today as they were 10 or 100 years ago, and will be as valuable 10 or 100 years hence. Yet we are told that because the thing we attempt to measure value with, the dollar, has greatly increased in purchasing power, resulting from an increased demand for gold and consequently rapid credit contraction; this monetary unit, though of little intrinsic value, will exchange in the aggregate for twice as much of these essential things as it would 7 or 8 years ago, and therefore, we have lost nearly half of our national wealth.

It would be just as reasonable to say that the foot having expanded until it covers 24 inches, because still called a foot, the Washington Monument has lost half its height, or that the gallon measure had expanded and increased its capacity to double, and as a result a reservoir had lost half its water.

What is it that has so bewitched and confused the people, resulting in mental anguish, unemployment, want and hunger, filling our asylums with insane, and driving many to suicide and crime in this El Dorado with bountiful plenty on every hand?

Let us diagnose the patient and find the seat of trouble. The monetary system of a country is to its economic welfare what the circulation of the blood is to the body. The gold in the gold dollar has but little real value, and as such means little, but its purchasing power resulting from the statutory fiat making it legal tender for all debts means much. We cannot hope to have sustained prosperity with our monetary unit, the dollar, uncontrolled, and at intervals running amuck, expanding and contracting in purchasing power.

Our monetary metal, gold, like every other commodity, fluctuates in value in response to the law of supply and demand, and as the statutory debt-paying medium, that fluctuation is accentuated by fear and hoarding, credit inflation and deflation. The effect of supply and demand on the purchasing power of our unstabilized gold dollar was vividly demonstrated as a result of the World War. During that war 42 countries in Europe ceased to use gold as money, and as we continued to use it as money, it flooded here until we had practically half the gold available for monetary purposes in all the world, and, under the law of supply and demand, gold cheapened until the gold dollar had but small purchasing power, and as its purchasing power declined, the prices of property in the same ratio went up, and credit, uncontrolled, rapidly inflated as a result of the people being obsessed with the idea that prices would continue to rise; that is, that the purchasing power of the dollar would continue to decline, there being no standard for measuring the purchasing power of the dollar. Stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar and you stabilize credit.

The working of our present unstabilized gold dollar can be aptly illustrated by two buckets attached to the two ends of a chain which passes over a pulley as in a well, and as one bucket goes up the other bucket goes down. Let one of these buckets represent the commodity gold—that is, the gold dollar—and the other bucket represent all property, buildings, homes, all products, and commodities that supply the necessities and comforts of the people, as well as the lands that produce them. Now, as the purchasing power of the unstabilized gold dollar decreased during and for several years after the World War, the bucket representing the commodity gold—that is, the gold dollar—went down in price or purchasing power, and the price of all things in the property bucket in the same ratio of necessity went up, until we saw cotton sell for 42 cents a pound, cottonseed $80 a ton, and most any kind of a steer in excess of a hundred dollars, and other things in proportion. Some years after the World War, when the 42 countries that had abandoned gold as money attempted to return to the use of gold as money, the demand for it became great, and as a result its purchasing power shot up, which is the same thing as saying that the price of all property represented by the property bucket of necessity plunged down. So those who had gone into debt during this period of high prices or cheap dollars and mortgaged their homes, farms, and ranches, and the cities and towns, the school and road districts that had voted bonds and exchanged them for 30-cent purchasing power dollars, compared with the present high purchasing power of the dollar, are now being called upon to pay several times in real value for what they received.

Our monetary unit, the dollar, uncontrolled as it is in purchasing power, is in no sense a measure of value. Properly stabilized in purchasing power, it would be a measure of value, as the lineal foot is a measure of length, or the pound is a measure of weight, or the cubic foot is a unit measure of volume. You can no more measure volume by a unit of weight, such as the pound, than you can measure value by the gold dollar, which is a fixed unit of weight. Before the dollar can be used as a unit to measure value, it must be stabilized in purchasing power by taking the mean or average price of a large number of commodities which supply the necessities and comforts of the people over any normally prosperous period, such as the year 1926, which average price is termed the "wholesale commodity price level." This means that while the price of various commodities may go up and down in response to supply and demand, yet when you take the price of the whole number of commodities used in determining the purchasing power of the dollar, its purchasing power must be kept in harmony with the wholesale commodity price level of that year which is taken as a standard. So that if one borrowed a thousand dollars, he will pay back when it falls due, whether it be 1 or 20 years later, a thousand dollars having the same purchasing power as the $1,000 he borrowed.

There are two kinds of inflation—credit inflation and currency inflation. We hear much about currency inflation, but little about credit inflation, and yet the latter is by far the more treacherous. Both uncontrolled work great injustices. Uncontrolled credit inflation has the effect of finally transferring the property of the great producing debtor class to the comparatively small opulent nonproducing money-lending creditor class, causing business stagnation and unemployment and leaving the former penniless and destitute. On the other hand, uncontrolled currency inflation has the effect of unjustly taking from the creditor class and giving to the debtor class. As credit uncontrolled inflates, the purchasing power of the dollar lessens, prices rise, and the owners of property, those who produce things on farms and in factories, borrow money and expand their operations. Home owners and others, as the result of rising prices and profits, are incited to borrow on their homes and other property and invest in stocks and what not. Cities and towns, school and road districts, vote bonds and exchange them for cheap purchasing power dollars. And then this inflated balloon like uncontrolled credit, deflates, contracts, and as it deflates fear and panic seize the people, and up shoots the purchasing power of the dollar, and those who borrowed are called upon to pay back in real values two and three times what they borrowed. Producers are ruined, factories close, and unemployment mounts.

Our dollar unstabilized in purchasing power is like a ship drifting without compass and rudder and its crew panic-stricken in constant fear of disaster.

If justice is to be done to both debtor and creditor classes and the country kept on an even keel of sustained prosperity, the dollar must be made a dependable measure of value.

Some 4 years ago Sweden, enmeshed in economic ruin, turned to a controlled currency, and as if by magic her financial skys cleared, and as a result, today, she is enjoying a prosperity unparalleled in her history. While shrewd old England, with her "sterlingaria", guided by what is known as the "economist index", is fighting to reach the same goal.

Under the mechanics of the bill introduced by me to accomplish this vital reform, the purchasing power of the dollar, as shown by the wholesale commodity price level for the year 1926, is taken as a standard, so that its purchasing power during that period is accepted as being at 100 percent, or par. Then, with this as a standard, this bill provides that whenever the purchasing power of the dollar is more than 2 percent above par, the stabilization board, provided for in the bill, and to consist of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, and the Comptroller of the Currency, shall uniformly reduce the rate of income taxes; or, if they deem best, suspend income taxes entirely, while issuing, if necessary, "stabilization coin certificates" and paying all governmental expenses and obligations as they fall due until the purchasing power of the dollar returns to par; and should at any time the purchasing power of the dollar contract and thereby fall as much as 2 percent below par, the Secretary of the Treasury, acting on behalf of the currency stabilization board, is required to withdraw currency from circulation by gradually and uniformly increasing the income-tax rate until the purchasing power of the dollar is restored to par. This bill further provides that the gold dollar shall contain 11.61 grains of fine gold, and that the silver dollar shall contain 185.625 grains of fine silver. This would establish a ratio of 16 to 1 in the coinage of the two metals. Thus, by restoring silver as money and thereby broadening the metallic base and reducing the number of grains in the gold dollar by half, the Secretary of the Treasury would at all times be in possession of ample redemption metal so that he could expand the currency in circulation sufficiently to keep the purchasing power of the dollar at par with the 1926 wholesale commodity price level.

This bill further provides that all currency certificates of every description now outstanding shall be called in as rapidly as possible and replaced by stabilization coin certificates, which are to be redeemable in either gold or silver at the option of the currency stabilization board. But, with the exception of fractional parts of the silver dollar, neither gold nor silver shall be converted into monetary coin, and that no stabilization certificates shall be redeemable in quantities of less than $5,000.

Consumption is in proportion to employment and adequate wages, and when such conditions prevail as prevailed under the wholesale commodity price level of 1926 products can be sold for a profit, and then, and not until then, will demand keep pace with production and our imaginary nightmare of surpluses vanish. Under such conditions our standard of living will be raised and want and crime will become rare and panics things of the past.

Under the workings of this bill fair prices will be assured, and fair prices mean profits, and under such conditions an increase in income taxes is easily borne. There are in excess of $27,000,000,000 of Federal bonds outstanding which would gradually be paid off and an end brought to the folly of the Federal Government issuing bonds and longer lending its credit to private corporations that they might use that credit to tax the people to their profit. For why should the people be taxed to use their own credit?

There are two classes to whom we pay tribute to borrow on our own credit. On the one hand the banking corporations and on the other hand the nonbanking institutions and individuals, and between them practically equal amounts.

Before the use of paper currency, which consists of promissory notes based upon the credit of all the people, it was different. In that day and time when a government had to borrow money of the goldsmiths and silversmiths, the then bankers, or if it borrowed from individuals, it did so by giving its promissory notes, called bonds, in exchange for gold and silver coin. Today when this Government borrows it does not receive gold and silver coins but merely legal tender, promissory notes, or tokens of its own credit and pays tribute to a privately owned institution for the privilege of using its own promissory notes or credit tokens. To illustrate by putting it in a simplified form, if the Government wishes to borrow a billion dollars, the Treasurer of the United States, the agent of the people, orders its Bureau of Engraving and Printing to print two classes of promissory notes, both of which he signs. One set is called currency and draws no interest and by statute is made legal tender. The other set is tax exempt and draws interest, say 4 percent, called bonds. Both sets of these promissory notes being signed by their agent are based upon the credit of all the people.

Stripped of red tape, what the Treasurer in effect then does is to take these two sets of promissory notes, of a billion dollars each, across the street to a privately owned institution, called a Federal Reserve bank, and has it to make a book notation and then takes both sets of notes over to the Treasury and goes to taxing the people $40,000,000 annually and turns it over to this privately owned institution, called a Federal Reserve bank, as a pure gift.

On the other hand, let us look at the resulting effect when the Government borrows its own credit tokens from individuals and nonbanking corporations. Keep in mind paper currency is nothing more nor less than legal tender promissory notes, that do not draw interest, signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, obligating the people to pay them in monetary metal. The Secretary of the Treasury, being in need of funds or legal-tender notes, has printed a billion dollars of promissory notes, called bonds, tax exempt, and drawing 4-percent interest, and signs them, binding every man, woman, and child in the Nation to pay them. He then goes with these tax-exempt promissory notes, called bonds, drawing 4-percent interest to nonbanking institutions and individuals who hold the Government's legal-tender promissory notes that are taxable, and draw no interest, and they gladly exchange them for the billion dollars of bond promissory notes which draw interest and are tax exempt. And the people are taxed forty million a year to pay this interest.

And thus the vicious circle goes round and round. The more interest-bearing tax-exempt bonds the less currency for industry, the higher the purchasing power of the dollar, the less taxes to be paid by, and the more tribute to be paid to the creditor class. For the producing debtor class it means lower prices and higher taxes. You cannot blame the money changers for taking advantage of a law that invites them to do such a thing. It is but natural for them to do so. But what of us, the Representatives of the people, to permit such a law? When necessary to meet the obligations of the Government, why not permit the Secretary of the Treasury to issue legal tender, taxable, noninterest-bearing promissory notes—that is, paper currency—and use the income tax as a lever to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar on the wholesale commodity price level of 1926, which is practically the same as was its purchasing power as shown by the wholesale commodity price level during the period from 1917 to 1929, when the great bulk of the indebtedness of the people was contracted.

If an individual were to do such a thing as this that the Government does, he would promptly be tried and convicted of insanity and a guardian appointed to look after his affairs, and yet that is the way we, as trustees, are looking after the affairs of the people.

"To coin money"—that is, to make money—"and to regulate the value thereof"—that is, to adjust and stabilize the value thereof—is a solemn demand of Congress by the Constitution. In the manner of the exercise of that power largely depends the happiness and prosperity of the people.

"To regulate the value of money"—that is, to cause it to reflect prices in response to the exchange values of supply and demand in relation to the purchasing power of the monetary unit, the dollar, as shown by the wholesale commodity price level covering the period taken as a standard. This responsibility Congress has shirked and is permitting a small group of Napoleonic money changers to manipulate it. And today, when the people in their anguish and distress are appealing to us to be delivered from their debt-ensnared bondage, we hear the inspired cry, "Don't tinker with the currency." And it comes from the lips of some who are honest but ignorant, and then from the lips of others who know better but are ever zealous to do the will and "crook the hinged knee" to the lords of Mammon. This cry is meant to intimidate and deter you from doing your duty. By it they mean, "do not regulate the value of money", do not stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar", for that would end its manipulation and dethrone its manipulators and reclaim to the Representatives of the people a most vital constitutional right. What think you of a shepherd that would surrender his guardianship over his flock to a pack of hungry wolves? What think you of a Congress, in violation of the Constitution, surrendering its right "to regulate the value of money" in the interest of the people and turning it over to a small aggregation of money barons that they might manipulate it to serve their greed?

By inflating and deflating credit and thereby decreasing and increasing the purchasing power of the dollar, they have garnered unto themselves the wealth of the country. And this they have been enabled to do by embezzling congressional power and tinkering with the currency. Drunk upon this embezzled power, is it any wonder that they fight and spread propaganda through press and air to retain control of the financial heart of the Nation? Others unlawfully tinker with the currency, but you, and you alone, are annointed by the Constitution to regulate the value of the currency, and I beg of you, my colleagues, not to be longer recreant in performing that duty.

Let us heed not those truculent tongues that shout "Don't tinker with the currency." It is but the voice of Mammon echoing down the centuries; the prayer of those who worship at the shrine of the golden calf. Today they feast with Belshazzar, but tomorrow—well, the conditions today in this country are similar to those that existed in France and Russia preceding the world's two most frightful revolutions. Incognito, we have in America Robespierres, Lenins, and Stalins, impatient to lead the storm. God grant this Congress the wisdom and courage to act before it is too late. [Applause.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is a distinguished member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Will he tell us what opportunity we may have to vote on the bill which the gentleman has so ably discussed?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. If it is in my power and in the power of the majority of that committee, I think the gentleman will have a chance at this session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 66, which I send to the desk, be read by the Clerk in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the resolution.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 66

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by order or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

"SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of such State."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, it is well settled by decisions of the United States Supreme Court going back to the earliest days of the Union that neither the States, on the one hand, nor the Federal Government, on the other, can tax the means and instrumentalities employed by each other in carrying on the functions of government.

The earliest decision in point is that of McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316), decided in 1819, in which the Court, speaking through the great Chief Justice Marshall, held that the State of Maryland was without power under the Constitution to tax the notes issued by the Bank of the United States. It was in connection with this decision that the Chief Justice uttered his famous and often-quoted remark that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy."

Ten years later, in the case of Weston v. The City Council of Charleston (2 Pet. 449), the Court held that the City Council of Charleston, S. C., was without power to tax securities issued by the United States. Chief Justice Marshall also wrote the opinion in that case.

In other cases the Federal Government has been restrained from taxing State and municipal bonds. See U. S. v. Railroad (17 Wallace 322); Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429); and Metcalf & Eddy v. Mitchell (269 U. S. 514).

Thus, while the framers of the Constitution made no provision therein prohibiting one sovereignty from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the other, the Supreme Court has read such an inhibition into the fundamental law of the land. Speaking of this matter in the case of Collector v. Day (11 Wallace 113), decided in 1870, the Court said:

It is admitted that there is no express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the general Government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the States, nor is there any prohibiting the States from taxing the means and instrumentalities of that Government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication, and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation; as any government, whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government.

As a consequence of the decisions to which I have just referred, all State and municipal securities are exempt from Federal taxation, and all Federal securities are exempt from State and municipal taxation. Moreover, in order to put all governmental issues upon an equal footing, as well as for the purpose of securing the advantage of lower interest payments, the States and the Federal Government generally have exempted their own bonds from their own taxes. In the case of the Federal Government, some securities are issued on a wholly tax-exempt basis, while in the case of others the income therefrom is exempt from the normal income tax but not the surtax.

The total interest-bearing indebtedness of the Federal, State, and local Governments is estimated to be approximately $47,600,000,000 at this time. The annual interest charge on this amount is estimated to be approximately $1,770,000,000. The larger part of this latter sum is entirely free from Federal and State income taxes, although it is true that some of the Federal bonds are subject to surtaxes. Also, practically all of the bonds are subject to estate and inheritance taxes, and to the income tax insofar as a profit is realized upon the sale thereof.

Mr. Parker, chief of staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, has furnished me some interesting data. On January 1, 1935, the total interest-bearing debt of the United States, outstanding, amounted to $27,944,037,950, of which amount $14,010,962,150 was subject to surtax, and $13,933,075,800 was wholly tax exempt as to both income and surtax. It appears that the average annual interest charge on this Federal debt will be approximately $835,000,000, indicating an average interest rate of slightly more than 3 percent.

From incomplete data available, the staff of the joint committee estimates the present State and local indebtedness to be about $19,680,000,000. The annual interest charge on this sum is probably not less than $935,000,000, indicating an average interest rate of 4¾ percent.

It has already been pointed out that our present annual interest charge on the total Federal, State, and local debt will amount to approximately $1,770,000,000. In 1932 this interest charge amounted to considerably less—probably to about $1,447,000,000. Nineteen hundred and thirty-two is the latest year on which we have complete income-tax statistics, and in this year we can account for the following amounts of wholly or partially tax-exempt interest on the income-tax returns:

|---|---|
| 1. Individuals with net income of $5,000 and over: | |
| Interest on State and local bonds | $155,226,524 |
| Interest on wholly exempt United States bonds | 47,457,511 |
| Interest on partially exempt United States bonds (including farm-loan bonds) | 34,881,888 |
| Subtotal | 237,565,923 |
| 2. Corporations—all: Interest on Federal, State, and municipal bonds | 554,249,951 |
| 3. Individuals with $5,000 gross but no net income: Interest on partially exempt Government bonds | 4,234,789 |
| Grand total | 796,050,663 |

It is apparent, therefore, that the actual figures on the 1932 income-tax returns account for only $796,050,663 out of a total of probably $1,447,000,000 of wholly or partially tax-exempt interest paid out in that year. While we can account for some of this difference of $651,000,000 as going to the individuals with net incomes of less than $5,000, to tax-exempt corporations, and to foreign individuals and corporations, it must be admitted that the larger portion of the difference probably is the result of the tax-exempt interest not being reported on the returns. However, the figures seem sufficiently complete to form a basis for estimates.

It is believed from the figures already given that corporations hold about 65 percent of the total of Federal, State, and local obligations.

The wholly and partially tax-exempt interest reported by individuals with net incomes of over $5,000 has been computed for the years 1924, 1927, 1929, 1930, and 1932. This interest has been broken up into two groups: (1) United States securities and Federal farm-loan bonds; and (2) State and local obligations. The interest derived from each of these groups has been further classified so as to show the amount received in each case by individuals with net incomes of over $5,000 and not over $25,000, by individuals with net incomes of over $25,000 but not over $100,000, and by individuals with net incomes of over $100,000. These facts are shown in the following five tables covering, respectively, the 5 years already named:

Wholly and partially tax-exempt interest reported by individuals with net incomes of over $5,000, by net-income classes

The following facts may readily be noted from the above tables:

First. The interest received, and hence the amount of Federal securities held, by all our individual taxpayers with net incomes of over $5,000 has steadily declined. In 1924 the interest received amounted to about one hundred and twenty million; in 1927, to about one hundred and fifteen million; in 1929, to about one hundred million; in 1930 to about eighty-nine million; and in 1932, to about eighty-two million; a decline of 32 percent from 1924 to 1932.

Second. The interest received, and hence the amount of State and local obligations held, by all our individual taxpayers with net incomes of over $5,000 has somewhat increased. In 1924 the interest received amounted to about one hundred and nineteen million; in 1927, to about one hundred and fifty-two million; in 1929, to about one hundred and seventy million; in 1930, to about one hundred and seventy-three million; and in 1932, to about one hundred and fifty-five million; an increase of 31 percent from 1924 to 1932.

Third. The class of taxpayers with net incomes of from $5,000 to $25,000 do not find the Federal bonds unattractive. In 1924, 65 percent of their interest was received from such bonds and 35 percent from State and local bonds, while in 1932 the Federal interest received amounted to 46 percent and the State and local interest to 54 percent.

Fourth. In the case of the middle class of taxpayers with net incomes between $25,000 and $100,000, the proportion of Federal to State and local interest received is much less than in the smaller class and the shift to State and local investment greater. For instance, in 1924, of the total interest received by this class, 48 percent came from Federal securities and 52 percent from State and local obligations, while in 1932, 30 percent came from the former source and 70 percent from the latter.

Fifth. In the case of the wealthy taxpayers with net incomes of over $100,000, the unattractiveness of the Federal issues becomes even more pronounced and the shift to State and local issues still greater. In 1924 this class received 42 percent of their total interest from Federal securities and 58 percent from State and local obligations. In 1932, however, 26 percent came from Federal sources and 74 percent from State and local sources.

It is Mr. Parker's conclusion, from the above facts, that the small taxpayer finds Federal bonds quite as attractive as State and local bonds, because the greater security offered by the former offsets the higher interest rate of the latter. In the case of the larger taxpayers, however, we are forced to the conclusion that State and local issues are preferred over Federal issues, not because this class of taxpayers desire less security, but because the State and local issues are entirely free from surtax while the majority of the Federal bonds are subject to such tax.

What additional revenue could be secured by subjecting all this interest on the public debt to tax? Based on the data available and the existing tax rates, we believe the maximum revenue which the Federal Government could obtain would not exceed $180,000,000 annually. Of this amount, about $100,000,000 would come from individuals and about $80,000,000 from corporations.

The natural result of this exemption of Federal, State, and municipal bonds from taxation is to narrow the tax base and thereby shift the burden of taxation from the wealthy, who are best able to bear it, to the great masses of our population who have no funds to invest in such securities.

The continued issuance of tax-free securities whereby persons with large funds to invest are enabled to escape all taxation is an unwholesome and shameful feature of our governmental system. While the wage earner and the salaried man will pay an income tax to the Federal Government on the 15th day of March, many a person of means will take much delight over the fact that he does not even have to file a return, although his income may run into millions of dollars. Such a situation should never be permitted to exist in a free country.

I have introduced a joint resolution—House Joint Resolution 66—proposing an amendment to the Constitution to do away with the tax-exemption feature of all future issues of Federal, State, and municipal obligations. Among constitutional lawyers, the weight of opinion seems to be that a constitutional amendment is necessary for this purpose, although some contend that the sixteenth amendment already gives Congress this power.

I cannot agree with this latter position. In the first place, the sixteenth amendment was not proposed for the purpose of extending the Federal taxing power, since Congress already had the power to levy a tax on incomes. On the contrary, its sole purpose was to obviate the necessity of apportioning the income tax among the several States according to population, as is required of all direct taxes imposed by the Federal Government. In several cases construing the sixteenth amendment, the Supreme Court has taken this view—see, for example, Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (240 U. S. 1); Evans v. Gore (253 U. S. 245). Moreover, it is inconceivable that the States would have ratified the amendment if they had believed that it gave the Federal Government the right to tax State bonds without giving them an equal right to tax Federal bonds.

In view of the apprehension raised by the Supreme Court in the Day case regarding the destruction of one sovereignty by the other through taxation, I should, perhaps, point out that under my proposed amendment the Federal Government could not tax State bonds at a higher rate than it taxed its own. The same limitation would be imposed on the States as regards Federal bonds. Thus there would be no ground for fearing that one would tax the other out of existence.

No one, I think, will deny that the exemption of governmental securities from taxation is a vicious evil which never should have been allowed to gain a foothold. Since it favors the rich as against the poor, it tends to undermine the faith of the people in their Government and gives rise to class feeling. This country was founded upon the principle of equal rights for all and special privileges for none, yet language has been read into the Constitution which, though not intended for that purpose, gives one class of our citizens a privilege which others, more worthy, are unable to enjoy. We should not forget that it was class privileges and exemptions which helped to bring about the French Revolution.

It must be obvious that when one group of our people can take their money and invest it in tax-free securities, their share of the tax burden must be borne by others. I can make this point a little clearer, perhaps, by using the example of tax-exempt real estate.

Suppose in a city the tax burden is $1,000,000 and the value of the property subject to taxation is $100,000,000. The tax is then distributed over the owners of taxable property on the basis of $1 for each $100. However, every time any property comes into the hands of tax-exempt organizations, such as churches, schools, colleges, and so forth, the amount of property subject to taxation is reduced, and in order to secure the same amount of revenue as before the rate of tax on the remaining property holders must be increased.

The same situation occurs when the wealthy invest their fortunes in tax-exempt securities. Their wealth is no longer taxable, and the tax that they formerly paid must necessarily fall on the less fortunate classes and be borne by them in addition to the great burden which they already bear.

In times like the present, when the calls upon the Government are so great and when revenues are being sought from every possible source, there is all the more reason for requiring this great tax-free reservoir of wealth to contribute its fair share of the general tax assessment. As it is, we have this paradoxical situation: The more the public debt is increased in meeting the growing cost of government, the more the wealthy are enabled to escape taxation; and as the necessity for tax revenues becomes greater, the property subject to taxation becomes less and less.

The indefinite continuance of the present system is not only unfair to the smaller taxpayer, but it will seriously endanger the revenues of the Federal Government, and of the States and municipalities as well.

While under my proposed constitutional amendment, all future issues of governmental securities would be subject to tax, those now outstanding would continue to be exempt. They have been issued on that basis, and of course it would be unfair to change the terms of the contract at this time. However, new bonds are being issued by the billions, particularly by the Federal Government, and all outstanding issues must some day be retired or reissued. Many are of short-term maturity. Thus, although the revenue from the taxation of these securities would be comparatively small at first, it would constantly increase.

The question is often asked, "How would the States benefit by the adoption of the proposed amendment?" The answer is quite obvious. They would benefit to the extent of being able to tax some $30,000,000,000 of Federal bonds, while subjecting less than $20,000,000,000 of their own bonds to Federal tax. Moreover, they could abandon the practice of exempting their own bonds from their own taxes, and thereby expand the property subject to State taxes by a total of approximately $50,000,000,000. Again, I should point out that this amount would not immediately become subject to taxation, but only as new bonds are issued and outstanding bonds are reissued. Even then, the States would have the advantage over the Federal Government, since the latter is issuing bonds at much the faster rate.

In spite of the apparent unfairness of the present tax exemption, there are many who are opposed to permitting the taxation of governmental securities on the ground that a higher interest rate would then have to be paid which would require additional taxes. The answer, of course, is that even if this be so, the additional taxes will be forthcoming from the great amount of wealth which would be made subject to taxation, and at the same time the tax burden would be distributed among the people in proportion to their ability to pay it.

In any event, it does not necessarily follow that a higher rate of interest will have to be paid in case governmental securities are made taxable. Government bonds, both Federal and State, are the safest form of investment, and will be in demand regardless of the tax feature. They commanded a premium before the income tax was ever enacted, and they will continue to do so.

It is generally conceded that even if increased-interest payments did become necessary, the rate probably would not be increased more than one-half of 1 percent. In return for this increase in interest payments, the Federal and State Governments would be able to tax the whole amount of the interest paid, which is now free of tax. Thus, if the Federal Government were compelled to increase the interest rate on its wholly tax-exempt First Liberty bonds from 3½ to 4 percent, it would be able to subject the entire 4-percent interest payment to income tax.

In testifying before the Ways and Means Committee in 1922, Dr. Edwin R. A. Seligman, of Columbia University, an acknowledged expert on taxation, made an interesting analysis of this phase of the problem of tax-exempt securities. By an intricate method of calculation, he estimated that if the then outstanding $30,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities were made subject to Federal income tax, the revenues would be increased by some $300,000,000. From this sum, he deducted the additional one-half of 1 percent additional interest charge on the $20,000,000,000 of Federal bonds then outstanding, amounting to $100,000,000. He thereby arrived at a net gain of $200,000,000 to the Federal Government.

While the figures used by Dr. Seligman are somewhat out-of-date at this time, they indicate in a general way that the Government would still be much to the good by abolishing the present exemption.

I do not have any figures showing the possible net benefit to the States, but it can be assumed that they also would gain more in revenue than they would lose in increased interest payments, if any. It would, of course, cost the States nothing in the way of increased interest charges to be able to tax the income received by their citizens from Federal bonds.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOLEY). The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts 10 additional minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. On May 3, 1922, after extensive hearings upon the subject, the Ways and Means Committee reported to the House a joint resolution, of which mine is an exact duplicate, providing for the submission to the States of a proposed constitutional amendment, as follows:

SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by order or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of such State.

In its report accompanying the joint resolution the Committee on Ways and Means gave the following reasons for abolishing the system of tax-free securities:

(1) A large portion of property escapes taxation, thereby causing great loss of revenue.
(2) It violates the ability, principle of taxation, and unfairly discriminates between taxpayers.
(3) It impedes private financing.
(4) It discourages investment in new enterprises.
(5) It encourages extravagances of governmental agencies.
(6) It grants a private subsidy to certain interests.
(7) By withdrawing money from private enterprises it increases the rate of interest required for all enterprises not carried on by the Government and thereby adds to the cost of living.
(8) It creates social unrest; * * *.

Referring to the economics of the present tax exemption, the committee's report further states:

That some benefit is derived in certain directions by the issue of tax-exempt securities drawing a lower rate of interest is not to be denied, but the majority of the committee are satisfied that these benefits are slight compared to the injury inflicted by the present plan.

* * * * * * *

There is no doubt also that the direct advantage resulting from the issue of a tax-exempt bond to the governmental entity issuing it is usually much exaggerated.

As regards the social factors involved in the present tax exemption, the report of the committee has this to say:

In addition to these economic evils, tax exemptions create a grave danger to our social system and form of government. No principle of taxation is more generally accepted today than that taxes should as a rule be levied in accordance with ability to pay, and all citizens should pay in the same manner. The present condition violates every rule based upon these principles, and while we seek to create, as far as possible, equality in taxation, we find that the Constitution makes it impossible. There should be no privileged class under our Government, but a special privilege is granted to those who invest in tax-exempt securities. This situation is the ground of just complaint and creates discontent and prejudice against people of large means who use a lawful method to lessen their taxes. * * *

On January 23, 1923, the proposed amendment was approved by the House of Representatives by a vote of 223 to 101, which was well over the two-thirds majority required in the case of all constitutional amendments. The resolution then went to the Senate, where it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee held extensive hearings on the proposed amendment, but failed to report the resolution to the Senate.

At the beginning of the Sixty-eighth Congress the Ways and Means Committee again reported the proposed amendment to the House, but this time it failed to receive the two-thirds majority necessary for its passage, the vote being 247 in favor to 133 against, with 51 Members not voting.

Since the Sixty-eighth Congress the matter has not been considered by either the House or Senate. However, it is worthy of note that in the Seventy-third Congress the Senate Judiciary Committee, which in the Sixty-seventh Congress prevented action on the proposed amendment, reported to that body Senate Joint Resolution 7, which is identical with the resolution passed by the House in 1923.

In support of the proposed amendment the Senate Judiciary Committee advanced practically the same arguments as are found in the Ways and Means Committee's report in 1922 and 1923. While the other body took no action on the proposed amendment at the last session of Congress, it is encouraging to know that there is strong sentiment in the other body favorable to the discontinuance of further issues of tax-exempt securities.

The Treasury Department for many years has advocated a constitutional amendment permitting the taxing of future issues of Federal and State bonds. In his annual report for the fiscal year 1919 the then Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. CARTER GLASS, now a distinguished Member of the other body, said:

It is intolerable that taxpayers should be allowed by purchase of tax-exempt securities, not only to obtain exemption with respect to the income derived therefrom but to reduce the supertaxes upon their other income and to have the supertaxes upon their other income determined upon the assumption, contrary to fact, that they are not in possession of income derived from State and municipal bonds.

Secretary Mellon, although himself reputed to be one of the world's richest men, strongly urged the abolition of tax-exempt securities. Under date of April 30, 1921, he addressed a letter to the then Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Fordney, in which he said in part:

I suggest for the consideration of Congress that it may also be advisable to take action by statute or by constitutional amendment, where necessary, to restrict further issues of tax-exempt securities. It is now the policy of the Federal Government not to issue its own obligations with exemptions from Federal surtaxes and profits taxes, but States and municipalities are issuing fully tax-exempt securities in great volume. It is estimated that there are outstanding, perhaps, $10,000,000,000 of fully tax-exempt securities. The existence of this mass of exempt securities constitutes an economic evil of the first magnitude. The continued issue of tax-exempt securities encourages the growth of public indebtedness and tends to divert capital from productive enterprises. Even though the exemptions of outstanding securities cannot be disturbed, it is important that future issues be controlled or prohibited by mutual consent of the State and Federal Governments.

The Secretary's reference to the $10,000,000,000 in bonds then wholly tax exempt as being "an economic evil of the first magnitude" is of particular significance in view of the fact that the present wholly tax-exempt issues are probably three times that amount.

Under date of September 23, 1921, the Secretary of the Treasury addressed a letter to our former colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. McFadden, in which he said:

The issue of tax-exempt securities has a direct tendency to make the graduated Federal surtaxes ineffective and nonproductive, because it enables taxpayers subject to surtaxes to reduce the amount of their taxable income by investing it in such securities; and at the same time the result is that a very large class of capital investments escape their just share of taxation.

The Secretary here raised a point which is particularly applicable to the present time, when the maximum income-tax rates reach 63 percent. No man is going to pay such taxes if he can help it, and all he has to do is to invest his fortune in State bonds to escape all Federal tax. We wonder why the income tax is not more productive, particularly in the higher brackets, but the answer is readily available.

In his message to Congress of December 6, 1921, President Harding added his endorsement of the proposal to abolish tax-exempt securities, saying:

Many of us belong to that school of thought which is hesitant about altering the fundamental law. I think our tax problems, the tendency of wealth to seek nontaxable investment, and the menacing increase of public debt—Federal, State, and municipal—all justify a proposal to change the Constitution so as to end the issue of nontaxable bonds. No action can change the status of the many billions outstanding, but we can guard against future encouragement of capital's paralysis, while a halt in the growth of public indebtedness would be beneficial throughout our whole land.

President Coolidge voiced a similar view when in his message to Congress on December 6, 1923, he said:

Another reform which is urgent in our fiscal system is the abolition of the right to issue tax-exempt securities. The existing system not only permits a large amount of the wealth of the Nation to escape its just burden but acts as a continual stimulant to municipal extravagance. This should be prohibited by constitutional amendment. All the wealth of the Nation ought to contribute its fair share of the expenses of the Nation.

Although following the defeat of the proposal by the House in 1924, Congress has taken no further action, the Treasury Department has continued to adhere to its position favoring the elimination of tax-exempt bonds. In the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee held in connection with the 1926 tax revision, the views of the Department are thus reiterated:

Looking at the proposition logically, there is no reason for the existence of tax-exempt securities. There ought to be no refuge to which the wealthy man can go and avoid income taxes at times when the Federal Government needs the money. A constitutional amendment to make these securities taxable should be passed. The Treasury has consistently been the advocate of such reform.

The matter was referred to again in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1927, where the following statement is made:

Taking the long-time view of the situation, I believe that the enactment of such a constitutional amendment is desirable, for I consider it inconsistent with our principles of democratic government that our laws be so framed as to permit any class of our citizens to escape their just obligations.

Again, in his annual report for 1930 the Secretary of the Treasury called the attention of Congress to the fact that the Department had previously—

Earnestly recommended the adoption of a constitutional amendment permitting the Federal and State Governments, respectively, to tax securities to be issued in the future.

The present Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Henry Morgenthau, has joined his predecessors in advocating the adoption of a constitutional amendment to do away with tax-exempt securities. Only last year he made the following statement upon the subject:

The Treasury Department favors as a permanent policy the elimination of the exemption from Federal income tax now accorded to the interest on Federal, State, and municipal securities, insofar as future issues of such securities are concerned.

I consider it very important that when the exemption is eliminated it should be eliminated not only in respect to future issues of Federal securities, but in respect to future issues of State and municipal securities as well. The enactment of legislation requiring Federal obligations to be issued in the future on a fully taxable basis, in competition with wholly tax-exempt securities originating elsewhere, would be likely to react unfavorably on the market for Federal securities, to increase the cost of the Government's borrowing, and to complicate our financing operations.

I am advised that a constitutional amendment would be required to enable the Federal Government to tax the interest on State and municipal securities. In my judgment, such an amendment should be drawn on a reciprocal basis; the States should be permitted to tax the income from Federal securities and the Federal Government to tax the income from State and municipal securities. I favor such an amendment.

The amendment which I have proposed meets these requirements laid down by the Secretary. In fact, it was originally drafted in 1922 in cooperation with the Treasury Department.

You will thus see that there is absolutely nothing partisan in the suggestion I am offering. This is a historical fact from 1922 on down, or even before that. Hon. CARTER GLASS, in 1919, advocated it, and from that time on this has been advocated by the Treasury.

Under date of January 12, I addressed a letter to the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary requesting that a hearing be held upon my joint resolution, and on the 15th I received from him a very courteous reply in which he said that he would bring the matter to the attention of the committee. I therefore expect the subject to be given early consideration, in order that the Congress may have a full understanding of the various phases of this problem.

The continued growth of tax-exempt securities presents not only a serious economic question but a grave social problem as well. From the standpoint of the smaller taxpayers, the present system is both indefensible and inequitable. From the standpoint of the Federal and State Governments, it constitutes a serious threat to the revenues. The longer that consideration of the subject is delayed, the less property there is subject to taxation and the more the tax burden is shifted from the rich to the poor.

The United States today is the only major country in which Government securities can be issued on a tax-exempt basis. With at least two recent Presidents definitely committed to the proposition of doing away with this exemption, and with the financial agency of the Government on record over a long period of years as being earnestly in favor of the proposal, I urge upon the Congress the desirability of submitting to the States at the earliest possible moment the amendment which is embodied in House Joint Resolution 66 now pending before the Judiciary Committee. If I correctly judge the sentiment of the House, I feel sure that if the amendment is reported it will receive well over the two-thirds majority necessary for its passage. [Applause.]

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does the gentleman know whether the Supreme Court of the United States, since the adoption of the sixteenth amendment, has passed upon the question whether Congress has power under that amendment to tax the income from securities of States and their municipal subdivisions?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am unable to definitely answer the question, but it is my impression that the question has never been before the Supreme Court since the sixteenth amendment was adopted.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. So there is a possibility that we could save delay if, in addition to proposing to the States an amendment to the Constitution, we should adopt a statutory change in our income-tax law?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have thought of the statutory change myself, but in view of the absolute record that a constitutional amendment must be adopted, I think it would be very unfortunate to delay an effort for a constitutional amendment by adopting statutory regulations and then having it go to the Supreme Court and have the Court bear out its previous decisions.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I would not suggest any such delay. As a matter of fact, I offered a resolution 2 years ago proposing a constitutional amendment. I introduced one this year also; but 2 years ago, in addition to introducing a resolution for a constitutional amendment, I offered a bill which, if enacted, would reach this source of income by statutory law if it were sustained by the courts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the gentleman will agree with me that if we skate on as thin ice as the possibility of a new statute, it would undoubtedly immediately go to the Court, and might involve us in all kinds of trouble for the time being.

I wish to say further, however, I agree there is that possibility. Nevertheless, in view of all the studies that have been made by the Treasury Department, and from the opinions of our Presidents, and so on, I think it would be better for us to go about it in the right and proper manner. There are now before the Ways and Means Committee several bills covering the very idea which the gentleman mentions, and possibly we may come to their consideration.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I would not suggest anything that would make for delay, but I thought we might shoot this fellow by using both barrels of the gun.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is good.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I also thought, and still think, that there is nothing in the Constitution preventing Congress, by statute, from authorizing the States to tax interest income from Federal securities.

Mr. TREADWAY. The only difficulty would be muddying the waters a little bit, with interest in the subject matter defeated.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will not the gentleman let me buttress his argument by reading a very brief excerpt from that debate in 1922?

Mr. TREADWAY. Would not the gentleman from Massachusetts be kind enough to insert it as part of his remarks?

Mr. GIFFORD. It is brief; I should like to read it now as part of the general discussion.

Mr. TREADWAY. Very well.

Mr. GIFFORD. I read:

The National Government, after the adoption of this amendment, will probably not issue any more bonds in large quantities for a good many more years to come. The States, counties, and municipalities will continue issuing bonds, the income from which the Federal Government can tax without the States being able to collect a tax in anything like a proportionate amount on Federal bonds. Few States have an income-tax law. Counties, districts, and cities probably can never have an income-tax law, and must bear the disadvantage of having their bonds taxed by the Federal Government without any corresponding benefit to them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts is the ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee. Would not the gentleman from New York yield him a little more time? There are a number of us who wish to ask questions of the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I understood my colleague to read a statement to the effect that very few bonds would be issued in the future. Was that sentence in there?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Who made that remark?

Mr. GIFFORD. I read it because of the irony of it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I join with the gentleman in that feature.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Ever since I have been here I have wanted to see some such resolution as this passed, that would remove the exemption from tax-exempt securities. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been in Congress for 22 years, I believe. Am I right?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. He has been a distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee for how many years?

Mr. TREADWAY. Seventeen, I think.

Mr. BLANTON. He is now the ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee; and if the minority were in power he would be the chairman of the committee; is not that so?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, the gentleman is making assumptions.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the operation of the regular seniority rules, that would be the case. Now, why is it that with so distinguished a Member on the Ways and Means Committee as the gentleman from Massachusetts in favor of a proper resolution to tax all tax-exempt securities, when Presidents have been in favor of it, why is it we cannot pass it here in Congress where 95 percent of the Members would vote for it? What is keeping it back every year?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to my friend from Texas to answer his own question; I cannot answer it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to allow the same thing to keep this bill from passing?

Mr. TREADWAY. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I am using every ability I have, mental and physical, to get it through.

Mr. BLANTON. Let us get after this business from both sides of the aisle and pass it this year.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman help me get it through?

Mr. BLANTON. In every way on God's earth the gentleman can think of.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman will yield further, ask the gentleman from Texas how he voted on it in 1922.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not want to embarrass the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no vote I ever cast will embarrass me. I have been against tax-exempt securities for 18 solid years. My friend is referring to the Green bill in 1923.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman from Texas voted against it that time.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I voted against the Green bill in 1923, but the gentleman from Cotuit does not know what he is talking about. That Green bill was a makeshift got up by Ogden Mills, whose family owned several hundred million dollars in tax-exempt securities, and it was approved by Andy Mellon who, with various members of his family, owned several hundred million dollars in tax-exempt securities, and the Green resolution would not have reached one single dollar of the income then being drawn by these multimillionaires. Naturally, I voted against it. And in voting against it, I had with me, voting as I did, such leading Democrats as Finis Garrett, of Tennessee, our majority leader; Jack Garner, who is now Vice President of the United States; Mr. Pou, then Chairman of the Committee on Rules; Mr. Buchanan, our present Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; Connally, Hayden, and Byrnes, who are now Senators; Mr. Doughton, our present Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee; Jones, Lanham, Mansfield, Rayburn, Sanders, Sumners, and other colleagues from Texas; Mr. McSwain, Mr. Oliver, Mr. Rankin, Mr. Lea, Mr. Steagall, Mr. Vinson of Georgia, and other very prominent Democrats.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. When the present Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, was a Member of the Senate, he introduced a resolution similar to that the gentleman is speaking of now. Does the gentleman know whether or not anything was done with it?

Mr. TREADWAY. I referred to what the Senate did in my remarks; and the gentleman will find it in the RECORD tomorrow. Action was taken in the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress.

Mr. CULKIN. That was the Hull resolution.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. FOCHT. Did the gentleman mention Pennsylvania in the course of his remarks?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; my colleague did.

Mr. FOCHT. In considering this resolution, has the gentleman contemplated what will ultimately result from the principle of double taxation? And is not that the reason for the opposition: Double taxation?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think if we could get rid of double taxation as between the Federal Government and the State governments, this would be a much better country in which to live; but at present it is hopeless to think we can accomplish that.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. My colleague has made a very splendid speech and I find myself in accord with many of his views, but I should like to ask him if it is not his opinion that in the final analysis removal of this wealth from taxation has resulted, especially in residential communities, in the poor little home owner having to bear an almost intolerable burden?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is absolutely correct; and I think I illustrated the case of the home owner in the example I gave of the removal from taxation of tangible property such as real estate. In such instances the property of religious organizations, schools, colleges, and so forth, which are exempt from taxation, throws, to the extent of the taxes represented, that additional burden onto the rest of the community. There is no question about that feature of it. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I always listen with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts who just spoke, for they are always scholarly and show a great deal of preparation. Last Thursday, January 17, however, the same gentleman was discussing the reciprocity treaties and the reciprocity bill, and I do not believe that part of that very carefully prepared speech was quite up to standard. It is upon that issue I wish to discuss the matter before the Committee today.

I addressed a question to the gentleman at that time as follows:

> Just as a matter of information, I wonder if the gentleman would include in his remarks in listing the concessions that we have made to Cuba the concessions that Cuba has made to us?

His answer to that was:

> I am interested in our people, not the Cuban folks.

Now, that answer may have meant something to the gentleman who made it, but it certainly did not mean anything to me. Fearing that it might not have meant anything to the Committee, I thought it would be well at this time to discuss some of the concessions which Cuba made to the United States.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. Relative to my answer to the gentleman's question, may I say I was carrying on my remarks in a chronological manner. I did not intend to be discourteous, and the gentleman I am sure appreciates that fact. I could add that the agreement arrived at under the reciprocal treaty between Cuba and the United States is a matter of public record, and, of course, it is very easy to find, and perhaps the gentleman is going to quote from the record the articles of interest.

Mr. HARLAN. I accept the gentleman's explanation. I know the gentleman meant no discourtesy; however, the intent of the remark was so absolutely devoid of reason to me in discussing such a question that I felt it merited discussion at this time.

It is very much like a merchant who complains constantly that his customers are taking away his merchandise and not considering or discussing the amount of money which he got for the merchandise. In the remarks which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] placed in the RECORD he included all of the concessions that the United States made to Cuba. He included the trade between Cuba and the United States, but said not a word as to what we had gained in exchange. I feel that that is not a fair discussion, even allowing for the intense political angle to the argument. For this reason, I wish to go over some of the advantages that the United States gained from this treaty.

In the first place, Cuba agreed in this treaty not to increase the duty on any American produce not mentioned in the treaty. She agreed to reduce a number of consumption taxes, which are as harmful as tariffs. She accepted a very definite quota on her exports of sugar to us, so as not to injure our producers. She reduced the tariff on lard from $9.18 to $2.73, and this is to be again reduced to $1.45 in September of 1936. She removed the consumption tax on lard, amounting to $1 per 100 pounds. On crude vegetable oils, such as cottonseed and similar oils we produce, the tariff was reduced from $4.36 to 88 cents. On refined vegetable oils from $6.45 to $1.36. In addition to that, Cuba gave oils coming from the United States a preference over those of other countries of 35 percent on the crude and 30 percent on the refined. She removed the consumption tax on American flour and gave a substantial preference on American flour. On pork she reduced the tariff from $6.54 a hundred to $4.09 a hundred; bacon and smoked pork from $7.63 to $5.45 per hundred; ham, $8.72 to $5.45 per hundred; potatoes, $1.81 to 91 cents per hundred. And so on down the line.

The last item involved was cigarettes. Cuba reduced the tariff on American cigarettes so that cigarettes, which were previously selling in Habana for 75 cents a package, will now be sold at 25 cents a package. She cut the tariff in half on automobiles.

May I give a summary of what has happened since this reciprocity treaty went into effect. The gentleman from Massachusetts was crying about the great imposition that had been imposed upon our agricultural interests. The total value of agricultural products exported by us to Cuba, since these concessions were granted by Cuba, was $1,018,000 plus in September, as compared with $600,400 the month before, and $448,000 in September a year ago. In other words, we almost doubled our exports on these particular commodities.

On the nonagricultural produce, in the first month the value of the articles mentioned, including automobiles, canned salmon, and a lot of commodities like that, increased from $742,000 in August to $830,000 in the following month. To show the effect, Mr. Chairman, of good will in international trade, and this is just good will alone, we so obtained the good will of the people of Cuba by this act that we increased our export on things not specifically mentioned at all in the treaty. The total exports on commodities not changed in rate were $2,466,000 in September as against $1,835,000 the month before, or an increase of 34 percent.

The total exports were increased in September 1933 from $1,903,000 compared to September 1934 of $4,380,000. October 1934, as compared with October the year before, they went from $1,644,000 to $4,744,000. In November 1933, as compared with 1934, our trade increased from $2,005,000 to $4,213,000.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot look at one side of this picture and say that the United States has not gained anything. We have gained in good will, not only as far as Cuba is concerned, but we have gained good will in the whole of Latin America. Our trade outside of these treaties has doubled on practically all of our exports. The situation between the United States and Cuba is very much the same as it is between the United States and many other countries. We have peculiar conditions under which we may manufacture and grow certain commodities at a great profit. Cuba has peculiar conditions under which she can produce certain things at a great profit. Before the passage of the Grundy tariff we were exporting a great deal of pork to Cuba. We put an additional tariff on Cuban sugar and Cuba came back with an additional tariff on pork.

Now, we cannot very profitably grow sugar. Sugar to Cuba is the most productive crop, and they can grow it down there at the greatest profit of anywhere in the world. However, they cannot grow pork. We can grow pork profitably. Our farmers can make more money by converting corn into pork than almost anything else they grow in the field. Cuba did produce some pork down there, but it was a very poor imitation. They continued to eat this imitation food because we would not take their sugar. The climate down there is not suitable for the production of pork. Ours is not adaptable for the growing of sugar. When we enter into this reciprocity treaty, we open the Cuba market to the American farmer for the sale of hogs, bacon, and lard to Cuba, and in exchange we take her sugar. The American farmer is not going to lose anything by producing and selling those things out of which he can make the most money.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman means that the sugar grower will lose but the pork grower will benefit?

Mr. HARLAN. In practically every case I know of, certainly in the Middle West, the sugar grower and the pork grower is the same. He can simply transfer from raising sugar beets to raising corn. That is all there is to the matter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what was the condition that brought about the necessity for this reciprocity treaty with Cuba?

In 1924 Cuba was our sixth best customer. In 1933 Cuba was our sixteenth best customer. Our exports to Cuba had declined 89 percent and our imports had declined 63 percent. In 1924 two-thirds of Cuba's imports came from the United States; in 1933 a little more than one-half. In 1924 four-fifths of her exports went to the United States, and in 1933 it was reduced to two-thirds.

In other words, this country, that was our natural customer and our neighbor, had its profitable trade going into Europe and the South American countries. We did not have the sense to keep our ports open for this influx and outgo of a most profitable nature. Now this has been readjusted.

The whole thing is just a reflection of the condition the United States had allowed itself to get into during the depression. During that time world trade had dropped two-thirds of its value from 1929 to 1933. During this same time, however, our foreign trade had dropped three-fourths of its value.

In other words, we had lost a greater proportion of the world trade than other nations. Why? Because other nations were engaging in reciprocity treaties. They were fixing quotas, they were having exchange pools and everything else to boost their trade, while we were still using the horse-and-wagon methods we had used before in handling our trade protection through tariffs and nothing else, and the rest of the world was not only taking our trade away from us in our neighborhood here, but every other place as well.

I should like to go through the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts and comment a little more on some of his other statements. He said this:

> The State Department does not hope to get a balance of trade in our favor, because that would be virtually impossible. We simply increase our purchases in Cuba, and piously hope that Cuba will buy more from us. In the end, instead of spending $2 in Cuba for every dollar of trade we receive in return, we probably will be spending 3 or 4 dollars.

What a puerile, childish statement this does seem to be, with the utmost respect for the gentleman who made it. Certainly, we can never sell as much in Cuba in merchandise as Cuba sells to us. Why? Because we have extensive investments in Cuba and this must come back in the form of dividends. We do a lot of hauling for Cuba and that must come back in the form of dividends and it is because of the fact that Cuba has heavy foreign investments in their country and because she buys service from other countries that she is one of those countries on the globe that will always have a so-called "favorable balance of trade." We, in this country, during the last few years, have always been talking so much about our favorable balance of trade. We had a lot of tourists going to Europe spending money. We were paying dividends to foreign countries. We were hiring foreign countries to haul our goods and paying out for service and, naturally, we had to sell more than we could buy, because those bills had to be paid. We continued to have a favorable balance of trade as long as we lent money and there was no payment. Let Europe begin to pay our loans and our favorable balance of trade will disappear like a mist over a marsh at sunrise. We will never sell to Cuba as much as we buy from her unless we stop investing in Cuba and unless we also stop hauling Cuba's goods and rendering other kinds of service. We will always have a favorable balance of trade as long as we continue to lend money to Europe and they do not pay it back, as long as we continue to send tourists over there and as long as we continue to buy their hauling.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I may get a little more time, and if so, I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

The gentleman from Massachusetts also made this statement:

> The preliminary negotiations are carried on in secret, behind closed doors. The public has no knowledge of what duties foreign nations seek to have reduced, nor of what concessions our representatives seek in return. The first notice given consists in an announcement by the State Department that negotiations are under way with a certain country.

I do not believe the gentleman could have made a sincere investigation of the way these treaties are negotiated before he made these remarks.

In the first place, our negotiators call in from the countries with which a reciprocity treaty is to be negotiated, our State and commercial representatives. They find out in a general way what commodity that country would like to sell to the United States and what she could sell to the United States. We get the picture of the foreign country in this way, just as they do with respect to us. Then we prepare a notice which is sent to the press, open to anyone who desires to see it, not only giving the reasons the treaty is desired, but giving every commodity that we trade with in that country, every commodity we buy and every commodity we sell. This is sent through the press to everybody who manufactures these commodities and they are all invited to come in and present, first, their written briefs, and then their oral arguments, every one of them who so desires is represented.

I am going to include in my remarks a summary of the notices that were sent out to the industries in the United States in negotiating the last treaties, with the dates given.

These negotiations are not particularly secret. In the first place, the Department of Commerce, gentlemen, knows more about any one industry all over the United States from years of statistics that they have, than any manufacturer knows himself about that particular industry, because they have been collecting it, impartially, for years, and they have it gathered from the entire country.

I was amused at a manufacturer of paper in my own district about 3 years ago when Canada went off the gold standard. You remember, at that time everybody was saying that with Canada going off the gold standard our markets were being flooded. A very vehement protest was sent to me urging me to go before the Tariff Commission and try to get a tariff on finished paper.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. HARLAN. He asked for an increase in the tariff because the change of currency in Canada was flooding the country. I went to the Tariff Commission and the Department of Commerce and found that instead of a flood of paper coming into this country the imports were far less after Canada went off the gold standard than before, showing that the individual industrialist does not have the chance to know the conditions in his own industry that the Department of Commerce does.

May I say again that subsequently there came a movement from the Ways and Means Committee to increase the tariff on wood pulp because of the great influx of wood pulp coming in, and this same man, a buyer of wood pulp and a seller of paper, wrote me a letter saying that Canada going off the gold standard had not affected things at all.

As to the reciprocity treaty, what chance had the Stutz Motor Co. when we put a tariff on French tapestry, French china, and French perfumes—what chance had they for a hearing? France put a retaliatory tariff on automobiles. What chance had the Stutz Motor Co. for a hearing on that? They did not realize when we put the tariff on tapestry, china, and perfumes that they were going to be affected by it. How much different is this situation? The industry affected now gets adequate notice and can present any facts it desires.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts also said that this is a new type of legislation. Well, the first precedent on which the reciprocity bill was founded was our Embargo Act of 1794; then our Preferential Duty Act of 1798, and so on, through provisions of the Tariff Acts of 1870, 1897, 1909, and 1922. In many of these acts the President was authorized to do far more than we authorize here. Time will not permit a summary from that time up to this, but there is practically nothing new about it.

The gentleman from Massachusetts said this—and this is the most important:

> The gentleman from New York yesterday explained the situation as regards matches. It seems that there is a group of capitalists here urging a change of duty on Swedish matches. You do not suppose they want to raise the duty for the benefit of the American producer? On the contrary, their one object is to make some kind of a deal whereby our industry producing matches shall be wiped out.

I have looked up the report on the match industry and find this interesting thing.

In 1919 the net profits of the match industry amounted to three and a half million dollars, and the wages paid amounted to $3,000,000. In 1929 the net earnings were, in round numbers, $2,600,000, and the wages amount to $4,100,000. In 1931 the net earnings were $3,400,000 and the wages $3,400,000, and in 1933 the net earnings amounted to $3,400,000 and the wages $3,200,000. In other words, during those 4 typical years which I have picked out before the panic, during the panic, and since, as we think we are partly out of it, almost universally the profits of the match industry exceeded the amount of money they paid for wages. I am quoting from Moody's Reports on Corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman add to the amount paid for wages in excess of $3,000,000 in the match industry the amount that it disbursed for American products, sulphur, wood, and other things going into the manufacture of matches?

Mr. HARLAN. I have not that here.

Mr. CULKIN. It is in excess of $10,000,000 per year.

Mr. HARLAN. That does not seem quite possible, because the entire value of all of the matches produced was less than $10,000,000. I shall try to put the entire value in. I have it some place, but not available right at this minute.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman will find that in the last report of the Tariff Commission on this question.

Mr. HARLAN. I am not interested in the portion of the total manufactured value of matches which goes to raw material. I am solely interested here in the proportion of the profits which goes to labor. As long as we protect back of tariff walls an industry that pays as much money for profits as it does to labor we will never be able to keep the industrial machinery going.

For example, from 1923 to 1929 the total value of manufactured products in the United States increased $9,000,000,000, or approximately 16 percent. During the same years the amount of money paid to wages increased one-half billion dollars, or approximately 5 percent. This unhealthy ratio between profits and wages is largely responsible for our very overwhelming debt structure which has bogged down our industrial machine.

The gentleman from Massachusetts was also much worried about maintaining our standard of living. He says on page 603:

> If we are going to seek larger foreign markets, we must be prepared to meet world competition, and this means low production costs. Our standard of living would have to be lowered to that of Europe and the Orient, fewer men could be employed, sweatshop working conditions would prevail, and wages would have to be reduced to a fraction of what they now are. Is it worth the price?

This is a type of argument that has become standard for protectionists for a long time. Yet the answer is obvious. Even with the tremendous burden of ineffective industries tied around the necks of our efficient industries, with our efficient industries we are able now to sell throughout the world and to undersell foreign competition. It is because of that that foreign countries have built probably higher tariff walls against the United States than against any other one country.

We can make in the United States any commodity requiring tremendous power, mass production, and abundant natural resources, and in making that we can pay a wage scale higher than any place in the world because of the difference in value between our power and natural resources on the one hand and the value of the manufactured product on the other. Out of this differential we can and always have and always will pay higher wages. It is not the industry that cannot exist without tariff protection that fixes the wage scale. It is not the tariff-protected industry that goes out into the world market and carries American trade. It is not the United States that has to worry about the efficiency of our manufacturers. It is the foreign countries that are trying to keep them out through tariff walls. If, through reciprocity treaties, we can lower these tariff walls and buy those commodities which we cannot efficiently and effectively produce and sell those commodities which afford big profits and higher wages both we and our customers will prosper.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I shall in a moment if I have the time. The American producer in exploiting labor and using the tariff to do that is not at all unusual. The Canadian Government last year appointed a so-called "royal commission" to investigate conditions in that country, and during the Christmas holidays that royal commission reported to the Canadian Parliament on the textile industry in Canada. Let me show you what that report says:

> The Dominion Textile Co., which employs 41 percent of the Canadian cotton workers and is one of the chief beneficiaries of high duties, was shown to have paid without interruption for 10 years dividends equal to 150 percent on its original investment and 22 percent on a second stock subscription in 1922. Yet it had reduced labor payments 10 and 20 percent in 1933 and they were still down 7 percent, although the company in 1934 earned the highest trading profits since 1929.
> The tariff has kept the Canadian textile industry out of red ink throughout the depression and it had decreased the textile imports from the United States from 75,638,000 square yards to 17,112,000.
> But it had produced wage scales varying from $11.50 to $15.71 per week, and that, as one member of the commission remarked, was a poor example of high tariffs as creators of employment.

Our American match industry compares very favorably in grinding down labor with the Canadian textile industry. From 1919 to 1933 the number of match factories had been reduced from 21 to 16. Wages in 1931 averaged $1,037 per man, whereas in 1933 they averaged $885 per man, although the profits in both years was approximately the same, three and four-tenths million dollars. They maintained their profits by reducing wages.

Mr. Chairman, the whole world is sick of the tariff walls with which we have surrounded all of our countries. They are tying up trade. They are keeping efficient industries from making profits they ought to be entitled to, and it is out of profits that wages are paid and in no other way. They talk about our American wage scales being due to the tariff. Why did we originally institute a rigid tariff policy? Because the wage scale already prevalent in our new country was so high in agriculture, in making rum, and in shipbuilding that we had to put a tariff on to induce laborers to go into other manufacturing business. That is why we put the first tariff on and brought the Du Pont Co. here to manufacture powder, because we could not pay our current wage scale and sell the powder in competition with Europe. We have put unprofitable industries around the necks of efficient profitable industries. But the tariff is here. Our industrial life has been built up around the tariff. Nobody at this time is radical or wild enough to think that we can wipe those out over night and bring the millennium here in international trade, but we can do one thing, and that is what the administration is doing. We can gradually, through reciprocity treaties, adjust our international trade so that profitable industries, efficient industries, can again function; and those industries which cannot exist without a tariff wall will have an opportunity to change their capital over into other industries that can. [Applause.]

We have heard a great deal in this Congress about the danger of communism and fascism. To any thoughtful person it is apparent that capitalism, not only in the United States but in the world, is at the crossroads. It must produce wages high enough to protect humanity from want or it will be replaced by some other form of civilization.

The reactionary element tells us that our way to salvation is by extreme nationalism; to build a wall around us so high that no goods can come in, and seek our own salvation. If this were true, it would bring questionable safety to our citizens, if by doing that the other white and yellow races of the world who are not so fortunate as to possess the immense free-trade market which we possess are reduced to starvation. Their hatred of us would inevitably lead us into war where our vaunted prosperity would sink with civilization.

But is it possible to procure comfort and happiness by cutting off world trade completely? Our experience in all past depressions did not so indicate, because, if so, the less foreign trade we have the greater our domestic prosperity ought to be. Yet it is obvious that as our own prosperity sinks into a panic, instantly foreign trade and commerce sink with it. The extent of our foreign trade furnishes an index, as it rises and falls, of the prosperity which we are enjoying in our domestic commerce.

The imperative thing that capitalism must do, not only in the United States but in the world, is to see that men eat, are clothed, and have a sense of security against the casualties of life; and the only way that that can be done is for all humanity to engage in those industries which produce the greatest profit, because out of great profits, with honest administration, high wages are paid.

Capitalism, furthermore, must develop some system of controlling human selfishness; at least to the extent of preventing exploitation by those in power over those who are defenseless. If we cannot stop exploitation, then fascism must do it with the big club, or communism must do it by dragging us all down to the same level, where there will be no incentive to save, no incentive to profiteer, because there is no investment which can be made of the ill-gotten gains.

If we cannot control this blood-thirsty demon of selfishness, then communism, fascism, or any other form of government must furnish an ultimate welcome relief.

Mr. MICHENER. How about developing any new industries?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Will there be opportunity to develop any new industries under this system?

Mr. HARLAN. I am sorry. I would like to answer that question, but my time has expired.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, it is a common practice of many orators and newspapers to speak in a belittling way of Postmaster General James A. Farley as the "political member of the Cabinet", as if to convey the sinister implication that he spends his entire time playing politics and hatching political schemes to the great injury and detriment of the public service. The constant effort seems to be to build up a popular mirage of Mr. Farley as "Old Man Politics incarnate", and thus to create the impression that the head of the greatest business establishment on earth—the United States Postal Service—is a scheming politician, pure and simple, devoid of business and administrative experience and qualifications, who is kept in office for one purpose only, and that is to handle the politics of the national administration.

It is my purpose in the brief time it would be proper for me to speak today to dispel this Farley myth and to show that while Mr. Farley undoubtedly does know a thing or two about politics he also is liberally endowed with business brains and executive capacity and that the Post Office Department under his guidance is economically conducted and wisely administered and that the character and quality of the administration of that great Department is such that it could well be taken as a pattern for all other Government departments and activities.

What I shall say about the administration of the Post Office Department, the opinions I shall express, will be based on the intimate contacts I have with that Department by reason of being a member of Mr. ARNOLD's subcommittee on Post Office Department appropriations. We are constantly in touch with the Department. Every year we have the most elaborate hearings. We call the postal officials, high and low, before us, seat them across the table from us and put them through a gruelling examination. We take the Department apart and watch it tick, so to speak. The information that has come to me by this delving process tells me that the Post Office Department is ticking like it ought to tick; that it is being conducted with high efficiency and on a basis of sound principles of economy that might well be copied by many of our other departments and new activities.

MY ONE PET EWE LAMB

My testimony, I believe, will be all the more impressive when I say that in patronage matters Mr. Farley and I have not clicked. He took away from me my one pet ewe lamb, the postmastership of Indianapolis, and turned it into the corral of my genial friend the senior Senator from Indiana on the theory that a Senator is entitled to name the postmaster of his home city.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. I was just going to ask if the gentleman's conciliatory remarks mean that he is trying to get the post office back?

Mr. LUDLOW. Not at all. That question will be answered a little later in my remarks.

I have always regarded that as a bum theory. [Laughter.] If I am ever elected to the Senate, I may think more of it; but for the present I disapprove of it. Then, after the Home Loan Bank Board had voluntarily, graciously, and kindly, and on its own initiative, invited me to name the manager of the Home Loan Corporation at Indianapolis, and in my perfect innocence I had appointed and notified the man of my choice, Mr. Farley waved his magic wand, and, presto, the appointment was turned over to the same genial friend, and I was not allowed even to name the attorneys and appraisers for my district, which were the humble crumbs that fell to all other Congressmen in that patronage shower, all of which I thought was in violation of the immutable principles of justice, to say nothing of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. [Laughter.] When I pleaded with Mr. Farley to appoint a wonderful colored man of my district as minister to Haiti, a white man from a far-away State got the job. At the beginning of this administration I submitted a preferred list of appointments, and it was given a preferred place in a pigeonhole, where it still maintains its preferential status. [Laughter.] The dust on it is thick and getting thicker. I cite these facts merely to show that the encomiums I intend to hand to the Post Office Department are not inspired by any patronage largess heretofore bestowed or by the hope of any patronage largess yet to come, as all of the appointments in which I was especially interested have been filled. [Laughter.] Someone may arise to inquire in amazement why I, the forgotten man, should pat the hand that has failed to feed me the fruits of the patronage plum tree, but I hope that I am big enough and broad-minded enough not to allow selfish considerations to warp my vision. I hope I am big enough and broad-minded enough to recognize that efficient and economical public service should be our first and paramount aim, and that is the kind of service the Post Office Department is giving to the people of this country.

THE WATCHWORD OF OUR STATESMEN

Mr. Chairman, for a hundred years economy was the watchword of our statesmen. For a hundred years "We demand retrenchment in the cost of government" was a full, resounding phrase that was featured and exploited in every political platform of every political party, National, State, and local, as the greatest of all desiderata. Political action lost all of its virtue and its beneficent essence unless it was associated with economy. And then, Mr. Chairman, a change came over the spirit of our dreams. We began to ask ourselves not how much money we could save for the benefit of the taxpayers but how much money we could twist and pry out of the Government to appease the various groups and blocs that were hammering at the doors of the United States Treasury. The change in psychology swept not only over the Congress but over the Government departments and bureaus as well. The chiefs of services began to take the attitude that it was their bounden duty not to see how economically they could conduct their offices but to siphon as much money as possible out of the Treasury to propagandize their activities and swell their personnel. Years ago economy in the departmental service became also a lost art.

It is interesting and refreshing, therefore, to examine with some particularity the record made by the Post Office Department under Mr. Farley since Franklin D. Roosevelt became President. I am one of those who believe in less government in business and more business in government, and I have been genuinely pleased to note the extent to which the Postal Service is now operated on recognized sound business principles. The result of a business direction of the Department is strikingly attested by the fact that on June 30 last, the end of the fiscal year 1934, there was a surplus on hand of $12,161,415.03 after giving credit for franked and penalty mail and air and ocean mail subsidies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] has expired.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Did the gentleman see the article in the Washington Herald last week, discussing the administration of Postmaster General Farley, in which it was stated that the actual deficit in that Department during the last year was $84,000,000?

Mr. LUDLOW. I do not recall, but I know that is not true.

Mr. CULKIN. That was the statement made in that article.

Mr. LUDLOW. The article simply is incorrect. I do not charge and I do not believe that it is intentionally untrue, but I say it does not state the facts.

Mr. CULKIN. One of the distinguished paragraphers of that newspaper made that statement.

Mr. LUDLOW. I have no quarrel with him. He undoubtedly thought he was stating the fact, but I have taken the trouble to check up these figures, and I know that he is mistaken and that the figures I am giving are correct.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. That does not take into consideration the nonpostal functions that have been imposed upon the Post Office Department, and from the system of accounting as followed out, that was adopted by the law passed in 1930, the Post Office Department during 1934 did actually show a profit of $12,000,000, and with the same system of accounting that was in use since 1930 the Post Office Department on each and every one of the years prior to 1934 showed a large deficit.

Mr. CULKIN. That was the new type of bookkeeping that was initiated by the new Postmaster General.

Mr. ARNOLD. That is the new type of bookkeeping that was initiated by a law passed under the gentleman's administration.

Mr. CULKIN. Two sets of books.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I do not want all of my very limited time consumed by others.

FIGURES ARE ELOQUENT

Those figures are eloquent. They show that as far as the Postal Service is concerned—the largest single business in the world—the Budget is being balanced. The longing of every business man for a balanced budget is being realized in that department. Now, how was it in former years? Tongue and buckle have heretofore been far apart in the Postal Service. The spread between income and outgo reached its widest girth in the entire history of the Postal Service in 1932, the last year of the former administration, when after giving the same credits for franked and penalty mail and for air and ocean mail subsidies there was the enormous deficit of $153,581,408.20.

Under Mr. Farley's administration of the Post Office Department everlasting vigilance has been observed in trying to effect savings wherever possible. In the transportation of mail there was a decrease from $180,300,000 in 1933 to $167,296,000 in 1934, due largely to the fact that better contracts were made and better prices were obtained. On domestic air mail alone there was a saving of $6,500,000, and while there has been some criticism of the abrupt way the old air mail contracts were broken off and while it is possible that the transition might have been effected in a less blunt and in a more equitable way, the fact remains that the change was distinctly in the public interest, for it is now revealed that under the old order the air mail contractors were receiving entirely too much subsidy at the expense of the American taxpayers. For an average rate of pay under the new contracts the country is receiving as efficient air mail service for 26.802 cents per mile as cost 42.658 per mile under the contracts prior to annulment. Furthermore, the new system not only embraces 3,676 more route-miles than was embraced in the old system, but it serves 4 additional States and 41 cities which did not have air mail service at the time the old contracts were annulled. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. The proof of an administrative act is whether the public benefits by it, and judged by that test the cancelation of the air mail contracts has been justified.

In the darkest days of the greatest depression the world has known Postmaster General Farley managed to carry on his Department without dismissing an employee, which I maintain is quite an achievement. The necessary savings were obtained by administrative furloughs and by not filling vacancies. Every employee of the Department had a very satisfying feeling of security, knowing that when the storm blew over he would still have his job, with the certainty of full-time restoration.

MR. FARLEY'S ABLE ASSISTANTS

Now, I would not have it understood that I believe all the credit for a successful administration of the Post Office Department should go to Mr. Farley. I know that a good deal of it belongs to effective men in key positions. His four assistants—First Assistant W. W. Howes, Second Assistant Harllee Branch, Third Assistant Clinton B. Eilenberger, and Fourth Assistant Smith W. Purdum—are all capable men and comprise as fine a group of official advisers as any Postmaster General ever had, and I would not overlook my friend Ambrose O'Connell, who is not only a most capable administrative assistant but who knows all the politics Mr. Farley ever forgot. To borrow a favorite expression of Henry Van Porter, we were "charmed" by the breadth of vision and the intimate knowledge of the vast details of the Postal Service displayed by my old colleague of the fourth estate, Second Assistant Postmaster General Branch, when he appeared as a witness before our subcommittee.

To Smith Purdum, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, I doff my hat in unqualified admiration. He has a more wide-spread knowledge of the Postal Service than his associates in Mr. Farley's kitchen cabinet, because he has been longer in the Service. He is the soul of conscientiousness and the symbol of devotion to the public interest. Not only is he efficiency personified, but his capacity for work beats almost anything I ever knew. Furthermore, according to my notion, he has an idea that ought to possess all public servants, but which really possesses but very few in this era of spending, and that is that dollars represent the sweat and toil of the taxpayers and are not to be spent without receiving 100 cents of value for every dollar expended. Mr. Purdum is the author of an axiom that ought to be posted in every public office in America:

A dollar wisely expended is a good investment, but the wasting of a dollar is criminal.

MANY ECONOMIES ACCOMPLISHED

On the single item of equipment and supplies, rent, light, heat, and so forth, Mr. Purdum was able to save the taxpayers millions of dollars during the last fiscal year after receiving Mr. Farley's consent to put his economical ideas into effect. His ingenious methods of saving money make an interesting story of postal thrift. He was convinced that there was a waste in using electric lights in leased and rented quarters, and he set about to correct that condition. Once a month orders were printed in the Postal Bulletin calling on postmasters to economize on lights. This turned up a saving of $190,000. Postmasters were instructed to save used twine, knot the ends together, and roll the strings into balls for future use. The result has been a large saving in the twine bill. Another order prohibits trucks from making unnecessary trips, and before a truck can be sent out authority must be given by the proper official. Result, a handsome saving on gasoline as well as on wear and tear. Mr. Purdum ordered surveys made of large quantities of Government-owned second-hand furniture in storage, and he found that with small repairs much of this furniture, which is really of an excellent quality, could be reconditioned and made serviceable for postal needs. Result, another large saving. He enunciated the theory that a spick-and-span new mail sack is not necessary to carry the mails, but that a repaired one will do the work quite as well, and as a result more half-soled mail bags are going around these days than ever before. Postmasters are instructed to give personal attention to the conservation of supplies, such as pens, ink, blotters, lead pencils, and so forth; and the postmaster who carelessly leaves his electric lights turned on when they are not needed for illuminating purposes will sooner or later come to grief under the watchful eye of Mr. Purdum. All of the supplies for the Postal Service, both for the Department and for the field, are issued through Mr. Purdum's office. Every requisition is scrutinized with the utmost care by three capable and vigilant officials—Louis Y. de Zychlinski, Assistant Deputy Fourth Assistant; Frank J. Buckley, Deputy Fourth Assistant, and Mr. Purdum, and there is not a chance in a hundred that anything crooked or extravagant will get by that eagle-eyed triumvirate.

A MOST ENTHRALLING STORY

If I had more time I might go more fully into the intricacies of postal administration in the well-ordered set-up that is now controlling that branch of the public service which has its ramifications all over the world and which gives permanent employment to 237,636 human beings. It is a most enthralling story. Critics of Postmaster General Farley may abuse him, if they like, for alleged political atrocities. That is their funeral. But if they will examine the record as I have done and are only half-way fair, they will have to admit that as Postmaster General Mr. Farley is doing an excellent job. As one American citizen, I should like to see every other department, agency, and activity take note of the healthful example of economical administration in the Post Office Department to the end that Postmaster General Farley's policy of putting business into Government may be emulated throughout the entire public service. I am wishing Mr. Farley all power in extending his administrative principles of careful economy to other governmental soil. I only hope that his example will become infectious. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, a week ago I stated in the House that I would present certain evidence that Federal officeholders were contributing to a Communist veterans' organization, with its headquarters in the city of Washington. I propose merely to state the facts and not suggest any remedy. After the facts are presented, the matter will be in the hands of the Democratic Party for any action it desires to take. In order that there be no misunderstanding of the facts either on the floor or in the minds of the representatives of the press, I propose to read them.

I have in my pocket photostatic copies of the receipts for these contributions, which I will be glad to show to any Member of the House. They were given to me unsolicited, but given to me with the understanding that I would not disclose the source from which they came. However, I have investigated the source thoroughly and am glad to endorse it 100 percent, as well as the photostatic copies of the receipts to the same extent.

In accordance with the statement I made in the House of Representatives a week ago I am presenting photostatic copies of receipts for donations received by the Veterans Rank and File Committee, signed by Harold Hickerson, a prominent Communist, from Federal officeholders for the purpose of instigating a bonus march of Communists on Washington.

I have prepared my remarks carefully so that there can be no mistaking the facts or twisting them for ulterior purposes. I am prompted to do so in order to protect such recognized veteran organizations as the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Disabled American Veterans, who are bitterly opposed to the Communist Veterans Rank and File Committee, Veterans Liaison Committee, and Workers Ex-service Men's League, all of which are led and dominated by such well-known Communists as Emanuel Levin, Herbert Benjamin, and Harold Hickerson.

As Al Smith says, "Let's look at the record." Let us see what the record discloses about the largest single contributor—Robert Marshall—to the Communist Rank and File Committee in order to promote Communist activities and bring their bonus marchers to Washington. He contributed, according to the photostatic copies of receipts signed by Harold Hickerson, a total of $120, of which $100 was contributed on December 29, 1934, and $20 on December 18, 1934. Mr. Marshall is the Director of the Forestry Division, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, drawing a salary of $5,600 from the Federal Government. He is chairman of the American Civil Liberties Union Committee of Washington, D. C., an organization that upholds the Communists in their advocacy of force and violence to overthrow the Government, replacing the American flag with the red flag, and erecting a Soviet government in place of our republican form of government guaranteed to each State by the Federal Constitution.

Mr. Marshall is one of the younger members of the "brain trust", most of whom are or have been active members and officials of the A. C. L. U., such as Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, A. A. A.; Donald R. Richberg, N. R. A.; Robert Fechner, C. C. C.; Prof. Paul H. Douglas, N. R. A.; Dr. Frederic C. Howe, N. R. A.; Henry T. Hunt, P. W. A.; Nathan R. Margold, Interior Department; James Landis, Federal Trade Commission; and John A. Lapp, N. R. A., impartial Presidential representative.

Another Federal officeholder who contributed to the Veterans Rank and File Committee is Gardner Jackson, senior administrative counsel, Consumer's Division, A. A. A., who made eight separate donations, according to photostatic copies of receipts, dating from September 19, 1934, to December 27, 1934, in sums of $5, with the exception of one donation of $10 on November 12, 1934. It is not surprising to find that Mr. Gardner Jackson is employed as counsel in the Consumer's Division of the A. A. A., of which Dr. Frederic Howe, formerly on the National Committee of the A. C. L. U. and correspondent of the Federated Press, which spread revolutionary propaganda through the Communist press, is the chief counsel.

In addition, Pauline Sherskersky, former assistant supervisor of the District Emergency Relief and now holding another governmental position in Maryland, made a contribution of $2 on November 7, 1934, according to the photostatic copy of a receipt signed by Harold Hickerson. There were about 25 other contributors whose names are now being checked up, including the following: B. Mercer, $30; J. Houghton, $25; Kermit Hooper, $23; B. Marshall, $20; R. Parmalee, $15; Miss M. Custer, $7.75; Miss L. Peabody, $5; I. Kastle, $5; and S. Sloan, $5.

I do not even pretend to suggest what action the Democratic administration should take against its own appointees in whom it placed its confidence by honoring them with positions of responsibility in the Federal Government. The attitude of President Roosevelt on the bonus is well known, but that is a minor consideration when compared to contributions to a Communist veteran organization, whose main purpose is to spread class hatred and propaganda for the destruction of American institutions.

As I stated on January 21, on the floor of the House, I proposed to submit uncontrovertible evidence given me unsolicited by highly reliable authority, and then that it would be the duty of the Democratic administration to clean its own house, because the man or woman in public office who contributes to a Communist organization is just as bad as a Communist, particularly for the purpose of bringing Communist bonus marchers to Washington.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. Does the gentleman seriously fear Communist activities in this country so long as our present industrialist and capitalist system of production is able to take care of those in need and want? In other words, so long as our present system is successful in taking care of need, does the gentleman fear the idea of communism in the United States?

Mr. FISH. I am very glad the gentleman from Ohio asked that question. I have never feared communism at any time. I do not believe in the possibility of a Communist revolution tomorrow morning at dawn, or the next day, or the next year. What I resent is the fact that there can be men in the Democratic administration, not Democrats or Republicans, who believe in free institutions, but men who contribute to a Communist organization for the very purpose of destroying free government in the United States of America, for destroying every single principle the Democratic Party has stood for for 150 years and for which I believe it stands today. Communism seeks not only to spread class hatred but to tear down and destroy representative government, and, if possible, to overthrow our republican form of government by force and violence.

I am sure the gentleman has no sympathy for communism, nor have his constituents. I am sure the gentleman, and I agree with him, does not fear any overthrow of the Government by force and violence. However, he surely does not desire in any way to be a party to encourage Communists who would destroy, if they had an opportunity, everything the gentleman himself believes in and everything the Democratic Party stands for.

Perhaps the reason I am opposed to communism as much as I am is the fact that I believe in democratic institutions; I believe in freedom of speech, and I believe in liberalism, which is the extension of democracy; the right of the people to rule themselves. But I do not believe that Government officeholders, paid out of the Treasury of the United States, should donate money to promote communism and foreign revolutionary propaganda in the United States of America which seek to undermine, to tear down, and to destroy, if possible, by force and violence, everything that has been handed down and intrusted to us by our forefathers and which we as Members of Congress have taken an oath of office to uphold.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Communism also stands for the spread of atheism throughout the country, too; does it not?

Mr. FISH. Oh, yes. I did not expect to speak on communism; but as far as I am concerned, there are some things about the Communists that I admire. One is that they are much more steadfast and much more loyal to their fundamental convictions and the principles of their party than either Republicans or Democrats who make their party platforms one day and begin to forget about them the next. It is a fundamental principle of the Communist, whether he be at Moscow, New York, Los Angeles, or Peking, to teach hatred of God. They are not merely atheists or nonbelievers, but seek to wipe out all vestiges of religion. A man has a right to be an atheist if he wants to be. The Communists go way beyond atheism; they teach militant hatred of God and of all religions to the extent that 12,000,000 school children in Soviet Russia are taught hatred of God; and if their parents at home have the hardihood to maintain any religious faith whatever, their own children are called upon to hold them in contempt and to disobey them.

Yet there are to be found in this country, I may say to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], some Protestant ministers who comprise and condone communism because they say: "Well, the old Greek Orthodox Church was filled with abuses and evils." That may be right; but the Communists are not after the old Greek Orthodox Church alone. They are against the Protestant religion, the Catholic religion, and every other religion. They teach hatred of God. The trouble is that these ministers confuse the communism of the early Christians based upon love and the kingdom of God with the communism of Soviet Russia, based upon hatred of God and hatred of every religion. Have I given the gentleman a sufficient answer to the gentleman's question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman has quite fully answered my question.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Is the Marshall whom the gentleman mentioned a forestry man in the Indian Bureau?

Mr. FISH. He is the one.

Mr. PIERCE. Has the gentleman his personal acquaintance?

Mr. FISH. No; I do not know any Communists at all.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Marshall is one of my personal acquaintances. He is one of the highest-type men to be found in the city of Washington. I do not see why we should be concerned with what he does with his money, I know of no higher type of man in the city of Washington than this same Mr. Marshall.

Mr. FISH. I am not going to yield further, because I am making no recommendations to the Democratic Party. The gentleman may believe Mr. Marshall has the right to do what he wants with his money; but does the gentleman believe that receiving this money from the Democratic Party out of the Treasury of the United States, he has the right to contribute to the Communist cause ostensibly to overthrow the Government? The gentleman has the right to his views, and I have a right to mine; and I am not retracting my views one bit.

Mr. PIERCE. When the gentleman attacks Mr. Marshall, he attacks one of the highest-type men in this city.

Mr. FISH. I made no statement about Mr. Marshall's character or ability.

Mr. PIERCE. He is one of the ablest men I know of.

Mr. FISH. I am discussing the question of contributions.

Mr. PIERCE. I do not know what he did.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman does not know, I can furnish him with the information and photostat copies of receipts. I cannot yield to him further.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I certainly yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for I know his liberal views.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman stated that Russia is teaching her children to hate God. What a wonderful display of the love of God was made by all Christian nations during the World War!

Mr. FISH. The gentleman and I served in the World War. He went to war, I suppose, in defense of our country; and I suppose that he and I would go again if necessary.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Yes; but did not all Christian nations teach all soldiers to shoot men down?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman and I probably loathe and hate war more than anybody else does in Congress, if that is what the gentleman wants to know.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I am opposed to it.

Mr. FISH. But I am sure the gentleman has no desire to defend the principles of communism.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. No; but I believe that hatred will be found to exist in every nation in the world. What is needed now is more people to preach the brotherhood of man instead of the selfishness of the individual.

Mr. FISH. Yes; and industrial peace also.

Mr. RANKIN. May I ask the gentleman where he got these photostatic copies of receipts?

Mr. FISH. I made the statement that they were given to me by certain people I know very well, but I am not at liberty to give their names.

Mr. RANKIN. There are only two sources from which the gentleman could secure this information.

Mr. FISH. I do not yield further. The gentleman probably was not here when I spoke at first, but I made that matter very clear.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. At any time during the gentleman's experience in France, did he teach any of the men under him, or did any other officer over there teach the men under him, to hate God?

Mr. FISH. Never.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, of course not. The gentleman from New York was condemning Communists in Russia, who teach people to hate God, and I agree with him in such condemnation, which is very different from the matter mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. It all depends on the gentleman's conception of God. What is the gentleman's idea of God? Is it one of these great monsters?

Mr. FISH. I will tell the gentleman my views. I do not believe in various creeds, dogmas, or articles of faith. They do not impress me very much. However, I believe that religion is the greatest moral force in the world. [Applause.] If you allow these Communists to have their way and destroy religion, you will go back to the Dark Ages.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman agrees with me on something.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I do not maintain it is religion when we have national religious and race hatred in the world. That is not religion. Religion is the teaching of the brotherhood of man.

Mr. FISH. May I say to the gentleman that I served with colored troops in the World War and oppose all forms of race hatred, and agree with the gentleman in teaching the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. That prevails in every Christian nation in the world.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I should like to get the gentleman's conception of the Communist view with reference to God? I understand the gentleman to say that they teach and believe in God?

Mr. FISH. They teach hatred of God.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does that presuppose a belief that there is a God?

Mr. FISH. No. They want to dethrone God both in Heaven and out of every place in the World. They want to destroy all belief in God and in all religion. You have to respect them for one thing, and that is they stand for their convictions and do not make any attempt to hide them.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman must assume they believed in God in the beginning.

Mr. FISH. No; I do not, and the gentleman knows very well they do not believe in God or any religion.

Mr. BOILEAU. I just want to get the gentleman's views.

Mr. FISH. I am not going to quibble about the attitude of the Communists regarding religion, and it is not necessary, as the Communists admit it. The gentleman knows how they stand as well as I.

Mr. BOILEAU. My only purpose was to get the gentleman's conception of the matter—that is all.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] spoke about what Postmaster General Farley has been doing recently in reference to making presentations of sheets of imperforate stamps to certain public officials and probably to others. I am sure that Members on both sides want the facts and that the American people back home will insist on having all of the facts. I am sure everybody wants to be fair to Mr. Farley and give him his day in court and an opportunity to come down to the Congress and give us the facts. He may have some adequate explanation, and he has a right to be heard. The charges which have been made today by my colleague [Mr. MILLARD] are very serious charges. It is not a question of petty graft. The charges involve hundreds of thousands of dollars. I am therefore introducing the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the following information: The number of sheets of recent commemorative stamps in imperforate form issued since March 4, 1933, and presented to Government officials and all others; the names and addresses of all persons and corporations who have received imperforate stamps and the number of such stamps received by each individual or corporation; and a list of the names of all who were favored with sheets of imperforate stamps even though such sheets have been recalled.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For a very brief question.

Mr. ARNOLD. Has the gentleman made any effort to ascertain from the Post Office Department how many sheets of these stamps have been issued?

Mr. FISH. No. I know 20 commemorative stamps have been issued. I am a busy man, just like the gentleman, and I have to rely on the information that is handed to me, or that appears in the public press.

Mr. ARNOLD. If the gentleman would request this information from the Postmaster General, he would receive all the information the Postmaster General could give him without the necessity of an investigation.

Mr. FISH. I hope the gentleman is not objecting to a resolution of this kind requesting information.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman certainly should have requested the Postmaster General for this information before resorting to an investigation.

Mr. FISH. May I say to the gentleman that I do not care to be criticized by him as I am not asking for an investigation but merely for information from the Postmaster General. Mr. Farley has admitted that he has given these stamps to different people. I have seen the stamps, too. I saw them a long time ago. I happen to know something about the first stamp issue under this administration, as it originated in my district. I have seen blocks of stamps which were given out months ago. I do not know just how many, and that is what I want to find out.

Mr. ARNOLD. Did the gentleman make any effort to find out from the Postmaster General how many of these stamps have been given out?

Mr. FISH. The Postmaster General has already admitted that in the public press.

Mr. ARNOLD. But I mean as to the number?

Mr. FISH. That is a matter for Congress, not for me, to find out and to get all the information available.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman could get the information from the Postmaster General, if he wanted to.

Mr. FISH. There is no question about the fundamental fact that imperforate stamps have been given out, and they have been given out to a favored list. Of course, I do not know everybody Postmaster General Farley has given them to, but there is a favored list, including the President of the United States, Secretary Howe, and a number of others. Now, my recollection goes back to the last Congress. I remember about a certain preferred list in Wall Street when J. P. Morgan & Co. had a favored list of clients. The Democratic side denounced it as being perfidious, wicked, and vicious, and there were some Democrats on it, too. I remember that there was only one Member of Congress, and he was Senator MCADOO, of California. But that favored list is not half as bad as this, and I will explain why.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he considers he is playing fair with his colleague from Westchester, who introduced a resolution this morning?

Mr. FISH. I am supporting it.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman is now coming in with another resolution.

Mr. FISH. No; this is to help that resolution.

Mr. BOYLAN. And may I ask if this is 1 of the 20 issues raised by his distinguished leader or is this a new one?

Mr. FISH. This is the one hundred and first issue. This goes way beyond the original 20.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman's leader issued a statement saying he had 20 issues.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman think the Republican Party is going to stand on just 20 issues? You give us an issue every day here.

Mr. BOYLAN. You have no issues, and you are simply groping in the dark now.

Mr. FISH. I do not yield further. I have just presented two new issues for the Democrats and propose to leave them on your lap.

Mr. TABER. Is not this an issue that the Democrats have raised?

Mr. FISH. I admit that the Democrats have no issues, and therefore I am giving them some. I gave you an issue on communism, and now I am giving you an issue on these imperforate stamps.

Mr. MILLARD. If the gentleman will yield, I appreciate the help from the gentleman from New York very much.

Mr. FISH. Now, let us see the difference between this Wall Street preferred list and the preferred list of the Postmaster General.

The Morgan preferred list gave to those who were in preferred positions, their friends, stock at $20, and it was issued to the public at $30, an increase of 50 percent; but in the Postmaster General's preferred list the public have not a chance to buy and the increase is not 50 percent, but 100 times the cost, according to the Stamp Dealers Association.

The Newburgh Stamp Club, in my district, has entered a very vigorous protest against this deplorable procedure. When I say that the President of the United States has received 20 sheets of these imperforate stamps, I only say what I have seen in the press. I will not know definitely until I get this information from Mr. Farley. The value of these stamps, for which was paid a few dollars or a few hundred dollars, according to one of these stamp experts, has increased to $320,000. If this is so, of course, the President, when he finds out the facts, should return the stamps.

I am not vouching for the facts, and I shall not know them until they are presented here in open hearings. However, it is stated openly in the public press that President Roosevelt has received all 20 issues; Mr. Howe and members of the Cabinet have also received a number of these issues. Mr. Ickes received 10 of the issues at a profit of only $200,000 for the Secretary of the Interior. Of course, that is a mere detail. I apologize to the Democratic Party and to my friends on the Republican side for discussing any such small sum of money. I suppose we should not discuss anything under $1,000,000,000 these days.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman believe, in view of the fact the Postmaster General presented some of these stamps or one sheet of these stamps to honest Harold Ickes, the relations between these two gentlemen are now cordial?

Mr. FISH. Well, they are two pretty artful politicians and manipulators. I have never worried about the relations between these two gentlemen. Those matters are just temporary.

I disclaim any personal feeling. The gentleman from New York has introduced a resolution and has put it squarely up to the Democratic Party. Personally, I like Mr. Farley. I think he is a genial politician. He lives in my State, and I want to see him given a chance to be heard before a committee of Congress. What are you going to do about it? Are you going to try to cover it up, or are you going to give him a fair hearing before a committee of this House? I do not know whether there is any spokesman here for the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads on the Democratic side, but if there is I yield to him.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 more minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Farley is likewise the chairman of the Democratic National Committee and chairman of the New York Democratic State Committee. He is a very skillful political manipulator, who believes that patronage—and, of course, Democratic patronage—is synonymous with patriotism.

Mr. Farley has control of a large part of the patronage of this Government; and if these charges that have been made—and I am sure my colleague [Mr. MILLARD] made them in all sincerity—are not investigated, then you have the responsibility as a party of having a national chairman, with this vast control of patronage, who wallows in patronage like a rhinoceros in an African water hole, being above the law. Mr. Farley has done more to break down the civil service, to destroy the merit system, and to build a spoils system than any other man who has ever lived in America. I suppose every Republican on this side knows of such instances. I know in my district where Republican postmasters have been removed because they did not answer a letter 2 years ago or because they failed to put up the American flag on Christmas Day.

I am a partisan, and I believe in partisan politics, and I believe the party in power should have the plums, but never in all our days of Republican administrations, going back for many years, were postmasters thrown out all over the country as ruthlessly as Mr. Farley has thrown them out. This is really destroying civil service, and it is time that there should be some investigation of the various charges that have been made on the floor of the House.

I am a little loath to speak any further on Mr. Farley. Mr. Farley is also a great mathematician. He is able to produce a surplus when the Bureau of the Budget finds there is a deficit of $62,000,000 in the Post Office Department. Mr. Farley finds a surplus of $12,000,000.

And he parades it—that is what the Republicans do not like—he parades it all over the country to show the efficiency of the Post Office Department. He parades this new-found surplus of $12,000,000.

What is the truth? The truth is that he deducts the cost of the air mail and the ocean mail and the franking privilege. You Members of the House are blamed for everything.

Under Mr. Farley's Democratic administration in the last year the franking privilege for Government mail has increased from $14,000,000 in 1 year to $23,000,000. That is for the mail franking privilege of the Government, exclusive of Congress.

Now, both Republican and Democratic Members are blamed back home for the franking privilege. The American people think that everything that goes out under a frank is from Congress. They think that you are wasting the Government's money.

The fact is that the franking privilege of the House and the Senate costs only $700,000 a year, and it has not increased for many years, and yet you are blamed for everything that goes out under a frank. But the franking privilege of the Government, exclusive of Congress, has been increased in 1 year from $14,000,000 to $23,000,000 in the past year.

I am willing to admit that these different subsidies can be put into the extraordinary budget, for I see that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is getting worried about it. But what is not proper is the fact that in the alleged surplus Mr. Farley does not refer to the fact that there were $8,000,000 transferred from the Treasury to the Post Office Department for the maintenance of post-office buildings, and then there was $2,000,000 carried on the budget for the Shipping Board which was likewise transferred to the Post Office Department. There will probably be $10,000,000 more to take care of the retirement pay of post-office employees which Mr. Farley has let out of the Government who come under the retirement bill, and that will cost $10,000,000 more. When you add all these sums up, instead of having a surplus of $12,000,000, you will find an enormous deficit. But do the people back home know about it? How can they know about it when Members of Congress do not know it? How can you expect the people back home to learn the facts?

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Does the gentleman think that men should be kept on the pay roll in the Post Office Department when the service does not need them?

Mr. FISH. Certainly not, I am talking about the financial set-up. I do agree with the remarks on the floor of the House, that the Post Office Department is rendering efficient service at the present time.

Complaints are coming in every day about the loss of efficiency in the handling of Government mail, and I get that from Democrats, too. Of course you can have a surplus, if you throw out everybody in the Post Office Service. I do not know how many should be thrown out, but I do know that the public is entitled to an efficient service, and that the service today is not efficient.

Mr. ARNOLD. Can the gentleman tell us wherein it is not efficient? I think we should deal in facts now, and not generalities.

Mr. FISH. I can submit all kinds of complaints, and every other Member of Congress on this side can submit complaints from his own constituents about the increasing inefficiency of the Post Office Department.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield further, but let me say this. My time is drawing to a close. How in the name of goodness can you expect to have an efficient Post Office Department when the Postmaster General is never in Washington. He is around making Democratic speeches as national chairman, attending dinners given to Democratic governors, and attending sessions of the New York State Legislature to whip recalcitrant Democrats into line. The only time he ever comes to Washington is to give some of these imperforate sheets of stamps to some of his friends on the preferred list.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I have already yielded three times and I cannot yield any more.

Mr. ARNOLD. If the gentleman knew these conditions existed and there was not efficiency in the Post Office Department, why did he not come before our committee, who have charge of such matters, and tell the committee wherein there was a lack of efficiency? I am sure that the committee would have given consideration to anything that the gentleman has said along that line. Instead of that, he did not come to our committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows more about the Post Office Department than I know, and he knows that these complaints are broadcast all over the country, not in my own district alone.

Inasmuch as this seems to be a field day, and we have included almost everybody, for the sake of some of my Democratic friends from New York, I want to complain now about the attitude taken by Mr. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, in refusing to loan any more money to the Tri-Borough Bridge Authority in the city of New York, because Robert Moses, who was the Republican candidate for Governor in the last election in New York, is on that board. Mr. Ickes gave no reasons whatever, but the press back home in New York are unanimously opposed to this action as being cheap peanut politics, refusing to give the allotment that has already been made to the Tri-Borough Bridge Authority because there is a Republican member on that board. Mr. Moses is a man of the highest character, ability, and training, satisfactory to the mayor of New York City, and the citizens of that city. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested, of course, in the pending measure, and in my capacity as Chairman of the Post Office Committee, I intended to make some observations with regard to the salient features of the bill, which I feel should be brought to your attention, but I shall deviate from the items I originally intended to discuss with you for a moment or two to answer, if I can in part at least, what has been said during the course of the debate this afternoon. I preface my remarks by telling you of the friendship and regard which I have for my two distinguished colleagues from New York, who have resented in righteous or unrighteous wrath the activities of our genial Postmaster General. I say to my distinguished friend [Mr. FISH] that I shall not enter into a controversy with him with regard to the unusual ability of our Postmaster General to handle so efficiently more than one important and responsible post. That is an exceptional feat which can only be accomplished by few men. I will allow some one else to make answer to that particular subject.

I want to talk about items that particularly affect the appropriation for the conduct of the Post Office Department, which have been mentioned here this afternoon. We have had some discussion with regard to increased cost of handling free and penalty mail, and I exonerate the Postmaster General and the Department from being in any way responsible for any increase in that connection. You can find an adequate reason for that increase in your own office and I can in mine.

Never in all the history of the American Congress have the people of this Republic been awakened to such an intense interest and concern with their Government as is the case today. The depression, the economic situation, and above all the magnetic personality in the White House that guides the destinies of this country have brought the people into close contact with their Government. The efforts at recovery on the part of the N. R. A. and other emergency agencies have filled the mail, and of course have added expense in the operation of this Department. So the increase in expenditures chargeable to free and franked mail is both justifiable and reasonable.

The transfer of funds from the Treasury Department to the Post Office Department for the custodial care of post offices and Federal buildings is a reasonable charge and the Department will be called upon to spend more money in the future. The Post Office Department will be called upon to take care of Federal buildings in which are housed other governmental activities. It is just another load the Post Office Department will have to carry.

The increased cost as a result of retirements, the voluntary and involuntary separation from the service of postal employees is in my judgment no cause for worry. Many men who labor for a living have been hoping for the day when they could enjoy surcease from their labors after being employed for 30 years in any one given job. In the Post Office Department, as a result of a law enacted by Congress, men, who, because of some physical incapacity or because of some apparent inefficiency, are now able to take their retirement after 30 years and enjoy in dignity and comfort their later years.

It makes for a more efficient personnel. We have a more efficient personnel now than at any time in the recent history of the Department.

Something was said about the free distribution of ungummed and unperforated stamps. Of course, I have no argument with anybody who would raise that question on the floor of the House, but I have made a search for a law which makes an act such as that illegal, and up to the present time I have failed to find such a law. So the Postmaster General was perhaps within his rights in buying and presenting to his personal friends such stamps as he might have distributed. It may have been contrary to the rules of certain philatelic societies. As to that I do not know. But I do know that the stamps were given to personal friends out of the generosity of heart of the Postmaster General. Men who know the Postmaster General know that he has been a very generous giver for many years. I do know from the record, however, that the Postmaster General has increased the activity of the philatelic division just as he has increased the activity and efficiency of other bureaus of the Department. When he became Postmaster General the receipts of the philatelic division amounted to about $300,000 a year. Last year the receipts of that agency exceeded $900,000, which, in my judgment, indicates that he has been reasonable in his treatment of the stamp collectors of the country, and popular with them as well.

Now that I have made a partial and probably inadequate reply to some of the criticism that has been made I want to say something about the surplus and deficit which we hear so much about. This should not be a partisan discussion, as far as the surplus and deficit are concerned. We have had this subject before our committee ever since I became associated with it, some 14 or 15 years ago. It was a former Republican Member of this House, and a distinguished Republican Member, who because of the bitter criticism aimed at the Department year after year that sponsored the legislation directing the Department to charge off certain subsidies and free services. It was the Kelly postal policy bill, which authorized the Postmaster General to credit the Department with the cost involved in handling these services. Is it fair to force the Department to assume the burdens which we imposed upon them when we passed the air-mail subsidy, the ocean-mail subsidy, a combined subsidy of some $42,000,000? Is it fair to condemn and criticize them for bad business practices when they are unable to develop a surplus under such conditions? Is it not enough to hold the Department responsible for the development of aviation and the maintenance of American flagships on the seven seas of the world? There is not a business in America, let alone a public enterprise, that could hope to be successful and at the same time to carry on so many activities, as is the case with the Post Office Department.

Yes; the Postmaster General indicated that a surplus of $12,000,000 would be possible in the last fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] has expired.

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MEAD. The Postmaster General indicated that the fiscal year would show a surplus of $12,000,000. His figures were based on the record and the law which shows that the surplus was in excess of $12,000,000. The Treasury Department indicated that a deficit amounting to upward of $50,000,000 obtains. Both figures are right. The Treasury Department, of course, is interested in the dollars and cents cost of running the Department. The Post Office Department, in keeping with the law, absorbed the bill for the subsidies, defrayed the cost of distributing franked and penalty mail, assumed the charge for distributing mail matter for the blind, as well as that resulting from the distribution of newspapers free in counties and some other costly services from which there was no revenue at all for the Department, and then, in keeping with the law which Congress enacted, it charged off those free services, and the record then indicated a surplus. The Postmaster General was absolutely within his rights, and if he did anything different he would be doing so in violation of law.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. As a matter of fact, did not the former Republican Postmaster General recommend this law that is known as "the Kelly postal policy law", which was written upon the statute books, and under which these credits have been taken?

Mr. MEAD. Yes. The report accompanying the Kelly bill, which was passed on June 9, 1930, indicated that it was presented with the support and approval of the Postmaster General.

Mr. ARNOLD. And this same system of accounting was adopted by the then Postmaster General, Mr. Brown, and has been in vogue ever since that time?

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct. This is not the first time. This is the fourth time that this method of reporting postal expenses and revenues has been carried out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say something about what we on the committee intend to do during the course of the session this year. We have been investigating the Post Office Department for a period of 2 years, seeking a basis for legislation which will increase the efficient operation of this great Department of the Government. It was our committee which recommended that the Government purchase substations, garages, and postal annexes. We found, for example, that the Quincy Street Station in the city of Chicago was leased to the Government at such an exorbitant rate that we were paying for that building every 5 years. That was one of the many instances in which the Government was being mulcted out of millions of dollars.

As a result of this activity of our committee, legislation was finally enacted which permits the Government to purchase or construct substations where the lease is in excess of $6,000 a year. That is in the P. W. A. Act, but it is only temporary. We desire permanent legislation, and we will recommend such legislation before the end of this session.

Our committee recommended that the mail boxes, such as those located in your hallway and mine, be receptacles for postal matter and for postal matter alone. They were formerly stuffed with circulars, advertising matter, papers, and everything one could think of which in no way added any revenue to the Department. Some years ago we enacted a law which prevented the stuffing of rural letter boxes, and last year we succeeded in securing the enactment of a law that prohibits the stuffing of city letter boxes. This has resulted in a noticeable increase of the revenues of the Post Office Department. The cancelation of exorbitant leases has also increased indirectly the revenues of the Post Office Department.

Last year we passed a measure that would prevent an outside company from competing with the Department on what is primarily a postal monopoly. We stopped outsiders from delivering mail matter, and as a result we have diverted millions of dollars in revenue to the Department. In one case a corporation paid back to the Post Office Department $900,000 as a result of this law.

So, my friends, during the coming Congress we want your support and cooperation to make it possible for the Department to buy, own, and maintain its own substations, branches, and garages. I personally would welcome your help in securing the passage of a bill that would enable the Department to buy abandoned National and State bank buildings. I should like your help also to secure the passage of a bill to enable the Comptroller General to review contracts before they are actually let, particularly contracts with regard to the purchase of motor trucks by the Post Office Department.

The Postmaster General in the preceding administration, during the last 2 years of his service, came before the Appropriations Committee and secured appropriations sufficient to buy trucks, automobiles, and supplies that will, in my judgment, last for years. Today there are some 250 trucks stored away—yes; rusting away, if you will—in the various garages located at post offices throughout the country. A great loss has been sustained because of the unnecessary purchases of trucks and supplies by this Department. Not a truck has been purchased by the present administration of the Post Office Department, because they are trying to use this surplus. We want legislation which will prevent such a thing from occurring in the future, even though it is not occurring at the present time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that our distinguished friend from New York [Mr. FISH] is degenerating.

When he was in Harvard and did the unusual thing there of graduating in 3 years, he had his head high up in the air; he was not playing mumble-the-peg down in the dirt.

When he was captain of his great Harvard football team and was their great right tackle, from all of their huddles he had his head up. His orders were: "Up!" He did not grovel in the dirt.

When he was a member of his general assembly for three terms, he was not groveling in the dirt. Head up!

When he went to France serving his flag and his country under, I will not say any easy conditions, obeying orders like a soldier, serving under difficulties—his head was up; he did valiant service for his country, had the Croix du Guerre conferred upon him for his distinguished service.

Since he has been in Congress he has not been groveling in the dirt until now. He has done wonderful work fighting the Communists of the country that have been seeking to undermine this Government and other governments.

What has come over him? Is he disintegrating; is he degenerating? He says that the Postmaster General bought the first few sheets of stamps of these special issues and possibly gave one or two to his children, possibly gave one to the President who presides in the White House, possibly gave one to some other Cabinet officers—stamps bought and paid for at the same price that other people paid for them, with money which went into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman does not want that to go in the RECORD, surely, when no individual could buy imperforated stamps except those on the favored list of the Postmaster General.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not talking about the exorbitant prices paid by stamp collectors; I am not talking about the $50 that one of my constituents paid here on Pennsylvania Avenue once for a seat in a window to see the President pass by; I am not talking about the $50 that two of my constituents once paid to conscienceless scalpers to see an Army-Navy football game; I am talking about the regular price of these stamps. And I am not upholding having them imperforated and unglued. They should have been made all alike. But there was no dishonesty.

Why, I can remember during the war—we men who served here in this House frequently saved some memento—when President Wilson once sent an important message here, it, as his messages always did, came under his seal. When that big envelop was opened and his message was taken out, I got the Speaker of this House to give me that envelope with the President's seal on it, and I have it in my scrapbook now. Some of these days it might be worth some money; but does the gentleman think I would sell it? Does the gentleman think that Postmaster General Farley would sell imperforate stamps that he kept because he was a part of the Government that issued it as a little memento of his service? Ah, my distinguished friend from New York, who has done valiant service for his Government, is now groveling in the dirt, playing mumble-the-peg.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I know the gentleman wants to let me get out of the dirt, even though the Democratic Party did try to smear President Hoover for a number of years.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield, although President Hoover smeared himself.

Mr. FISH. I am sure the gentleman does not mean to guarantee that these imperforate stamps will always be held by their recipients as souvenirs.

Mr. BLANTON. I imagine that the gentleman could not buy them with all the money he has.

Mr. FISH. Can the gentleman say that they will not be sold by the estates of these gentlemen?

Mr. BLANTON. If I were one of the posterity, you could not buy them for any amount of money. It would be a memento handed down to grandchildren as a family heirloom.

Mr. FISH. Some of them are on sale now.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, possibly a few of these stamps may have gotten out and perhaps may have been offered for sale, but I will guarantee that those the President, the Postmaster General, or any other Cabinet officer or their family may have you could not buy for money.

The gentleman talks about the Postmaster General being away from Washington all the time. Why, he is the most approachable Postmaster General I have ever seen in my service here, and I say that remembering that we had a splendid one from my own State, Mr. Burleson, one whom we could all see at all times. The present Postmaster General is the most genial Postmaster General who ever sat in a Cabinet, and he is the most approachable and most friendly one. What gentleman here will say that you cannot see your Postmaster General? You may see him if you will ask to do so. In other words, you cannot sit here and not let him know you want to see him. He is not going to invite you down there.

Mr. FISH. How are we going to see him if he is not in Washington?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, he is here most of the time. I will tell you the kind of Postmaster General that the gentleman from New York is used to. He is used to the one who after he came here, his feet did not grow, but his head did. He had to have a special limousine built with an upstairs compartment to it to hold his silk hat, and this was at the expense of the people. They made inside contracts down there for Government subsidies to air mail companies that were a stench in the nostrils of every decent, honest man. The present President and present Postmaster General had to set them aside. That is what is troubling the gentleman from New York. He is used to the Brown high-hat kind of a Postmaster General.

May I say to the gentleman from New York that they may be able to find these little measly, infinitesimal things to fuss about; but they will not find any dishonesty. If there is dishonesty, you will find the Democrats themselves throwing the light of day on the matter, and they will be the first ones to do so.

Look at all the money the Democrats spent during the World War, and much was wasted, but there was no dishonesty. You had your Republican smelling committee, your Graham of Illinois committee that wasted thousands upon thousands of dollars trying to dig up something. You could not find a dishonest act. You sent your Joe Walsh committee out to California in a special train of sleepers, spending thousands of dollars snooping around, but you could not find a dishonest act. Oh, you looked for it, but you could not find any dishonesty. After all that has occurred since that time, I am surprised that the great football star from Harvard would get up here and make the kind of a speech he made here today.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if it is not a fact that your Republican Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Cortelyou, was not only Secretary of the Treasury but also Republican National Committeeman who handled your Republican campaign?

Mr. FISH. May I say to the gentleman from Texas that no Republican Postmaster ever gave away a lot of unperforated stamps to a favored list.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is just pulling another mumble-the-peg out of the ground with his mouth.

May I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], who got up here after the speech of the other gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and said I voted against a resolution to stop tax-exempt securities, I will show him from the RECORD that we called attention to the fact that that make-believe resolution which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] brought in here never touched the $15,000,000,000 tax-exempt securities already existing and in the hands of such men as Andrew W. Mellon, Ogden Mills, and that bunch. It never sought to touch them. It was just a makeshift, and I made Mr. Green admit it on the floor. I will also show in the RECORD my colloquy with Mr. Green, who admitted it would not touch them. Naturally I voted against the makeshift resolution.

I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the remarks I made at that time:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, as a reason and necessity for offering this proposed amendment to the Constitution, its proponents say that the wealthy men of the United States have invested their resources in tax-exempt securities and are thus dodging the legitimate taxes that should be due the Government proportionate to their wealth, and that money is in this way kept out of industrial developments. It is therefore a measure purporting to be aimed against rich tax dodgers.

It may be that the gun is pointed in the right direction. But its cartridge seems to be a blank, for it contains no missile that will ever strike the intended target.

This proposed amendment in no way applies to the $15,000,000,000 tax-exempt securities now existing and now held by the financiers of Wall Street. It is purposely drawn so that it will not affect them adversely, for it is made to apply only to such securities as may be issued after such amendment is adopted. It would not in any way collect any tax from the income of the forty-odd millions of dollars left in tax-exempt securities by the late William Rockefeller, mentioned by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton], nor would it collect any tax from the income of the many millions of dollars which it is estimated that our present Secretary of the Treasury [Mr. Mellon] now has invested in tax-exempt securities, because this amendment is purposely so drawn that it will not apply to them or to the holdings now withheld from taxation by the many millionaires of the country, for they already own all of such securities they are financially able to absorb, and therefore they have ceased to be interested in any more of such tax-exempt securities being issued, especially when by stopping all additional issues in the future it will automatically enhance the value of their present holdings from $2,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000 overnight. It is this enormous profit that these financiers expect to enjoy, coming to them overnight by the passage of this amendment, that causes the moneyed interests of the Nation to back this legislation.

WEALTHY FINANCIERS CANNOT ABSORB PRESENT ISSUE

Both the chairman [Mr. Green of Iowa] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Mills] will admit that the very wealthy men of the United States cannot now absorb all of the $15,000,000,000 tax-exempt securities already existing. They now have all they want. They now have all that their finances will buy. Since this amendment will not affect them, they will continue to dodge taxes and escape payment of taxes for the next 20 to 50 years, because these securities run from 20 to 50 years. Hence all new issues of tax-exempt securities must be absorbed by the medium rich and those in ordinary circumstances. Hence, let me ask the committee, in what way is this proposed amendment making these rich tax dodgers come up to the lick log and pay on their big incomes? Why, in no way whatever.

I FAVOR AN AMENDMENT THAT WILL REACH THEM

Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the present law will not reach these tax dodgers, and in view of the fact that the amendment now proposed by the committee will not reach them, they still would not be reached no matter whether we pass or defeat this amendment. Hence, the only way to reach them is through some other proposal. And I offer a substitute that will reach them. Any my proposed substitute, when made a part of the Constitution, will in no way hamper or adversely affect the market for tax-exempt securities, will in no way prevent or hinder States or municipalities or farmers' organizations from issuing such securities in the future, and will in no way change the exempt status of income derived from such securities from being not amenable to taxes, and it in no way commits any breach of good faith on the part of the Government concerning such securities, but it merely limits the amount of tax-exempt securities any person or corporation may accumulate and hold and thereby escape paying taxes on the income derived from same.

GOVERNMENTS DO NOT EXPECT LOYAL CITIZENS TO DODGE PAYMENT OF ALL TAXES

For instance, loyal citizens cannot contend that it was to be expected that simply because certain necessary securities for the development of municipalities were exempted from taxation that loyal citizens of great wealth would invest all their millions of dollars in such securities so as to avoid having to pay any taxes whatever to the Government, but it was expected that such securities would be distributed and absorbed by the whole people of the Government, and that men of great wealth would not conspire against their Government to relieve themselves of all duties and obligations as citizens. But the death of Mr. William Rockefeller demonstrated that one wealthy man purposely invested over forty-odd millions of dollars in tax-exempt securities in order to escape the payment of taxes to the Government, and it is estimated that Mr. John D. Rockefeller has over $60,000,000 in tax-exempt securities.

And since the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, has seen fit not to accept the challenge of Senator COUZENS to make public the amount of his great wealth that he has invested in tax-exempt securities, it may be presumed that he is escaping taxation on quite an enormous sum. The policy of this Government against such practices should be expressed in its Constitution.

MY SUBSTITUTE HAS TEETH

When the proper time comes I shall offer as a substitute for the committee proposal the following:

"SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from all tax-exempt securities owned by any person or corporation in excess of the maximum amount of such securities which Congress by appropriate legislation shall determine may be owned by a person or corporation free from taxation. And when Congress determines the maximum amount of tax-exempt securities which may be owned free from tax on income by a person or corporation, the income from all tax-exempt securities in excess of such maximum owned by any person or corporation shall respond to the same rate of taxation as income derived from all other sources."

And with such an amendment as the above to our Constitution, I am in favor of this Congress then passing a law fixing $100,000 as the maximum amount of tax-exempt securities any person or corporation may own. This would prevent taxdodging, would not interfere with the right of States and municipalities to issue securities, and would not hurt the market for same in any way.

I will guarantee that neither of the gentlemen from Massachusetts will go as far as the above position taken by me many years ago in this House.

Let me quote a little of the colloquy that occurred between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] who, as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, then had the resolution in charge:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman said that big finance did not absorb the $13,000,000,000 which already exists in tax-exempt securities. How much can it absorb?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, not one-half of it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman says that it cannot absorb one-half of that, and that the purpose of this amendment which the gentleman says he introduced and which we recognize as the same as our friend from New York [Mr. Mills] introduced——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not want the gentleman to make a speech in my time.

Mr. BLANTON. If they cannot absorb half of those which exist, how are we going to reach them, when we do not make this amendment apply in any way to the income from those which already exist, but only to future issues?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. You cannot reach them or affect them, nor will this amendment materially affect the price of the securities which they now own.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman can make his amendment apply to existing tax-exempt securities.

I have put in the RECORD at this point, Mr. Chairman, the foregoing quotations from the debate that occurred on the Green resolution many years ago which discloses just why I voted against, and why some of the leading Democrats of this House then voted against, that makeshift piece of legislation specially prepared by Ogden Mills so that it would not hurt him or Mr. Mellon, or any other multimillionaire holder of tax-exempt securities.

Voting on the other side from us Democrats were Ogden Mills, Frank Mondell, Republican leader; Tilson, of Connecticut, afterward Republican leader; Snell, of New York, the present Republican leader; Campbell, of Kansas, then Chairman of the Rules Committee; Crowther, Fish, and Reed, of New York; Longworth, afterward Speaker; Mapes, Michener, Knutson; Green of Iowa; and many others of your bellwether Republicans. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the excerpts I mentioned.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What are these excerpts?

Mr. BLANTON. The excerpts I mentioned in reference to tax-exempt securities.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, with reference to this act on the part of the Postmaster General giving these ungummed and unperforated stamps to certain individuals, I do not wish to be understood as implying any dishonesty on the part of anyone connected with that matter. However, in my opinion, if the present holders of those stamps should die without bequeathing the stamps to some specific individual, the administrator of the estate would be forced to have those stamps appraised at their present value, which in many instances would be thousands and thousands of dollars, and then the heirs would be confronted with the question of deciding whether or not any one of them had a sufficient amount of sentiment to have their share of the estate assume that rather large price for those particular stamps.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, it is a far cry from the distinguished personality who comes from New York City, Mr. Farley, to the cotton fields of the South. By the same token I suppose it is a matter of presumption on the part of one who has been reared in the cornfields of Illinois to address himself to the subject of cotton, but I do so as a continuation of the discourse that took place here some 2 weeks ago, since what I have to say deals in an indirect way with the question of reciprocal trade agreements.

I stated at that time that I did not necessarily follow Mr. Henry Wallace in his theory that we had to adopt either extreme nationalism or internationalism. Yet, as between the two, I prefer the former, for it affords an outlet for this country and a chance for the building of a very durable kind of prosperity independent of any other nation. We must give more and more attention to this matter of economic domestic self-containment.

This brings me to the subject of cotton. Seventy-five years ago a distinguished Senator from the State of North Carolina stated at that time that no country on the face of the earth would ever dare make war on cotton. He cited the fact that if England undertook to make war on this country so that the cotton crop was bottled up, or if there should be a drought in this country seriously affecting the cotton crop for as much as 3 years, England would topple from her throne. Senator Hammond assumed that American cotton presided over the commercial and economic destinies of the whole wide world by virtue of the fact that our cotton was essential to every foreign nation. It is rather singular that a United States Senator should make this statement 75 years ago and that today we find the President and our trade experts cudgeling their minds with respect to a possible international cotton agreement whereby acreage on cotton might be limited.

I want to discuss very briefly this matter because it is indirectly concerned in the bill which extends the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and which comes before us for deliberation tomorrow.

The other nations of the world have not been idle insofar as the cultivation of cotton and the expansion of their cotton acreage are concerned. Britain never did forget the painful lesson of 1861 and 1865 and determined to project herself into a position where she would no longer be dependent upon the American Southland for cotton. In 1900, with the King's blessing, they organized the British Cotton Growers' Association and under a subsidy and under the tutelage of Great Britain they have been doing a tremendous work. I shall just briefly allude to what they are doing down in the African Sudan, for instance, a great country with almost 1,000,000 square miles available for cotton production, of which 5,000 square miles of very fertile, black soil is already given over to cotton production, with the possibility that some day Great Britain will by diplomatic negotiations be able to wrest from Egypt control of that area, known as "Lake Tsana", wherein so much water from the blue Nile can be impounded as to make the Sudan bloom like the rose and destroy the world market for American cotton. Knowing how astute the British diplomats are, the day is not very far distant when they will have this concession and then they can expand their cotton acreage to their hearts' content.

It is rather interesting to note that not only are they expanding the cultivation and growth of cotton in the Sudan, but they are doing it in Asiatic Turkey, they are doing it in Afghanistan, they are doing it in Brazil, they are doing it in Peru, and in all the far corners of the earth. Witness what the vice president and general manager of the world's largest tractor company, in East Peoria, Ill., told me not very long ago: That the shipment of tractors to the Argentine and to South America generally, for the purpose of breaking up these coffee plantations and turning them into cotton plantations, has exceeded their fondest anticipations, and they have shipped more tractors to South America for this purpose in the last fiscal trade year than they have at any other time in the history of that business.

This shows that in proportion as we curtail acreage and go backward year after year, these other countries are expanding their cotton domain, and certainly, once they break ground and tool up for an expansion of cotton cultivation, they are not going back to a status quo, even if our own State Department and the President of the United States are desirous of establishing some kind of international limitation upon the production and the cultivation of cotton.

In this connection it is rather illuminating to read the report of the Department of Commerce that was got out not so long ago in which they show very conclusively that the exportation of cotton gins for the last 5 years has been greater than at any time in the trade history of this country. They do not use cotton gins to shell peanuts or to process clover or alfalfa or anything of that sort. They use them to process cotton, and when they ship cotton gins to Brazil and Peru and India and China and Turkey, it means that the cultivation of cotton in those countries is gradually being expanded with a view to maintaining the permanence of such expansion.

It is only a matter of 10 or 15 years until the South is going to be in a serious predicament, and whether we resort to these so-called "reciprocal trade agreements" and other artificial trade devices, or not, these are but makeshift remedies that fail to recognize that some day other countries with depreciated currencies, child labor, cheap labor, long hours, low living standards will by the very impelling reason of lower prices take away our cotton trade and leave us with an acute problem and a headache.

They just rendered a balance sheet for the Sudan Plantations a short time ago and it is a rather amazing thing that this corporation started into cotton production subsidized by Great Britain, and that last year when cotton was only bringing 9.7 cents a pound, it still made a profit of $800,000, added $150,000 to its reserve and contingent fund, declared a dividend of 6 percent, and then, by action of the board of directors, decided to expand their cotton cultivation by 20,000 additional acres.

They did this on a basis of 9.7-cent-per-pound cotton, when seemingly we have not been able to do it, and this embodies the very thing I have pointed out before, namely, that when we get to a price market where all nations are on the same basis so far as mass-production facilities are concerned, we cannot hold a candle to them by way of competition; and certainly not to Japan or any other country that adopts these devices for mass production just as rapidly as they are invented and perfected and commercialized, and has the additional advantage of long hours, starvation wages, and cheap money.

It might be interesting to comment just at this time that in my estimation, at least, the great troublesome question in the Orient right now and the reason Japan is so anxious to slice off a hunk of Mongolia and to secure control and domination of Jehol is only because Jehol is that part of the Chinese domain that is best adapted to the production of cotton. Once Japan acquires this territory, whether by force or diplomacy, she will gradually push the spinning, weaving, and textile business of England on the rocks unless England develops cotton in her own colonial domain and removes some of her manufacturing plants to the Orient. This cotton race will be like a huge nutcracker to our own cotton industry, and then our real troubles will begin.

Let me point out that the trade report of Japan in the last year shows an increase of 700 percent in the export of woolen piecegoods, 500 percent in the export of woolen yarn, and 300 percent in rayon yarn. Why? Because it is better? No! Because they sell much cheaper. Prices talk. The depression of the yen, together with child labor and cheap labor, makes it easy for Japan; and she can go into the world's price market and lick us at our own game. [Applause.]

We are not going to take a chance on lowering living standards in this country in order to compete with Japan. American labor would not stand for such a proposal, and rightly so. Yet, instead of giving serious thought to this matter and considering it in the light of developments in the next 10 or 15 years, we complacently wait for trade treaties and reciprocal agreements to give us a remedy, when as a matter of fact we are daily verging toward an intense world condition, where every country of consequence is trying to produce the same agricultural products, the same manufactured products, and enter into swapping agreements. The picture does not make sense and it is little wonder that the southeastern division of the National Chamber of Commerce of the United States, meeting in Birmingham, Ala., in November of 1934, expressed its alarm not only over the acute condition with respect to cotton but to the curtailment of cotton acreage while other nations were increasing theirs.

Since cotton is the money crop of the South, this whole picture has serious national implications. Shall we continue to fight what seems to be a losing battle in an intensive world trade with our living standards at stake and the prospect of continued processing taxes which impair the vitality and purchasing power of the Nation, or shall we do the sensible thing and undertake a program of diversification which will take care of this condition when it finally becomes acute? My own humble opinion is that diversification is the answer, and sooner or later other crops, other industries, must be found to take up the slack that is sure to come.

Mr. DEEN, the gentleman from Georgia, came before our committee the other day and said that it would be beneficial to amend the R. F. C. Act so as to make it possible for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the purpose of financing the establishing of paper-pulp mills in the South; to make it possible to buy land and cultivate slash pine so that they could develop a far-flung paper industry in this country.

I want to say a word in behalf of this thing because I am in favor of this proposal of Mr. DEEN for the development of not one but a lot of pulp mills in the South. Just now we are importing $170,000,000 worth of pulp into this country for paper purposes from the world. We get some from Finland, some from Sweden, and plenty from Canada. In fact, for a long time Canada was monopolizing the pulp trade; and it seems to me that we cannot only save and keep at home the $170,000,000 but can go ahead and expand the pulp industry of this country and use up a great many of those idle acres in the South and then give employment to a great many people who are unemployed at the present time. About 10 or 15 years ago much of the manila or kraft paper used in the United States was produced in Canada. They said that we could not manufacture it here because there was too much resin in the southern pine.

That is just the proverbial poppycock that you see once in a while in the newspapers. In the last 10 years our production of manila or kraft paper in this country has doubled, and the exports of Canada to this country have decreased by over 60 percent. I maintain that when there is an opportunity to develop an industry of that kind in this country, irrespective of whether it is in the Corn Belt or in the South, we ought not to be stingy in allowing it money. There is a potential advantage in that for labor. It is no longer an experiment, because in 1933 they sent pulp from Savannah, Ga., to Canada to be processed into paper. It went up in three refrigerator cars. It was purely an experiment, conducted under the supervision of Dr. Herty, and they found that the slash pine in Georgia would make a grade of paper not only equal to that which has come out of Canada all these years, but infinitely better from the standpoint of the coating, the surface, and the smoothness and all those other characteristics that go into newspaper. It is no longer experimental. All they need is the money with which to go ahead, and I for one am willing to strike the date out of the R. F. C. Act whereby only those industries organized prior to the 1st of January 1934 can get the benefit of that industrial-loan section of the act. Here we have a chance to diversify the production of the South, to prepare for the time when there will no longer be an outlet for cotton and cotton goods in all the four corners of the earth, when we will have to yield to the astuteness and ability of a lot of other countries that have applied the same mass production that we have, and then we shall have replacement industries on which to fall back.

Conditions are ideal for the establishment of such a new industry. Our C. C. C. camps have set out millions of pine seedlings in the South. Slash pine will yield more cordage per acre than the finest timber in any country on the globe. A single pulp mill, with 500 tons' daily capacity, can utilize all the pine grown on an area of 300 square miles. In Canada it would take 2,000 square miles to supply such a mill. Slash pine re-seeds itself and is fast growing. From $3 to $4 per ton could be saved on the cost of the wood for pulp alone.

It has been estimated that the conversion cost of slash pine into paper in the South would be about $19 per ton as compared with $28 in Canada.

When no less a person than the chief chemist of one of the leading paper companies in Canada will state before the Canadian Technical Society in Montreal that the United States is in a position to take the leadership in the production of paper pulp, that should be evidence enough that we have on our very doorstep the making of a great industry that will contribute materially to our well-being, absorb the unemployed, and take us on the way to economic independence.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. If that policy is carried out, how will it synchronize with the present method of making treaties with foreign nations, wherein we recognize the principle that we are to develop only those industries now existing and which are being efficiently carried on in this country?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is diametrically opposed to the substance of those treaties. I have always been opposed to those trade treaties where we barter away a real advantage and receive an illusory, unreal, and only apparent advantage in return.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] addressed the Committee today on those treaty agreements and indicated clearly that it is the purpose of the agreements to eliminate from American industry such industries as the beet-sugar industry, which it is claimed are not efficient in the opinion of the President and those who pass upon the efficiency of industries.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say with respect to the argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN], that it is like making love to a widow—he just did not go far enough. He states that there was an advantage of $600,000 in 1 month in our trade with Cuba. On the surface of the thing that looks pretty fine, but it does not take into account the fact—and this was released by the Department of Commerce not long ago—that the consumption of consumers' goods in this country, while larger in dollars and cents for the first 9 months of 1934, was actually in point of volume and tonnage smaller than in 1933. We sold more goods in terms of dollars, because the prices are good, but sold less goods in terms of volume and tonnage. What has happened? Japanese rayon and incandescent globes and importations from Cuba and Finland and Sweden have taken away our manufacturers' market and have reduced the purchasing power of our own people, so that in evaluating this $600,000 which we got from Cuba, we would doubtless have to subtract $1,000,000 or more in lost purchasing power of our own people, and I say here and now that I shall never be willing to swap a good two-fisted American customer for any one of these illusory customers in other corners of the world who live on a starvation diet.

So much for the argument of the gentleman from Ohio. Getting back now to the necessity for advancing money to a new industry like the pulp industry, whereby we can ultimately conserve more than a hundred million dollars of trade advantage to this country, it has the additional advantage of keeping that money at home, which can be turned over tenfold in wages and supplies.

If we can preserve that $170,000,000 worth of trade in paper pulp which is imported every year, it will be the equivalent of almost one and three-quarter billions of dollars so far as the general economic welfare of this Nation goes.

May I now apprise you of the fact that while I am interested in every section of our land, and shall be glad to lend assistance to bringing prosperity to that vast domain in the South, where cotton has heretofore been king, I am also selfish enough to look for equivalent benefits to the Central West. By the same token that R. F. C. funds under the amended act should be made available for pulp and paper mills in the South, funds should also be made available for the establishing of power alcohol distilleries in the States of the Mississippi Basin.

I have so often pointed out that in the last generation the replacement of millions of horses and mules by trucks, tractors, and motor cars; the progressive per capita decrease in the consumption of cereals and meats; the improvement in feeding methods for livestock, so that less feed is required to get an animal to market; the displacement of our own cereals in industry by competitive products, such as blackstrap molasses; and the decrease in exports of meat, due to meat production in other nations, are all parts of the larger picture which has cumulatively given us a surplus.

I contend that it is futile, in view of the agricultural expansion in all corners of the world, to sit on our haunches and hope for an improvement in that direction. What we must do is to revise and alter our internal economy, and this can be done without disturbing any existing industry by the processing of surplus products into alcohol to be used by mixing with gasoline in the proportion of 10 percent.

It is rather pleasing to note that bills have been introduced in various legislatures in the central and western States to effect the use of alcohol in gasoline through a preferential tax. Such bills have or will be introduced in Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota, Oregon, California, and other States. Fruits as well as cereals can be processed into alcohol for power purposes and thus provide an immense outlet for and add greatly to the income of that vast group of farmers in the agricultural States.

In June 1933 we conducted a demonstration on the George Washington Memorial Highway. It was conducted under the auspices of the American Automobile Association. I shall never forget some of the silly arguments that were advanced against the use of alcohol in gasoline. Manifestly the Petroleum Institute did not like it. They saw the possibility of a reduction of the gallonage of gasoline by approximately 1,700,000,000 gallons a year, which is only 10 percent of the gasoline consumption of this country. They said that gasoline which contained a 10 percent mixture of alcohol would absorb water from the air; that it would stall; that it would cause hard starting. They said that alcohol in gasoline would corrode the inside of internal-combustion motors. They said all sorts of things. Then they got out these familiar cartoons and caricatures showing an automobile which used alcohol-gasoline wobbling up and down the street, climbing fences and billboards, and running into trees—with a jag on, as it were. Those were the fantastic and silly arguments aimed against the use of alcohol as motor fuel. But meantime, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics and Engineering did not stop in its researches. Today I am happy to see that the document gotten out by that branch of the Government, published under the auspices of the United States Senate, shows clearly that there are no technological difficulties in the way of the use of alcohol-gasoline.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They are using this so-called "alcohol-gasoline" in 22 different countries. In cultivating sugar in the Philippines they use it in their tractors. They even use it in their locomotives in the Philippines. They use it under mandatory act in Germany, in Yugoslavia, in Czechoslovakia, in Australia, and in many other countries. It is a rather significant thing that the Dutch Shell Co., which operates in every hamlet and village in this country, sells alcohol-gasoline at a premium in Australia under the name of Shellkol. It is a rather singular thing also that the Cities Service Co., of which Mr. Henry L. Doherty is president, sells alcohol-gasoline in England under the same trade and brand name that they use here, namely, "Koolmotor", and there it has become a very preferred, premium fuel.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is not the sale of gasoline, a portion of which is derived from alcohol, in foreign countries due to the fact that the price of gasoline is so high that it is more economical to use it in those countries, but that the price of gasoline in this country is so low that that kind of gasoline could not successfully compete with the regular gasoline?

Mr. DIRKSEN. But you can make an ideal instrumentality for farm relief that is far better than the program of curtailment, whereby we recede a step in the production of wheat and cotton; and Russia, Canada, and these other countries advance a step and leave us holding the bag.

Mr. ARNOLD. I can understand that when the price of gasoline rises in this country to the point where it would be economical to use corn-alcohol gasoline that it might be used, but at the present time I understand the price of gasoline is such that it is not commercially feasible.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want to say in that connection that you can use a 10-percent mixture of gasoline with third-structure gasoline and get a fuel that is equal to the ethyl gas on the market today. That is no idle statement from me. That is shown by all the technological experiments made, not only by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, but by a great many chemists who are interested in this thing at the present time.

So, irrespective of the price of gasoline at present and the price of corn, it is not only feasible from an economic standpoint but it would not add over the present price of premium fuels that are on the market, and it would give an outlet for three or four or five hundred million bushels of grain, not to speak of other agricultural commodities.

The matter of price and economic advantage has been so carefully figured out by experts that in my judgment there is no longer any doubt about its feasibility, its practicality, and its desirability.

The argument that it will be disastrous to the petroleum industry is not borne out by the facts. To restore to the farmer an outlet for his grain in the form of alcohol, after a huge portion of his market had been taken away by automotive vehicles, only means that his purchasing power will be repaired to the point where the gallonage of petroleum companies will be swelled to a point that will restore whatever gallonage will have been displaced by the use of alcohol.

Moreover, it may be of interest to this House to know that in the report of the National Resource Board, made to the President only recently, the Board points out that "known supplies of oil, natural gas, and certain metals are sufficient for at most a few decades." That means nothing more than the depletion of natural resources such as oil which, when once exhausted, cannot be replaced. Thus, by the use of power alcohol we not only provide farm relief without adding to the present cost of gasoline—because third-structure gasoline can be used—but we conserve our resources as well.

After all, that is the only thing about which we are concerned. It will solve the problem of the surplus; and it is being considered seriously because of the fact that distinguished scientists like Dr. Garvan, the head of the American Chemical Foundation, who has not one iota of interest other than the general interest of the country, and Dr. Buffam, of the same institution, and Dr. Hale of the Dow Chemical Co., at Midland, Mich., and Dr. Christensen, of Iowa State College, and a great many others not only have experimented with this thing, but from the basis of practical knowledge have shown very definitely that it is commercially and technologically possible. These bills are being introduced now, and I am glad to see that progress is being made in various Western States. [Applause.]

The proposal to use alcohol made from domestic products of the growth of the United States is very akin to the proposal to use slash pine in Georgia, Alabama, and other southern States for the production of paper and pulp. It is a kind of diversification through which we can preserve these areas, preserve money crops, preserve an internal prosperity and rid ourselves of a dangerous dependence on the other nations. More and more this breaking of new ground and pioneering in new crops must be practiced; and when once we have well learned this problem of diversification, we will be able to establish a balanced agriculture, a balanced industry, and preserve for ourselves the greatest market in all the world, namely, the market in our own land for our own people.

Now it will require funds to promote these power alcohol distilleries; and since the various States are sponsoring the proposal, it is only proper that the Federal Government aid them. By aid, I do not mean a grant or a gift. I mean only that the money to start the plants necessary to produce such power alcohol should be available in the form of loans, if and when the various States should have need for the money.

The striking of the date in the act passed by the last Congress so that industries organized after January 1, 1934, may receive the benefit of industrial loans on reasonable security will accomplish that purpose; and hence I am happy to know that this having been done, we embark upon the first step in the direction of an internal economy that is rich in promise for every section of our Nation.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BULWINKLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, has come to no resolution thereon.

WORLD WAR VETERANS' COMPENSATION CERTIFICATES

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a resolution passed by the General Assembly of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am glad that my first utterance upon the floor of this House is in furtherance of a cause which is near and dear to my heart. I am delighted to inform the House that the cause for which I am permitted to speak is likewise dear to the hearts of that fine body of men and women composing the General Assembly of North Carolina. As evidence of their interest in the welfare and happiness of that band of fearless men who carried the Stars and Stripes on fields of France in the greatest conflict that the world has ever known, they have, by resolution of the house of representatives, the senate concurring, memorialized Congress to enact legislation authorizing immediate payment to the veterans of the World War the face value of their adjusted-service certificates. The resolution is as follows:

Resolution 10 (House Resolution 47)

Joint resolution requesting Congress to pass an act authorizing the immediate payment to veterans of the World War the face value of their adjusted-service certificates

Whereas the immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates, heretofore issued by the United States Government to the veterans of the World War, will increase tremendously the purchasing power of millions of the consuming public, distributed uniformly throughout the Nation; and will provide relief for the holders thereof who are in dire need and distress because of the present unfortunate economic conditions; and will lighten immeasurably the burden which cities, counties, and States are now required to carry for relief; and

Whereas the payment of said certificates will not create any additional debt, but will discharge and retire an acknowledged contract obligation of the Government; and

Whereas the Government of the United States is now definitely committed to the policy of spending additional sums of money for the purpose of hastening recovery from the present economic crisis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

SECTION 1. That we request the Senators and Representatives of Congress from the State of North Carolina to support any appropriate legislation that does not impair the Government's credit for the immediate cash payment at face value of the adjusted-service certificates, with cancelation of interest accrued and refund of interest paid, as a most effective means to the end above set out.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to each Senator and Representative in Congress from North Carolina by the secretary of state under the seal of State.

SEC. 3. That this resolution shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

In the general assembly read three times and ratified this the 25th day of January 1935.

A. H. GRAHAM,
President of the Senate.
R. G. JOHNSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Examined and found correct.

S. F. TEAGUE, For Committee.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
Department of State.

I, Stacey W. Wade, secretary of state of the State of North Carolina, do hereby certify the foregoing and attached three sheets to be a true copy from the records of this office.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal.

Done in office at Raleigh, this 25th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1935.

[SEAL]

STACEY W. WADE,
Secretary of State.

I shall favor legislation authorizing the immediate payment to the veterans of the World War the face value of their service certificates. I heartily endorse the resolution of the General Assembly of North Carolina and commend it to your consideration.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORITZ], that he be granted leave of absence for a few days on account of the illness of his father.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

Mr. O'LEARY, indefinitely, on account of the death of his mother.

Mr. STARNES, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

Mr. LUCAS, indefinitely, on account of serious illness in family.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 29, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Maine, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF MAINE,
In the Year of Our Lord 1935.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States relating to the protection of newsprint pulp and pulpwood industry

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled, respectfully petition your honorable bodies as follows:

Whereas the newsprint pulp and pulpwood industry constitutes one of the basic industrial activities of the State of Maine; and

Whereas many other industries and occupations are closely allied with and dependent upon the production of newsprint pulp and pulpwood, depending for their existence upon the successful continuance of this industry; and

Whereas the number of people directly and indirectly employed in the production of newsprint pulp and pulpwood constitute the largest single group of workers in any one industry in the State of Maine; and

Whereas the newsprint pulp and pulpwood industry is seriously threatened and menaced by the importation of foreign newsprint pulp and pulpwood in direct competition with the industry of this State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled, realizing the importance and value of the newsprint pulp and pulpwood industry to this State, do hereby respectfully petition, urge, and recommend the prompt enactment of such legislation as may be necessary and proper to limit and restrict the importation of foreign newsprint pulp and pulpwood; and be it further

Resolved, That this memorial be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state to the proper officers and committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and a copy hereof transmitted to each of the Representatives and Senators representing the State of Maine in the United States Congress.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

House of representatives: Read and adopted January 17, 1935.

HARVEY R. PEASE, Clerk.

In senate chamber, January 22, 1935: Read and adopted.

ROYDEN V. BROWN, Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, Sam W. Mitchell, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of an act entitled "A resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of legislation providing for the immediate conversion into cash of the adjusted-compensation certificate of the soldier of the World War", enacted by the Twenty-fourth Session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by F. H. Cooney, Governor of said State, on the 23d day of January 1935.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 23d day of January, A. D. 1935.

[SEAL] SAM W. MITCHELL,
Secretary of State.

Senate Joint Resolution 1 (introduced by Mr. Oliver)

A resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of legislation providing for the immediate conversion into cash of the adjusted-compensation certificate of the soldier of the World War

Whereas there have been issued to the soldier participants of the World War, by the United States Government, adjusted-compensation certificates, which under the terms of the act of Congress become due and payable in the year 1945; and

Whereas the present economic conditions have resulted in causing a great many of the soldiers holding adjusted-compensation certificates to become in distress and need of the immediate relief that will be afforded by such legislation; and

Whereas it becomes and is the duty of the Federal Government to give adequate care to those, who, having made personal sacrifice to preserve our form of free government, not as mendicants but as preferred creditors of the Nation, are now in need of immediate relief; and

Whereas there are resident in the State of Montana approximately 25,000 veterans of the World War who would be benefited by the passage of legislation providing for the immediate payment of such compensation; and

Whereas the immediate payment of the certificates of adjusted compensation will bring about the distribution and circulation of a large sum of money sufficient to materially assist in the relief of the present economic conditions which exist throughout the State of Montana: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the house of Representatives concurring), That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States of America for the passage of the pending act of Congress to secure the immediate payment and conversion into cash of the adjusted-compensation certificates; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of the State of Montana to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana and that they, and each of them, be requested to use all honorable means within their power to bring about the enactment of legislation by which the immediate payment of the certificates of adjusted compensation be fully provided for.

ERNEST T. EATON,
President of the Senate.
W. P. PILGERAM,
Speaker of the House.

Approved January 23, 1935.

F. H. COONEY, Governor.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

ASSEMBLY, CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE,
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Sacramento, Calif., September 12, 1934.

To the President of the United States, to the Vice President, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of California:

I am directed to inform you that the California Legislature has adopted the following:

Assembly Joint Resolution 1 (by Messrs. Woolwine and Haliner)

Relative to memorializing the President and Congress to provide for old-age pensions

Whereas the problem of the care of the dependent aged has recently attained major proportions throughout the Nation, due in large part to the increasing mechanization of our industrial system and to the economic depression our country has been suffering, which has destroyed the financial independence of large numbers of our people, including those who had prudently prepared for the time when they could no longer earn a livelihood; and

Whereas the problem is seriously complicated by the fact that the people of the United States freely exercise their right to change their residence, so that the States and communities in which many of our dependent aged live are not those to the economic building of which they have directly contributed; and

Whereas because of various factors, such as relative liberality of care of the dependent aged, climatic advantages, and the economic opportunities offered by certain areas prior to the depression, some States and communities have within their borders a disproportionately large number of dependent aged; and

Whereas the financial burden of care of the dependent aged is so great in some States that the economic welfare and stability of such States are seriously affected and even threatened; and

Whereas it is evident that the problem has become one which can be satisfactorily met only on a national scale, and that the Federal Government must assist the State and local communities if the dependent aged, who during their years of usefulness have contributed to the economic life of the Nation, are to be cared for even on a minimum basis; and

Whereas the President of the United States has recognized the responsibility of the Federal Government in this matter and has indicated that he will recommend to the Congress of the United States at its next session that there be legislation bearing on this problem; and

Whereas it is well known that under modern conditions, with advanced industrial and business methods and the availability of abundant qualified labor, the age of employability has changed considerably and where but recently the wage earner could look forward with considerable confidence to earning a livelihood well beyond the age of 50, expectations today are much more limited, so that the age for retirement should be lower now than it has even been; and

Whereas it seems the part of wisdom to retire from industry and business as early as possible those who because of advancing age are beginning to become relatively inefficient and so to give more opportunity for employment and advancement to younger workers; and

Whereas experience has shown that property disqualifications effect a serious injustice and penalize those whose prudence and thrift have led them to prepare for old age by investment in a home or other small holdings, but who have no income with which to support themselves and to preserve their property, for which there is often no market: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States be urged to consider the enactment of an old-age-pension law to provide for the retirement and care of dependent aged persons in the United States, with adequate provision to alleviate the present burden of such care on the States and local communities, and with liberal provisions as regards age of retirement and disqualification because of ownership of property, to the end that a humanitarian and practical system of care of the dependent aged may be secured; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Members from California be urged to support such legislation.

F. C. CLOWDSLEY,
Speaker of the Assembly.
ARTHUR A. OHNIMUS,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
A. H. BREED,
President pro tempore of the Senate.
J. A. BEEK,
Secretary of the Senate.
FRANK F. MERRIAM,
Governor of the State of California.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Earl W. London, of Springfield, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Clyde L. Herring and other citizens of Des Moines, Iowa, praying for the ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at a session of the First Presbyterian Church of La Jolla, Calif., favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from Lawrence R. Larsen, chief clerk of the Wisconsin State Senate, stating "Am sending you by air mail today Joint Resolution No. 21–S, adopted by the Wisconsin Legislature Friday, January 25, memorializing the United States Senate to vote against membership in the World Court", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from the American League of Women, Boston, Mass., remonstrating against ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate numerous telegrams and letters in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the States of California, Connecticut, Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Texas, remonstrating against the ratification of the World Court protocols, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MALONEY presented a resolution adopted by the Holy Name Society of the Church of St. Anthony of Padua, of Bridgeport, Conn., protesting against the alleged antireligious program of the Republic of Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. POPE presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF IDAHO,
TWENTY-THIRD SESSION,
IN THE SENATE.

Senate Joint Memorial 2 (by agricultural committee)

A joint memorial to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the State departments of agriculture of the following States, to wit, Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming, have seen fit to place quarantine restrictions against the movement of alfalfa hay from Idaho into their respective territories because of the purported presence of alfalfa weevil in Idaho, and its consequent introduction into their States by virtue of the movement of hay from Idaho; and

Whereas the alfalfa weevil has ceased to be a factor detracting from the yields, or adding to the cost of production of alfalfa in Idaho, and by virtue of introduction of certain parasites of the alfalfa weevil which have reduced their population wellnigh to the point of extinction; and

Whereas the existence of such quarantines have ceased to be necessary as a protection to the above-mentioned States against damaging infestations of alfalfa weevil and have become instead trade embargoes; and

Whereas there is now in Idaho more than 50,000 tons of surplus alfalfa hay for which we have no market and upon the sale of which its producers' livelihood depends; and

Whereas the recent lowering of tariff restrictions against Canadian hay have further aggravated the hay surplus in Idaho by making available for drought areas forage which could be furnished as cheaply from Idaho if quality is considered:

Now, therefore, we your memorialists respectfully request that a survey be made by the Department of Agriculture which will cover the present and past status of alfalfa weevil in Idaho, the economic place that it now bears in the cost of production of Idaho hay and the potential damage that might be resultant by the introduction of alfalfa weevil into States that now have quarantines placed against Idaho hay; and

Furthermore, that your assistance be given in finding an outlet for the surplus hay now in the hands of Idaho farmers; and be it

Resolved, That a copy of this joint memorial be sent by the Secretary of the Senate to the Secretary of Agriculture and to Senator BORAH, Senator POPE, Congressman WHITE, and Congressman CLARK.

This Senate Joint Memorial 2 passed the senate on the 17th day of January 1935.

G. P. MIX,
President of the Senate.

This Senate Joint Memorial 2 passed the house of representatives on the 23d day of January 1935.

TROY D. SMITH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within Senate Joint Memorial 2 originated in the senate during the Twenty-third Session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

MORRIS STACY,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint Resolution 10

Joint resolution requesting Congress to pass an act authorizing the immediate payment to veterans of the World War the face value of their adjusted-service certificates

Whereas the immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates heretofore issued by the United States Government to the veterans of the World War will increase tremendously the purchasing power of millions of the consuming public distributed uniformly throughout the Nation and will provide relief for the holders thereof who are in dire need and distress because of the present unfortunate economic conditions and will lighten immeasurably the burden which cities, counties, and States are now required to carry for relief; and

Whereas the payment of said certificates will not create any additional debt, but will discharge and retire an acknowledged contract obligation of the Government; and

Whereas the Government of the United States is now definitely committed to the policy of spending additional sums of money for the purpose of hastening recovery from the present economic crisis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring)—

SECTION 1. That we request the Senators and Representatives of Congress from the State of North Carolina to support any appropriate legislation that does not impair the Government's credit for the immediate cash payment at face value of the adjusted-service certificates, with cancelation of interest accrued and refund of interest paid, as a most effective means to the end above set out.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to each Senator and Representative in Congress from North Carolina by the secretary of state under the seal of State.

SEC. 3. That this resolution shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

In the general assembly, read three times, and ratified this the 25th day of January 1935.

A. H. GRAHAM,
President of the Senate.
R. G. JOHNSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Examined and found correct.

S. F. TEAGUE, for Committee.

Mr. MURRAY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Resolution 1 (introduced by Oliver)

A resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of legislation providing for the immediate conversion into cash of the adjusted-compensation certificate of the soldier of the World War

Whereas there have been issued to the soldier participants of the World War by the United States Government adjusted-compensation certificates, which, under the terms of the act of Congress, become due and payable in the year 1945; and

Whereas the present economic conditions have resulted in causing a great many of the soldiers holding adjusted-compensation certificates to become in distress and need of the immediate relief that will be afforded by such legislation; and

Whereas it becomes and is the duty of the Federal Government to give adequate care to those who, having made personal sacrifice to preserve our form of government, not as mendicants but as preferred creditors of the Nation, are now in need of immediate relief; and

Whereas there are resident in the State of Montana approximately 25,000 veterans of the World War who would be benefited by the passage of legislation providing for the immediate payment of such compensation; and

Whereas the immediate payment of the certificates of adjusted compensation will bring about the distribution and circulation of a large sum of money sufficient to materially assist in the relief of the present economic conditions which exist throughout the State of Montana: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the house of representatives concurring), That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States of America for the passage of the pending act of Congress to secure the immediate payment and conversion into cash of the adjusted-compensation certificates; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of the State of Montana to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana; and that they, and each of them, be requested to use all honorable means within their power to bring about the enactment of legislation by which the immediate payment of the certificates of adjusted compensation be fully provided for.

ERNEST T. EATON,
President of the Senate.
W. P. PILGERAM,
Speaker of the House.

Approved January 23, 1935.

F. H. COONEY, Governor.

OFFICE OF DISTRICT COMMANDER, COAST GUARD, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution adopted by the common council, and approved by the mayor of the city of Buffalo, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. Eberhardt:

Whereas there is a strong possibility that the office of the district commander, ninth district, United States Coast Guard, may be moved from Buffalo to Cleveland; and

Whereas this office has been established at Buffalo for a long period of time, because of its location—half-way between the several stations in Lake Erie and Lake Ontario—and is much more central to the district than any other point: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this council request the United States Coast Guard to continue the present arrangement without change of location, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Rear Admiral Harry G. Hamlet, commandant of the Coast Guard, Washington, D. C., and also to each Congressman and Senator from New York State.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3247) to meet the conditions created by the 1934 drought, and to provide for loans to farmers in drought- and storm-stricken areas, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 462. A bill to authorize an extension of exchange authority and addition of public lands to the Willamette National Forest in the State of Oregon (Rept. No. 30); and

S. 464. A bill to add certain lands to the Malheur National Forest in the State of Oregon (Rept. No. 29).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 1384) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 31) thereon.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4304) to amend the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 32) thereon.

EXPENSES OF CONVENTIONS OR MEETINGS IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 118) to prohibit expenditure of any moneys for housing, feeding, or transporting conventions or meetings, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration as in legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas numerous applications are being received from various organizations requesting lodging, food, and transportation for the purpose of holding conventions or meetings at Washington and elsewhere; and

Whereas the expenditure of Government funds for such purposes is against the policy of Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That, unless specifically provided by law, no moneys from funds appropriated for any purpose shall be used for the purpose of lodging, feeding, conveying, or furnishing transportation to, any conventions or other form of assemblage or gathering to be held in the District of Columbia or elsewhere. This section shall not be construed to prohibit the payment of expenses of any officer or employee of the Government in the discharge of his official duties.

The President is hereby requested to send a copy of this resolution to the heads of all Government departments and agencies which have been granted lump-sum appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution as in legislative session?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator state just what the joint resolution does?

Mr. BYRNES. It is simply a declaration of policy of the Congress that no funds of any lump-sum appropriation should be used to pay the expenses of delegates to any convention in the District of Columbia. It has been passed by the House and is unanimously reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JOHNSON. It relates to the District of Columbia alone?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. It does not relate to peace societies across the water?

Mr. BYRNES. It does not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

Res. 48) to continue the commission for determining the boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Virginia for not to exceed one additional year, and to authorize not to exceed $10,000 additional funds for its expenses; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES—COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 65), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That clause 6 of rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by inserting, immediately before the period at the end thereof, a semicolon and the following: "and that three members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to be selected by said committee, shall be ex-officio members of the Committee on Appropriations, to serve on said committee when the items pertaining to Indian affairs are being considered by the Committee on Appropriations in the bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior, and at least one member of the Committee on Indian Affairs shall be a member of any conference committee appointed to confer with the House upon items pertaining to Indian affairs contained in the bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior."

FEDERAL AUTHORITY OVER STREAM POLLUTION AND STREAM PURIFICATION

Mr. LONERGAN presented the report of a conference with the Secretary of War with reference to the proposal to create a Federal authority over stream pollution and stream purification, together with a report of Mr. LONERGAN, chairman of the conference, covering the activities subsequent to the conference, which were referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to being printed as a Senate document.

MARIAN RYAN, GUARDIAN FOR ELIZABETH STRAINING

Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. TYDINGS) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 66), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1934, to Marian Ryan, guardian for Elizabeth Straining, sole heir and dependent of Kathryn Straining, deceased, late employee in the office of Senator TYDINGS, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate she was receiving by law at the time of her death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT ON UNEMPLOYMENT—BULLETIN ON COCONUT OIL

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I sent the President upon his invitation to everybody to help in forming plans to take this country out of the despondency it is in. I also desire permission to have printed in the RECORD an article of the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation, on the "coconut cow" that is furnishing so much trouble to our farmers in this country—the coconut oil that is being shipped in here.

There being no objection, the letter and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECEMBER 3, 1934.

The Honorable FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States, White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: For the purpose of furnishing a working example by which a majority of the 10,000,000 persons now unemployed may be returned to profitable employment, without taking one dollar from the United States Treasury, the following list is a rough draft of how those people can be cared for within 6 months.

By acting as England, Canada, Australia, Norway, and Sweden have done, that is, by stopping imports which compete with what we produce, we find we must reemploy the following:

Two million persons to cultivate cane- and beet-sugar lands, if foreign sugar is excluded; 2,000,000 persons to cultivate new corn land when blackstrap molasses is barred; 300,000 miners to operate our copper mines; 225,000 additional pottery and chinaware workers; 175,000 to make carpet, rag, and grass rugs; 150,000 fishermen and canners when these imports are stopped; 150,000 iron and steel workers; 100,000 persons to raise cattle now imported as frozen or canned; 100,000 silver miners, if we buy our own silver; 100,000 to produce gunny cloth and gunny sacks now imported; 100,000 shoe workers; 75,000 textile workers; 50,000 persons in electric lamp, toy, and novelty factories; 50,000 persons to can meats; 50,000 to produce cement and bricks; 50,000 manganese miners; 30,000 vegetable canning workers; 25,000 additional coal miners; 50,000 distillery and wine workers.

All these people at this moment are on Government relief. With the power vested in you by the last Congress, Mr. President, you can raise the tariffs on all these articles and thereby return about 6,000,000 persons to profitable employment. It is reasonable to assume that this number of persons will employ another 3,000,000 to supply their wants. After that, Mr. President, we have no unemployment problem and no depression. I trust this matter will be given your earnest consideration.

With best wishes, cordially yours,

THOS. D. SCHALL.

CRACKING A COCONUT-OIL FALLACY

On December 17, 1934, Mr. John B. Gordon, secretary Bureau of Raw Materials for American Vegetable Oils and Fats Industries, Washington, D. C., transmitted to a number of leaders in American dairying an article written by him for publication in the Manila Tribune on the Effects of the Excise Tax on Philippine Copra and Coconut Oil Importations into the United States, together with a letter setting forth three possible solutions to the problem raised in the islands by the tax. These leaders were urged to indicate which solution met with their approval.

In his article Mr. Gordon states that he is now obliged to write under an atmosphere of "guesswork and speculation." He believes, however, that under the tax the islands will be able to carry on only a small proportion of their former business in oil and copra with the United States; that in American industries domestic oils will be used in the place of coconut oil, particularly in oleomargarine, and also in soap by a slight change in the type of soap manufactured; that the Philippines will be forced to compete on the world market and accept world prices for their products; and that as a result of the decline in imports there will be little revenue returned to the government of the islands.

The solutions suggested by Mr. Gordon are as follows:

"1. That the excise tax of 3 cents per pound be removed entirely on 448,000,000 pounds of Philippine coconut oil.

"2. That the excise tax be left in effect, but that it be specified that it will not apply to coconut oil of Philippine origin which is used in the manufacture of nonedible products.

"3. That the excise tax remain in effect, but shall not apply to coconut oil of Philippine origin used in the manufacture of nonedible products provided that the total oil importations under such exemption shall not exceed 448,000,000 pounds per annum."

Mr. Gordon has been in Washington as a representative of industrial users of oils and fats, principally soap manufacturers, for more than a decade.

During all of this time he has registered direct opposition to every effort on the part of domestic producers of oils and fats to obtain protection against importations of foreign oils and fats. The manufacturers whom he represents appear to be interested solely in obtaining the raw materials used in their products at the lowest possible costs, free of every tax, regardless of what the effect may be upon stocks and prices of domestically produced oils and fats. Through their efforts protective measures against some importations have been delayed many years, and numerous new sources of cheap oils and fats interchangeable with domestic products have been found. This letter and article to dairy leaders is another example of the clever manner in which attempts have been made to confuse the issues and to weaken the case of domestic producers by alienating from their cause one of the groups which has been most active in the fight for a coordinated protective structure against these foreign substitutes.

Contrary to the main contention of Mr. Gordon, the excise tax has not as yet caused any economic upheaval or dilemma in the Philippine Islands, except a purely psychological reaction which lasted for less than a month after the tax became effective. Instead, economic conditions in the islands, except for typhoons, have improved greatly since the tax went into effect.

During the first 9 months of 1934 the United States consumed approximately 62,000,000 pounds more of Philippine coconut oil than during the same period in 1933. Net imports of coconut oil as such and as copra from the Philippine Islands during the first 9 months of 1934 were higher by 2,000,000 pounds than during the first 9 months of 1933.

Coconut-oil prices (net without the tax) in December 1934 were between 30 and 40 percent higher than they were when the tax became effective, and the price of copra in the Philippines in December was approximately twice as high as in May when the tax went into effect.

The imposition of a higher tax (5 cents per pound) on coconut oil from sources other than the Philippines has been effective in giving the islands an almost complete monopoly on the demand for coconut oil in the United States.

In August 1934, 99.6 per cent of our supply came from the islands, as compared with 83.8 percent in August 1933.

The following excerpts from Commerce Reports, a weekly publication of the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, carrying reports from trade commissioners, indicate clearly the trend of thought in the islands with respect to the tax:

January 6, 1934: Today's closing quotation established a new all-time record low level for copra prices.

February 3, 1934: The trade was disturbed because of rumors of the processing tax on coconut oil. All buyers for the American market withdrew from the markets.

April 21, 1934: Copra markets are unsettled. Practically all oil mills have stopped warehouse receipts of copra. The enactment of the tax caused very difficult trading.

May 12, 1934: Copra reached a new record low in price, with sales to Europe sustaining the market in some places.

Note: The tax became effective May 10, 1934, at 11:40 a. m.

May 26, 1934: Copra prices have recovered somewhat, with the market quiet but steady, and arrivals light.

June 9, 1934: Reaction to the processing tax on coconut oil has become more favorable, with the belief that eventually production costs will be lowered somewhat and prices increased by the tax.

June 23, 1934: The favorable action of Congress on the Philippine gold-refund bill, crediting the Philippine treasury with approximately $24,000,000, as well as legislation awarding the Philippines approximately $17,500,000 in sugar and coconut oil processing taxes, is causing a generally more optimistic outlook.

July 7, 1934: The business situation is fast improving.

August 18, 1934: Copra markets are very firm, with a scarcity of supplies and an oversold market in Europe.

September 29, 1934: Coconut-oil prices advanced 10 percent in August.

October 6, 1934: Business circles are encouraged by the advance in the price of copra, which has gained 70 percent in the last few weeks.

December 15, 1934: The recent upward tendency in copra prices continues, and the market is strong.

December 29, 1934: The November copra market was very satisfactory—prices advanced rapidly. Coconut-oil prices also followed the upward trend.

The price of copra at Manila on May 12, 1934, when the tax went into effect, was 88.6 cents per 100 pounds, as compared with 95.5 cents per 100 pounds at the beginning of the year. From this low point in May, however, prices rose to $1.318 per hundredweight on September 29, to $1.364 per hundredweight on October 27, $1.386 on December 1, to $1.67 per hundredweight on December 22, 1934, and to $1.8466 on January 5, 1935.

Crude coconut oil from the Philippines was selling at wholesale in New York at 2.63 cents per pound when the tax became effective, and at 3.69 cents on December 24, 1934. Refined edible coconut oil in car-lot barrels was selling in Chicago at 5.38 cents per pound in May, and at 7.25 cents per pound (without the tax) on December 24.

Apparent consumption of Philippine coconut oil in the United States during the first 9 months of 1934 totaled 402,000,000 pounds, as compared with 340,000,000 pounds during the same period in 1933. Net imports of coconut oil from the islands during the first 9 months of 1934 were 390,000,000 pounds, and for the same period in 1933, 388,000,000 pounds. During 1933 the imports were heavier than current demand, with the result that stocks piled up, while during 1934 imports have been lower than current demand, and these stocks have been reduced materially.

Imports as well as consumption of Philippine coconut oil in the United States have fallen off in the last few months, particularly during July, August, and September (stocks and consumption figures are available only by quarters). There is a number of factors other than the excise tax, however, to which a part of this decline may be attributed:

1. Imports into the United States from the Philippines were exceptionally heavy during the first part of the year, with the result that supplies for export from the islands have become very low.

2. Production of copra and coconut oil in the islands was low this year, owing to a succession of heavy rains and damaging typhoons.

3. Anticipating a lowered demand in the United States, Philippine exporters sold short in the European market. This fact, together with a lower production, has resulted in a scarcity of supplies even for the domestic demand in the islands, and prices are much higher.

In addition to these factors, the excise tax has been instrumental in placing domestic oils and fats in an advantageous price position on the American market. Not only have the prices for domestic products increased but larger quantities are being consumed, both in industrial uses and elsewhere. Butter consumption during the first 11 months of 1934 was 51 million pounds above that during the same period in 1933, despite much higher prices during most of 1934. Oleomargarine consumption, on the other hand, was only 12 million pounds above the same period in 1933. The higher cost of manufacturing oleomargarine and its consequent higher price to some extent protected the rise in butter prices.

Corn-oil prices increased from 4.69 to 9.25 cents per pound from June 11 to December 10; and during the same period cottonseed-oil prices increased from 4.50 to 9 cents per pound, choice western lard from 4.35 to 9.80 cents, neutral lard from 5.38 to 10.13, oleo oil 6 to 10.75 cents, peanut oil from 5.13 to 9.50, and tallow from 4.75 to 7 cents per pound.

Factory consumption of cottonseed oil during the third quarter of 1934 (July, August, and September) was 398 million pounds, as compared with 292 million pounds during the same months in 1933. Other comparative figures on consumption for the two periods in 1934 and 1933 are: For corn oil, 11½ million pounds in 1934 and 8½ million pounds in 1933; edible tallow, 20¾ million and 14¾ million; inedible tallow, 203 million and 157 million; and oleo oil, 7¾ million pounds during the third quarter in 1934 and 4¾ million pounds during the third quarter in 1933.

Warehouse and factory stocks of practically all of the domestic oils and fats have been reduced materially; and with production somewhat lower as the result of the various activities of the Federal Government, the outlook is for the maintenance, if not the further raising, of the general price level. American producers of oils and fats are in a position where for the first time in recent history they may take full advantage of the increases in consumer purchasing power and hold the advantageous economic or price position on the American market. The protection to domestic producers, with a few minor exceptions, is complete and coordinated for the first time, and it is to the interest of dairymen as much as to any other group to maintain this structure.

Philippine producers likewise have been given an advantage over the rest of the world in supplying the American market. There is no call whatsoever to alter their position to put their product on a quota basis or to exempt any part of their product from taxation because it may be intended ostensibly for inedible uses. The oils which go into oleomargarine or other edible uses are the same or are directly competitive with and interchangeable for the oils used in soap and other inedible products. If any particular oil for a particular use is allowed to sell at a lower price, the immediate result will be a break-down in the general price level of all oils and fats, because the manufacturers will bid only for the other products a price in line with that at which a substitute for them may be obtained. In addition to this the administration of the tax will be much more complicated.

The answer to the so-called "problem", raised by Mr. Gordon, does not lie, therefore, in either of the three alternatives proposed by him; in fact, the problem he outlines appears not to exist. The answer of dairymen is that the tax should continue in force in its present form, with minor clarifications to take care of certain legal loopholes which have been discovered, with the same or a higher rate of taxation. The manufacturers represented by the organization of which he is secretary should be enough interested in the welfare of the producers from whom they secure their raw materials to pay this tax and contribute this small amount to the expenses of the Federal Government.

THE WORLD COURT

The Senate, in executive session, resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss the question of adherence to the World Court for the reason that the arguments both for and against it have not only been quite thoroughly covered during this session, but have been the subject of discussion in the Senate and in the country for 12 years. It is not my intention to go over those arguments again.

However, my deep interest and conviction on the subject have been intensified by a resolution for a World Court introduced many years ago by my distinguished colleague [Mr. BORAH] and inserted in the RECORD a few days ago by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. In that resolution the Senator recommended a World Court with broad powers. He favored a court as a judicial substitute for war—

> In the form or nature of an international court, modeled on our Federal Supreme Court in its jurisdiction over controversies between sovereign states, such a court to possess affirmative jurisdiction to hear and decide all purely international controversies as defined by the code or arising under treaties. * * *

As has already been pointed out, under such a plan it would be compulsory that all international controversies under the code or any treaty be submitted to the Court.

The suggestion, however, that such an intenational court be "modeled" on our Federal Supreme Court in its jurisdiction over controversies between our sovereign States, calls up a phase of this question which has not been by any means sufficiently discussed.

In the organization of the present World Court, is there an analogy to our Federal Supreme Court? It is true that our Supreme Court does not have advisory jurisdiction such as is possessed by the World Court, and by at least one State supreme court—Massachusetts. The matter of advisory opinions and the value they have possessed in the settlement of international disputes, has been very effectively covered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I think he made his case in showing that on some of the most delicate questions that have arisen—questions that involved critical conflicts between nations—the World Court has rendered opinions so far and just that in every instance the decision has been acceded to by the nations involved.

In my examination of the history and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the World Court I have found a striking analogy between them.

In the first place, the plan for the World Court was drawn by two eminent Americans—Elihu Root and James Brown Scott. Mr. Root, a member of the original body that drew up the Court statute, presented the plan which formed the basis of the Court statute.

As stated by Secretary of State, Henry L. Stimson, in his message to the President on November 18, 1929:

> It is interesting to remember that the difficulty which had prevented the establishment of the Court in 1907 was solved by the suggestion of the American member, Mr. Root, based upon the analogy of a precedent in the creation of our own Federal Constitution.

In 1787, while the Constitutional Convention was in session, there were 11 controversies pending between the States, 3 of which had resulted in armed conflict. The Constitution when adopted contained a provision vesting the Supreme Court of the United States with original jurisdiction over "controversies between two or more States." At that time the States regarded themselves as sovereign and independent. They had adopted constitutions in which they had declared themselves free, sovereign, and independent States They were as jealous of their independence as the nations are today.

In 1784 John Hancock, as Governor of Massachusetts, issued a proclamation of neutrality in the midst of a hot dispute between New York and Vermont. He used language practically the same in part as used by President Wilson in his neutrality proclamation during the World War.

It will be remembered that Patrick Henry opposed the ratification of the Constitution on the ground that it would secrifice the independence and destroy the hard-earned liberties of the States won in the Revolution. On one occasion he made a powerful speech against the Constitution and in his patriotic, oratorical, fervor called down the imprecations of Heaven upon those who were seeking to destroy our liberties by the ratification of the iniquitous Constitution. Were his apprehensions justified? The history of our country is sufficient answer.

Since that time 65 suits have been brought by the States against each other, and 46 out of the 48 States have been party plaintiff or defendant.

The first case that arose between the States was that of Rhode Island against Massachusetts. Rhode Island asserted claim to jurisdiction and sovereignty of territory of over 100 square miles, with population of over 5,000, occupied by Massachusetts. It was in this case that the specious argument, which has been repeatedly made against the World Court, that the Court had no jurisdiction over the controversy because there was no law or rule for the decision, was enunciated. The Court held that the facts of the case fell within a well-settled doctrine of law, namely, that for the security of rights, whether of States or individuals, long possession under claim of title is entitled to protection.

It is interesting to observe that the World Court in the now famous East Greenland case, which arose between Denmark and Norway, and was decided on April 5, 1933, announced exactly the same doctrine as the basis for decision. In that case both Denmark and Norway claimed jurisdiction over East Greenland. It appeared that Denmark had been exercising control and asserting jurisdiction over the territory for a long time.

The Court held that where a claim to sovereignty is based not upon an "act or title such as a treaty of accession but merely upon continued display of authority", two elements must be shown to exist: "The intention and will to act as sovereign and some actual exercise or display of such authority." Both of these elements were found to exist, and the decision was for Denmark, and Norway accepted the decision and the long dispute was settled peaoefully.

Similarly, in the history of our Supreme Court many decisions that have narrowly averted actual warfare have been rendered on controversies between States.

In 1849 the Court decided a boundary controversy between Missouri and Iowa which involved sovereignty over 2,000 square miles of territory, a strip about one-third the size of Alsace. During the controversy, which had been pending for about 12 years, Missouri at one time had called out 1,500 troops and Iowa 1,100 to defend their rights. The Court finally decided in favor of Iowa, which, of course, settled the question for all time.

In 1892 the question of the right to a whole county, comprising over 2,300 square miles, claimed by both Texas and the Territory of Oklahoma, was decided by our Supreme Court in favor of Oklahoma. This followed a long series of armed conflicts between United States authorities and the Texas settlers. Two Presidents had been forced to issue proclamations to keep the peace.

In 1906, a dispute arose over a boundary line between Mississippi and Louisiana. The dispute involved some valuable oyster beds. I happened to be living in Louisiana at the time. Armed patrols had been called out by both States, and, in the Court's opinion it was stated that there was "danger of armed conflict." The decision was rendered and was, of course, observed by the States.

It is interesting here to note that the 64 decisions and opinions rendered by the World Court have not only been observed by the nations involved, but there has been no general criticism except as to one, the Customs Union case, which has been referred to in this debate.

The decisions of our Supreme Court have hardly fared so well. They have repeatedly been the storm center of criticism.

As has already been pointed out by the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], our Supreme Court, 100 years ago, decided that "the submission by the sovereigns, or States, to a court of law, or equity, of a controversy between them, without prescribing any rule of decision, gives power to decide according to the appropriate law of the case."

In other words, our Supreme Court decided just 100 years ago that the argument that a code of law was necessary before a court could function effectively, was unsound and untenable because it is not in harmony with the history of the development of our courts. It has been interesting, therefore, if not surprising, to hear this doctrine, overruled a century ago by our own American Supreme Court, revived to do service today against the World Court. And yet the distinguished Senator from Idaho has recommended the establishment of a world court "modeled on our Federal Supreme Court in its jurisdiction over controversies between our sovereign States."

It seems to me that the condition imposed by the Senator, that such court should operate only after a code of international law has been adopted by the nations, is setting up an obstacle that would long postpone, if not defeat, the establishment of any world court. It would be like the refusal of the Constitutional Convention to establish a supreme court of the United States until there had been a codification of Federal law which was yet to be developed by the processes of government. This the Constitutional Fathers did not do, and very wisely so.

Another interesting analogy between our Supreme Court and the World Court is that both depend upon the moral force of their decisions for enforcement; and so powerful is this moral force that it has been effective in every case decided by both Courts.

It might be interesting to follow the analogy further, and to observe some of the criticisms of the Supreme Court of the United States.

In 1802, Judge Todd, of Kentucky, said:

> We resist every idea of having our suits decided by foreigners.

How familiar those words do sound!

In 1808 the Boston Gazette stated:

> We know and feel our strength, and we will not have our rights destroyed by an alien court.

In 1831 the United States Telegraph said:

> This Court has no more right to meddle with our questions than has the Court of King's Bench in London.

It should be borne in mind that when these words were uttered the Supreme Court of the United States had been in existence about twice as long as has been the World Court.

A few days ago a resolution by the lower house of the Georgia Legislature was introduced by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. It opposed the World Court. Strange to say, a little more than 100 years ago the Georgia Legislature passed a resolution in regard to the well-known Cherokee cases defying the United States Supreme Court. I quote from that resolution:

> Enjoining the Governor and every officer of the State to disregard any and every mandate and process that may be served upon them by the United States Supreme Court or by any other court representing the Federal jurisdiction.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. POPE. I do.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator may be interested to know, as a matter of history, that the Georgia House of Representatives followed that by passing a bill which made it a felony, without benefit of clergy, for any United States marshal to undertake to serve process in the case. That question, however, was whether or not a citizen of another State had a right to sue the State; and the position of the State of Georgia was later justified by the adoption of the eleventh amendment, which grew out of that identical case.

Mr. POPE. All of which makes my point the stronger.

It was about the decision in the Cherokee cases that President Jackson said:

> Chief Justice Marshall has made his decision; now let him come off the bench and enforce it.

At one time the New York Daily Advertiser, commenting upon the Supreme Court, said:

The failure and humiliation of the United States Supreme Court has brought us to the abyss.

All this was said about the Supreme Court of the United States. Certainly nothing worse has ever been said by responsible men of the World Court.

It appears that there are two groups of opponents to the adherence of the United States to the World Court. The one is a downright opposition to any world court so far as the United States is concerned. They argue that we want to have nothing to do with any court to settle disputes with foreigners. They are suspicious of foreigners. They are afraid of the intrigues of Europe. One Senator called the World Court a "court of intrigue." They trust no foreign nation. The United States is the only nation that can be trusted.

The other group say they are in favor of a world court, but not any that is in existence. They say they favor the principle, but not the Court that is putting the principle into practice. The fact that the Court is made up of judges of the highest character, learning, ability, and fairness, and that their 64 decisions are without criticism, and have peacefully settled many difficult disputes which threatened war, does not soften their opposition. Come what may, they are against this World Court, which is the only one that is, or probably ever will be, in existence.

The practical effect is that these two groups join hands in opposition to the only practical way for the United States to support a policy that every President of the United States, and most of her responsible statesmen for decades, have been proclaiming.

In 1897 William McKinley, in his first inaugural address, said the "leading feature of American foreign policy throughout our entire national history" has been our insistence on "the adjustment of difficulties by judicial methods rather than by force of arms." Certainly every President since that time has asserted and reasserted that policy.

In my experience, I have found these two kinds of opponents to every progressive step. One opposes the step on the ground that we should not make it, the other on the ground that the practical method is wrong. The one opposes the principle involved; the other accepts the principle, but objects to a practical application of it. The one denies that the Court is a step in the direction of peace and order in the world, or is indifferent to such an effort. The other admits that a court is desirable for peace, but is unwilling to take the only practicable step to get it.

There are some human desires that will not die. The desire for peaceful means of settling international disputes is one of them. This is so deep in men's souls, so embedded in their nature, and so enshrined in their hearts, that they will dedicate their effort, their substance, and even their lives to the cause. This is what it means to multitudes of people in the world, including America. The battle will not end till the United States does her full part in the cause of universal peace.

Let there be no mistake about it—and I address this particularly to those who are in favor of a world court—that the defeat of this proposition would be a defeat of the American policy of judicial settlement of international disputes. No other court is probable. I doubt if any other is possible of establishment.

To those opposed, let me say this: Let them not think that an adverse vote on these protocols will end the matter. The desire of the American people for a world court is too deep and sincere to be uprooted and killed. They will not permit this country long to shirk its responsibility to promote a world order of law and peace on the earth.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, while we are hearing from the politicians over the country, it is not bad occasionally to take a little note of what the farmers think of this case.

These luncheon organizations that dine on pâté de foie gras and chocolate eclairs and then pass a resolution while they are knocking the foam off the top of a drink are great "resoluters." The advocates of the resolutions send these things to them typewritten and printed in advance. They are "boiler-plate" propaganda. After they have made their first little assembly and gone up the hill and come down the hill, if you should see some of the members, and wonder what they had "resoluted" about, and ask one of them what he meant by it, he would tell you he did not even know there was a resolution, but if there was he voted for it and he probably would find out some time a little bit later. [Laughter.]

In other words, a few days ago, if you will just bear with me about this kind of boiler-plate resolution business, a resolution came in to me when I was making a fight against the vice settlement of New Orleans, signed by some of the members of the ministers' conference, in which they protested against the kind of advertisement that was being given to the city because the "red light" district was being exposed as being inside the city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Louisiana will pardon the Chair, the fact has been called to the attention of the Chair that the Senator from Louisiana spoke yesterday on the bill, and that under the rule unanimously adopted last week debate is limited to one speech by each Senator.

Mr. LONG. Have we not got something up now? Do I understand that there is not any reservation up now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No reservation is pending.

Mr. LONG. Then, I beg the Chair's pardon.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] took occasion to make another speech about the war between Paraguay and Bolivia. At that time he said he desired to instruct me so that I might fully understand the question.

I have no interest at all in either Paraguay or Bolivia. They are friendly nations so far as we are concerned; but the Senator has taken occasion to make serious charges against one of those friendly nations. The charges are not borne out by the facts.

In view of the further fact that the war now going on between these two nations is one of the best illustrations I know of why we should have a world court, and also for the purpose of correcting some of the errors into which the Senator from Louisiana has fallen, I desire to submit a few observations.

The Senator made two charges against Bolivia. One was that that nation violated the arbitral decision of President Hayes when he awarded the Chaco to Paraguay, and held that Argentina had no claim to it. When his attention was called to the fact that Bolivia was not a party to that treaty or that litigation at all, he said he was not advised about that.

As a matter of fact, this question is a very old one. It has been considered since 1535. There has been a dispute between Argentina, Brazil, and Paraguay over this particular matter ever since they became nations.

About the year 1848, I believe, the Senator from Louisiana said Bolivia made a map in which it showed that it did not claim the Chaco. The Senator put that map in the RECORD a year ago, and he attempts to argue from that map that Bolivia has never had any claim to the particular territory now in controversy. I desire to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to this outstanding fact, together with a few others:

In 1852, which was 4 years after this map was made, Daniel Webster, then Secretary of State, in communicating with our representative in Bolivia, and in writing him about a treaty of amity and navigation that they were trying to agree upon, took occasion to say that Bolivia was a riparian nation; that is, that it owned land on the Pilcomayo River and also on the Paraguay River, which included the territory now in dispute.

In 1852 Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, made that positive statement in a letter addressed to our representative in Bolivia at the time.

Mr. LONG rose.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator from Louisiana desire to have me yield?

Mr. LONG. The Senator was referring to a time back in 1852?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. LONG. I had been called from the Chamber. I wanted to give the Senator this information so that he would understand what I said yesterday, because I did not have this translation worked out yesterday. It is this: Bolivia sent a plenipotentiary, whose name was spelled Q-u-i-j-a-r-r-o, to Asuncion, the capital of Paraguay, September 1879, with these categorical instructions:

> Recognize the validity of President Hayes' award.

That is a quotation taken from Moore and Dalence.

Quijarro presented his credentials to Paraguay, swearing that "he was bringing the loyal word of Bolivia."

Recognizing the treaty, he signed the rights of Paraguay to the south of the apa parallel, namely, with a good deal more than the awarded zone, and accepting that Paraguay renounce in favor of Bolivia the higher zone.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I am seeking only to show that a United States Senator, whose voice reaches far, speaking from the floor of the Senate, has attacked a friendly nation at the time when he is insisting that the United States ought to withdraw within her own boundaries and have nothing whatever to do with any other nation in the world.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. My friend's statement is subject to this modification. I have attacked the Standard Oil Co. of America for buying out a friendly nation in order to attack our own award. For the Senator's information, nearly all of the authorities of the Bolivian Government are on the pay roll of the Standard Oil Co. I will give him the names if he wants them.

Mr. LOGAN. I will get to that in the course of the few remarks I shall make, but for the present I want to prove that when the Senator made the statement that Bolivia was violating the award of President Hayes, he made a statement that is not supported by the facts, and I expect to prove that by the records from the State Department.

I make the statement that in 1855 this Government sent a commission, a scientific commission into Bolivia, and the instructions that accompanied them to the Bolivian Government show that this Government recognized that Bolivia owned all the territory that is embraced in what we would call down in Kentucky the forks of the Pilcomayo River and the Paraguay River.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the area of the Hayes award is situated in the angle comprised by the junction of the Pilcomayo and the Paraguay Rivers.

Mr. LOGAN. And the Verde River on the north.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Verde River is a tributary of the Paraguay River.

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. And runs in the same direction as the Pilcomayo River, so that the area embraced in the haze of war is a comparatively small one. Its western limit is not clearly defined in the award made by President Hayes, but it has never been held to include the territory now in dispute between Bolivia and Paraguay.

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I will yield, but I have not very much time, and I trust the Senator will not interrupt me at any length.

Mr. LONG. I understand that the Senator could not find the western boundary, but the Senator is at fault in this; the declaration from the representatives of Bolivia states that they will not recognize the Hayes award, and that that is the cause of this conflict.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will pardon me, I will go ahead in chronological order to show how wrong the Senator is in all of his facts.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

Mr. LOGAN. We find again that in 1858, the State Department of the United States of America was taking it for granted that Bolivia was the owner of this disputed territory, and in the same year, 1858, our representative in Bolivia, Mr. Dana, wrote to Mr. Lewis Cass, the Secretary of State of the United States at that time, making the specific statement that the boundary of Paraguay was the Paraguay River, and that the territory between the Pilcomayo and the Bermejo, on the north, and the Paraguay River belonged to Bolivia.

I am mentioning this fact only to show that the statement which the Senator made yesterday, that Bolivia had never asserted a claim to this territory since the map was made in 1848, is a mistake. Not only had Bolivia asserted a claim, as I shall show in a moment, but this great Government of ours, about which we are so much concerned just now, had recognized that Bolivia did have a claim to all of this territory that is now involved in the dispute.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, has the Senator only 15 minutes? If so, I will not interrupt him.

Mr. LOGAN. I have only 15 minutes.

Mr. LONG. The point I wish to call to the Senator's attention is that the declaration by Bolivia, just conceding that what the Senator has said is true, that Bolivia in its declaration after the Standard Oil Co. got down there was that they were going below the Verde, and below the Pilcomayo River, and the Paraguay River, but were not going to recognize the Hayes award.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I am anxious to convince the Senator from Louisiana that he has done a friendly nation a very grave injustice, and to do that I want to put into the RECORD, so that the Senator may consider them, the facts leading up to the treaty between Bolivia and Argentina when this controversy was submitted to President Hayes.

Mr. Miranda, the representative of Paraguay, in his counter memorandum, which was issued in connection with this treaty between Argentina and Paraguay, took occasion to make this statement when he was proposing a settlement, and I hope the Senator will notice it. This is what he said; this is Paraguay speaking:

> Although the reasons already explained fully support the rights of the Republic of Paraguay, as claimed before, she is, however, ready either to accept an arbitration as to the portion of territory which extends from the Bermejo River until Bahai Negra; or, to consent, yielding to her earnest desire to make peace with the Argentine Republic, to settle the question friendly by means of a compromise, and fix the line of the Pilcomayo River to be the boundary between both countries. In either case the rights of Bolivia are to be reserved.

Here is Paraguay in 1873, on September 2 of that year, in the preliminaries leading up to the treaty, when this matter was submitted to President Hayes, saying that the rights of Bolivia must be reserved.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will my friend yield there?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. That was at a time when Paraguay was at war with Argentina for that whole territory, and Bolivia was more or less an ally of Paraguay at that time, and Paraguay and Bolivia were more or less on the same side of the matter. In other words, while they were willing to have an award made of the territory, part of it to Bolivia and part of it to Paraguay, in order that they would not have to give the territory on the other side to Argentina, in the award of Hayes, he gave certain of the Chaco to Argentina, the balance to Paraguay, drew the line, and Bolivia acknowledged the line.

Mr. LOGAN. The facts remain that Paraguay, when submitting this arbitration, specifically provided that the rights of Bolivia in this territory should not be determined, and later, in the same document, made this statement:

> Paraguay has no objection to a settlement of these questions either by arbitration, if it embraces the whole territory between the left bank of the Pilcomayo River and Bahia Negra, or by a compromise, if the Pilcomayo River is agreed to as the dividing line between the two countries, the rights of Bolivia being reserved in either case.

That does not seem to have satisfied Bolivia, and I will call the Senator's attention to another step in this matter. After the treaty had been agreed upon, after President Hayes had been agreed upon as arbitrator, Bolivia came into that arbitration and filed a statement with our Secretary of State,

Mr. William M. Evarts, in which she asked the privilege of coming into that arbitration and being heard, and Mr. Evarts advised her that she was not a party to the proceeding, and that because she was not a party to the proceeding her matters could not be litigated or determined in this arbitration.

Following that, in order to preserve the rights of Bolivia, and so that there could be no dispute and no doubt about it, they entered into a protocol in which it was understood between Argentina and Paraguay that the rights of Bolivia were not concerned in this matter at all. When the award was made by President Hayes, of course it was not binding on anyone save Paraguay and Argentina. It is the old rule, which the Senator from Louisiana knows as well as anyone, that no one is bound by the judgment of courts except those who are parties to the controversy.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Was it not possible for Bolivia to make herself a party?

Mr. LOGAN. Bolivia asked for that privilege, and the President of our Nation, who had been agreed upon as the arbitrator, and our Secretary of State, held that Bolivia could not come in because she was not a party to the controversy.

Mr. LONG. But was it not possible at that time for Bolivia to say, "We recognize this award", as they did through their own envoy in 1879, the following year?

Mr. LOGAN. As I understand the record, Bolivia has always insisted that she had some interest.

As to the charge made by the Senator from Louisiana that Bolivia had sold out to the Standard Oil Co., I think that is a very serious charge to make against any Nation. It is as serious as if he would make a charge that some United States Senator had sold out to the Standard Oil Co. I might say that my best information is that Bolivia has never received one cent from any American industry, or from the American Government, since the war started—not one cent. There is no oil in the disputed territory. I think it is admitted by everyone that there is no oil to be found in the Chaco. If that be true, then why would the Standard Oil Co. be interested, if it is doing business in Paraguay just as it is doing business in Bolivia? The Standard Oil Co. has about one-fiftieth of the oil territory in Bolivia. It has a concession for about one-fiftieth of it. But does the Senate know that the oil that is produced in Bolivia is not enough to justify the building of 10 miles of pipe line?

It is said, although it has been proved that there is no oil there, that they want to build a pipe line through a part of Paraguay so that they can get to the Paraguay River. There could be nothing in that. Even the President of Paraguay himself has said there is nothing in the statement that the Standard Oil Co. is fomenting trouble down there. Other leaders in Paraguay, the leading propagandists of Paraguay, have said that American capital is neutral in this fight, and that there is nothing to the charge that they are not. Of course, I am not defending the Standard Oil Co. I do not believe, however, that everyone who happens to become an officer of the Standard Oil Co., or everyone who happens to become a stockholder in the Standard Oil Co., is a crook or a thief. I do not believe that to be so.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator says that Paraguay has said that American capital would not have anything to do with the fight?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. LONG. When?

Mr. LOGAN. Let me see if I can find that for the Senator.

Mr. LONG. It must have been a long time ago.

Mr. LOGAN. No. They now have a representative in the United States.

Mr. LONG. Yes; I know that. I have seen him.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Vebber is his name. Here is what he said:

> They (Paraguay) feel that American capital is hands off in this war.

Mr. LONG. When was that?

Mr. LOGAN. Let me see if I can find the date and give it to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. That means that American capital is off, but that is not the Standard Oil Co.

Mr. LOGAN. The date of that statement is February 12, 1934.

Mr. LONG. That was long ago.

Mr. LOGAN. Six months ago.

Mr. LONG. Their Ambassador here is Mr. Bordenave.

Mr. LOGAN. I was not talking about their Ambassador. I was talking about Mr. Vebber, who was an American newspaperman who married a Paraguayan girl, and who fought in the Paraguayan wars down there, and who has now been sent out as a representative of Paraguay for the purpose of creating favorable sentiment to Paraguay in this controversy, and I am not blaming Paraguay for doing so.

Mr. LONG. I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky that any number of pronouncements have come from Paraguay, from their Congress, and from their representatives and from their Ambassadors, saying that this is a Standard Oil war.

Mr. LOGAN. But that is no proof of it. My point is that we do not have any right to make charges such as those that have been made in that regard.

Mr. LONG. Let me see if I cannot give the Senator from Kentucky some proof of it.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not say that the Senator cannot. I do not know that the Senator cannot, but so far the Senator has not said anything except made an assertion on his part that Bolivia has sold out to the Standard Oil Co. If the Standard Oil Co. is financing the war, I would say that it would have been much cheaper if she had bought the entire territory. It costs money to carry on a war.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator further yield, Mr. President?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is in error. They have financed it with the money of the people of the United States. They do not pay anything. They use our blood and our money. They floated $68,000,000 worth of bonds and they sold them in this country, and they are not worth a dime on the dollar now.

Mr. LOGAN. But that was before any war was declared down there, or any thought of war being declared. So far as I know anything about it, the Standard Oil Co. did not do it.

Mr. LONG. They used $5,000,000 of this money with which to pay Vickers & Co. in London for munitions of war.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. LONG. That is the trouble; the Senator does not know anything about it.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no proof about it at all. It may be true. To show how little this oil controversy enters into it, if at all, and what a great mountain has been built out of a small mole hill, how great a range of mountains has been built out of a grain of sand, I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that in 1930 there were 56,000 barrels of oil produced in all Bolivia; in 1931, 25,000 barrels; and in 1932, 44,000 barrels.

In other words, the value of the oil produced in Bolivia during these years would not amount to $15,000 a year. Why would the Standard Oil Co. desire to go into Bolivia and carry on a war to get oil when there is more oil in Texas and Oklahoma than we know what to do with, and we are trying to prevent the sale of it at this time, we are trying to restrict the sale of it because the price is so low that it is not profitable for those producing oil to produce it today? So it is not necessary to carry on a war to get oil at this time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The reason that Bolivia did not produce more oil was because there was no means of transporting the oil out of Bolivia. The oil supply in Bolivia is estimated as being more than the available supply of any four States of America.

Mr. LOGAN. That is an assumption. And yet with our own States producing more oil than we can use, I cannot see why it would be necessary to fight a war and build pipe lines through another nation to get oil when we have more than we know what to do with.

However, that is beside the point. I think that the controversy between Paraguay and Bolivia but illustrates the importance of our becoming members of the World Court. I cannot understand why men should die, that women should be left widows, that children should be left orphans, that the taxpayers should be made prostrate—by a war simply over a boundary line between those two little nations. It is just like two farmers holding out about their cornerstones or where their line runs. The only reason why the matter has not been submitted to the World Court is because there are men there—and men throughout the world, as there are in the United States Senate—who insist that battles should be fought to the finish and that the questions should not be settled in a court where judges may determine the question.

I believe that the time will come when those distinguished Senators who are holding up to the world the idea that there can be no friendly settlement of disputes among nations will wonder why they ever took such a position.

There is but one way to settle a controversy such as the one under discussion. The parties to it should have taken that way. They probably would have followed it but for the fact that the United States of America, the greatest Nation in the world, the most powerful Nation in the world, has said, "We do not believe in and will not agree to the settlement of controversies by a court rather than by war; that we are unwilling to substitute law for war." They say the Court does not suit them. Perhaps it does not. But who is here suggesting some other means of settling controversies between nations other than by war? Who has any other plan to submit.

The question of our adherence to the Court has been dragging along for 13 years. Distinguished and able and honest men have opposed adding our moral force to that of the other nations to bring about the establishment of a court where controversies may be settled in a perfectly orderly way. I believe that the world will suffer because of the attitude that the United States of America has taken in this matter. I do hope that before the day is over we will let it be known to the world that America is looking forward, and that the day may not be distant when with one law we will bind the nations, tongues, and kindred of the earth, and that law will be the law of universal brotherhood.

I believe, Mr. President, that my time is up. I hope that we are not going to say to the world that we believe when controversies arise such as now exist between Bolivia and Paraguay that they should fight unto the death; that we will not encourage them to submit their controversies to a court of justice.

Mr. SCHALL obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for the purpose of sending a reservation to the desk?

Mr. SCHALL. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I wish to send to the desk a reservation and ask that it be read. I shall not speak on it at this time. My only purpose in interrupting the Senator at this time is to have the reservation read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reservation will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the adherence to the World Court by the United States is upon the express condition that awards which may have been made by the President and other officers of the United States under due authority of the United States or as mediators or conciliators, shall in no manner be affected or modified.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, there are no words so powerful as "home and country." A flag is but a meaningless thing unless it be mentally associated with all it represents. Our flag means all there is of human freedom and human equality; it represents the highest degree of civilization to be found on earth; it has been the symbol of the most powerful, the most wealthy, and the most progressive Nation in the world. America, born in travail, baptized in the blood of patriots, reared in privation and hardship, mastering civil dissension, always breathing forth love of humanity, up to 1917 was the Hercules of the nations of the world. We played hard and fast for wealth, for social and political power, but we played with a shrewdness that seldom met defeat. The great mass of the people grew steadily more prosperous as the years passed by. We knew what poverty was; we had our hard times; but they were nothing as compared with the hard times that are here today because we tangled ourselves up in a European war, and then made the mistake of electing a personage of the same outfit that tangled us up in that war to get us out, and instead of getting us out has only got us in the deeper.

Before the election of 1932 we were well on our way to recovery. Industry had increased from 25 to 56 percent. The Democratic candidate for the Presidency said that it was because Wall Street wanted the Republicans to be elected. After his election our recovery still went on increasing. Farm products were up, wheat was over $1 a bushel. This same Democratic candidate for President, the President-elect, said that it was because the people had faith in him. He took office on the 4th of March and to be sure that his administration began with zero he closed all the banks in the country, 14,000 or 15,000 of them, as sound as a hound's tooth. Only a few hundred banks that needed closing. Did not have any war to work out his dictatorship upon as Wilson had, so he manufactured a war and called it a war on depression and immediately began his government of managed emergencies.

Twenty-five days after he had taken oath to uphold and defend the Constitution he crowded through the lower House a law that would have put a publisher in jail for 10 years for daring to publish anything that he did not O. K. Then came his attack on industry—over which he desired a dictatorship—and the N. I. R. A. was set up which, instead of "a chicken in every pot", placed a Blue Eagle in every window. It brought about the desired effect—it created chaos, and the rich grew richer and the poor poorer.

Combinations in restraint of trade flourished and grew while every little business man in the country was broken and kicked out. In the first year of this "national racketeer's association" alone it cost the consumers over $5,000,000,000 in increased prices. What the increase has amounted to since the first year I have not computed, but it would probably even be more than the first year.

In his further planned emergency he developed and put over the A. A. A. that the farmer might come under his complete control through chaotic conditions thus produced. So he plowed under his cotton and his corn and his wheat and he killed his pigs and his cattle and his sheep and his chickens, and today has the farmers on dole completely under his control. Thus, having shut down the banks and shut down industry and shut down upon the farmer, he now intends to shut down on the United States and take us into the League of Nations by way of the World Court, where a majority of foreign judges may clamp down on our traditions, our liberties, and aspirations of free men.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] yesterday told us of the attitude and quoted the words of Presidents up to the time of Wilson. Not a President, beginning with the Father of his Country, to whom Senator JOHNSON referred as "forgotten men", but was opposed to our entangling ourselves in foreign alliances.

We elected a President for a second term because he "kept us out of war." Today in my office there are something over 1,500 telegrams from citizens of my State urging me to vote against our going into the World Court, which is only another way of saying going into the League of Nations and not one for. I take it that these wires are due directly to the tremendous influence of that great American, Father Coughlin. After the people voted to stay out of the war, within a month after Wilson's inauguration we were taken into the war.

It is of more than passing interest to note that attempts to involve the United States in European entanglements did not begin until the administration of Woodrow Wilson. Up to that time the United States was a debtor nation, although it was rapidly approaching the creditor stage, which was reached when Europe went to war with itself and was compelled to purchase almost all its needed materials from the United States.

England, France, and Italy realizing that they were about to be defeated by the Germans, set about creating in the United States propaganda bureaus for the purpose of drawing this country into the war on their side. These bureaus were set up in Washington and large cities of the country, and within a year they were flooding the country with arguments why the United States should enter the war on their side. The height of this propaganda was reached just before the second election of Mr. Wilson, and Mr. Wilson (very Rooseveltish) printed a campaign book and was reelected on the promise that he would keep us out of the war, but immediately yielding to the international bankers, he declared war on Germany and the United States for the first time in its history was plunged into European entanglements.

We know we won the war for England, France, and Italy, but we won more than that; we also won financial supremacy of the world. England, France, and Italy, knowing this, instead of disbanding their propaganda bureaus in the United States, turned them into League of Nations press agencies. Knowing they could not defeat us at arms, they decided on intrigue, because they were determined to wrest from the United States the financial supremacy which the war had given it. The average citizen knows considerable about this propaganda. He has been getting it for breakfast, lunch, and dinner. These press agencies coined the slogan, "Be broad—be internationalists." We have read, seen, and heard this slogan for more than 15 years, and now we hear it not only from the League of Nations press agents but right here in the Senate of the United States.

Woodrow Wilson, whose failing health had resulted in a changed mental state, was taken to Europe, feted, and dined. He was taken up on the mountain and shown the League of Nations, and, we are lead to believe, promised he would be made its first chairman if he would rope the United States into this European mess. They told him by being made chairman of the League he would in reality be "king of the world", and Wilson had illusions of grandeur. So they made Wilson the disciple of the League and sent him back to the United States to fool the people of this country into this European trap. The League is controlled by England through the fact that England has 8 votes to our 2, and should we enter this foreign body England would be placed in the same position toward the United States as she was when the United States was one of her colonies. In other words, without a war—which England could not possibly win—England was getting back her American Colonies. It was a clever trick and Wilson was led into the trap. We were following in the footsteps of Washington, but our President's heels were where the toes of Washington used to be.

Everyone knows what happened. Wilson came back to the United States and declared he was going to take the stump to defeat every Senator who would not agree to vote for these foreign entanglements. It is sad to relate what happened but it must be as a warning to those who would thoughtlessly abandon our traditions. Wilson's first speech was to be at Colorado Springs. He reached his destination. He began his tirade asking his hearers to defeat those Senators who would not vote to put the United States into the League of Nations. You remember what happened. In the midst of that speech he was struck dumb and had to be carried from the platform. This was his first and last speech for the League of Nations. And I believe that God still rules even though ambitious men may be beset with illusions of grandeur. The United States is not going to be destroyed from within or without and I believe it is because we have been an honest Nation giving of our store to all nations in need and offering a haven of refuge to those oppressed of other nations and I say in all seriousness and sincerity I think God is still greater than Mr. Roosevelt, and I firmly believe the spirit of God will be awakened in the breasts of enough Senators here today to defeat this international conniving to destroy the United States though it may honestly seem to those who have been misled, a good thing, but the Good Book tells us, "Beware of evil, appearing as a cunning fox, a roaring lion, or an angel of light."

We were implored by the same nations that now repudiate their debts to us and call us Uncle Shylock and Uncle Sham; they told us they were on their last legs, and asked us to come in and save them. They cried, "Help us, America, or we sink."

So we went into the war and spent $42,000,000,000, besides the twelve billion we loaned them. We raised 4,000,000 men, 2,000,000 of whom were shipped across the sea, and if it had not been for our boys that war never would have been won by the Allies. It was the Americans who won the war. That war was won because those boys who won it grew up here in a country where men can grow souls and where liberty, or some semblance of it, still remains, despite the ambitions of a dictator. For 3½ years that war had been going on and it was a stalemate. Troops of opposite sides would dig themselves in and there remain. Only now and then, when the Germans made an attack, would the war be on.

I was in Paris when Paris was moving out because the French thought there was no resisting the German Army that was steadily marching on toward Paris. The German Army had secured a great hill, had set its guns there, had cleared the road for miles ahead, and was coming on, five German divisions, headed by the Crown Prince, with the Prussian Guard as his escort, at the rate of 5 or 6 miles a day as steadily as clockwork. The French were retreating. German patrols were captured within 6 miles of Paris. Then Foch, thinking to avail himself of the man power that had come over from the United States, but having no idea that the soldiers in the American Army would make very good soldiers, picked up four regiments, the Fifth and Sixth Marines, and a couple of other regiments, loaded them into trucks, and forwarded them to the front to meet the German Army that was coming on and that no one thought could be stopped. There the American regiments were unloaded in the mud, and at break of morning 15,000 Americans met five German divisions and turned them back. The history of the world was changed. That action brought in its ultimate end victory for the Allies; it gave them the victory and gave them the spoils of the war. Yet today the nations of Europe who were our allies will not even pay the little debt which is owed the United States and the money for which was raised by the people of this country.

These American soldiers, raised in a free country, did not fear to die. The European soldier is a good soldier, but he cannot meet death without company; he has got to have the elbow of his companion next to him; he has got to hear the tread of the soldier behind him and to see the form of the other one in front in order to die; but the American soldier does not fear to die alone; and it was because of that that those five German divisions were stopped. Our boys met the enemy. They were green; they were raw; they were not soldiers in the sense perhaps that European countries know soldiers; but they were men who did not fear to die. They spread out 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 feet apart; and, taking, advantage of rock and tree or whatever cover was afforded, they made their stand; they fought and they died by the hundreds, but they turned back that horde. So victory came to the Allies because of 15,000 Americans, born in a country where liberty was their birthright, where they could discuss this question or that question with their neighbors, where they could read newspapers not censored, in which every question and every phase of every question was taken up. They had grown to be men; they had grown souls.

Oh, Mr. President, that is why God reared this country of the United States, so as to have a place where men could grow souls and give an example to the rest of the world how to grow and how to come near akin to God, Himself.

This country was made by the brave hearts that came across here in the early days when it took courage. Courage,

Senators, is an attribute of God. This country was built upon the teachings of Christ, so that men could be free; and from its beginning down to the time when Wilson took us into the World War, we never thought of entangling ourselves with the hatreds and ill feelings of Europe. Beginning with that period we have gone down steadily.

At the close of the World War we were perhaps the greatest creditor nation of the world; but, Mr. President, where virtue is, there vice will stain her spotless purity; where liberty reigns, there tyranny and sordid treason seek to undermine her throne and trail her fallen emblems in the dust. Foes within and foes without threaten; foreign jealousies, the corruption of our trusted servants, vice, social discord, are endangering the treasures of liberty's temple; but as surely as the sun rises will it shine upon millions and millions of her defenders, upon the same kind of boys who dared bare their breasts over there in a foreign country to win the World War for our Allies.

Senators, it is not in the shedding of blood that today's victory is to be won; it is by an understanding of what the United States is. Why should it have gone into the World War? It never should have been taken into the war. There was no need for our going into the war; but in we went, and the result has been catastrophe after catastrophe; and catastrophe is here today. We were taken into the war, and now the effort is made to tie us up with the dire results of that war.

We had sense enough, due to the brave men who served in the Senate at the time, some of whom are still here today, such as the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and others, who are no longer here, such as Jim Reed, of Missouri, and Lodge, of Massachusetts, and Moses, of New Hampshire, to keep out of the League of Nations. They were God's instruments. They stood like Ajax defying the lightning, like Leonidas at the pass of Thermopylae, and headed off our being dragged into the League of Nations. And the fight that that old guard of our country's virtue has put up here in the last few days will still, I believe, be upheld by the hand of God.

Mr. President, why forsake the policies that have proved to be of great value and have made us the greatest Nation in the world? Talk about getting into the League of Nations, getting into the World Court, and increasing our foreign trade!

As you know, Mr. President, our foreign trade today amounts to only 2½ percent of our entire production, and in our palmiest days it never amounted to more than 5 percent. What will foreign trade bring us if we regain the 5 percent and lose the soul, the traditions, the ideals that God planted here in our country, so that we might hold aloft a beacon light to the rest of the world until other nations have grown to our understanding of what the Master taught, "Peace on earth and good will to men"?

In my opinion, Mr. President, the depression in this country could be ended within 60 days if we would live within our means; if we would make our own people make the goods and raise the food that we consume ourselves. Ninety-five percent of our normal production consumed at home would put us on the prosperous street immediately. We are dingling and dangling about going over to Europe and running the affairs of Europe. We ought to have been taught in the last war that European promises mean nothing, that entanglements over there mean nothing but trouble and travail to us.

Do you know that there are 37,000 foreign agents all known to the War Department Intelligence Bureau—37,000 foreign agents here to deprive us of our independence? They are paid by foreign money. They are here. They are all for our going into the World Court. They are all for our joining the League of Nations, where we would have 1 vote and Great Britain, 8. They are all here, 37,000 of them, and their special mission is to spread propaganda over this country to get us to reduce the tariffs. They want our markets.

Why, today, my friends, if an embargo were put on the blackstrap molasses that is being shipped in here, that makes our commercial alcohol, and, I fear, some of our other alcohol—if an embargo were put on that which would shut it out, it would be said, "Oh, but that would shut out the Astors and the Rockefellers and those fellows down there in Cuba! That would not be just right." If we shut them out, there would be no need of plowing under corn and plowing under other crops, because the farmer of this country could raise corn, and we would make our alcohol from it, and he could get a good price, at least a dollar a bushel, for his corn, and there would be no need of plowing under corn, killing pigs, and doing these other things that today have destroyed what market we did have.

Today coal is being shipped in from England, potatoes from Ireland, and just recently the tariff on sugar from Cuba has been reduced, and the tariff on potatoes, from 75 cents to 30 cents. Iron ingots are shipped in here from India, and we collect a duty at least six times less than England demands from this same India, which is a part of her own empire. The richest iron mines in the world in Minnesota are lying idle. Belgium agents are here today, right now, dickering with our State Department to put our glass and lace industries out of business. Only a short time ago I read in the paper 22,000 men were thrown out of employment of making glass in West Virginia, and still we give our President the absolute power, unconstitutional though it may be, to make treaties in his own right, and reduce our tariff 50 percent without asking even, if you please, from the representatives of the people. No wonder President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, says that there are a million more men out of employment today than when this administration started. Nearly 12,000,000 men out of employment, and we are continuing to buy our stuff in foreign markets. Why not put our own people to work raising the food and making the things we need and sell them to our own people? We could use today 97½ percent of our own production right here at home, but that would not earn the salary of the 37,000 foreign agents in this country.

Their business in Washington is to break down tariff barriers and force foreign goods made by cheap foreign labor into the markets of the United States. Every one of these alien-minded propagandists is openly advocating press censorship. The reason is not strange. The last two sessions of Congress voted secret tariff hearings and virtual dictatorship powers to Mr. Roosevelt. In the past these foreign emissaries were dependent for their success on the reaction they were able to develop on the people of the United States. But since we now have a complete dictatorship, it is no longer necessary to take the public into their confidence before securing decisions favorable to foreign countries. The only fly in the ointment for these foreign allies is the fact that the newspapers still have the freedom for criticizing un-American and unfair decisions. Hence the press censorship is a very necessary weapon.

It is impossible to list all the activities of these European and Asiatic agents who are attempting to destroy the United States by this form of intrigue. A few examples explain very simply their methods. The representatives of the French lace industry have about succeeded in closing all our lace factories so that lace made by French and Belgian peasants in sweatshops may flood this country. More than 50,000 persons dependent on this industry in the United States will shortly be unemployed.

A corps of highly paid secret agents is now employed by foreign molasses interests in holding open our ports to the entry of their blackstrap. If Mr. Roosevelt would stop the importation of this product, corn would sell at $1 per bushel, regardless of the amount we produce. In other words, the millions of barrels of industrial alcohol now made from blackstrap would be produced from corn. Another group representing foreign sugar interests has succeeded in blocking the production of sugar in the United States. The United States produces but 20 percent of the sugar it consumes; and were we to take our excess wheat land and plant it in sugar beets, we could retain $200,000,000 which we send each year to foreign countries for sugar and be further assured that there would be no overproduction of wheat.

While our farmers starve, another contingent of foreign manipulators is shipping millions of pounds of frozen and canned beef and pork into the United States. Incidentally, Mr. Roosevelt, who wants to "save" the farmers, has been purchasing the meat for the C. C. C. camps from the Argentine Republic. By the way, I understand the President wants to increase this C. C. C. camp to a million men. Three hundred thousand of them today are costing $100,000,000 more than the standing Army.

A legion of foreign agents is working night and day in Washington destroying our industry and our agriculture. We are importing cotton from British Egypt, gunny cloth from British India, blistered copper from Canada and Africa, while our copper mines remain idle—china, glassware, shoes, electric-light globes, and every other conceivable article of manufacture. Milk and cream come from Canada, canned tomatoes from Italy, green peas from Mexico, hides and cheese from Australia. Surely this army of 37,000 foreign agents needs the protection of a press censorship which they pretty well got; and if they can get us into the League of Nations by way of the World Court, they will have furthered their designs upon our liberties and our market.

We loaned $12,000,000,000 to some 12 or 15 countries over there. The money was gathered from the people of this country; bonds were sold them; the Government borrowed the people's money, agreeing to pay it back in 25 years with interest of from 3 and 3½ to 4 and 4½ percent, and I think in some cases as high as 5 percent, but the average was about 4 percent. This money was loaned to European countries. One billion three hundred million dollars was loaned to France after the armistice. Yet they tell us, "We cannot pay you a cent." Although France has loaned something like $17,000,000,000 since the war to other nations, yet she cannot pay the United States one penny.

Finland is the only honest nation that seems to exist over there. Yet we want to go in and entangle ourselves with that kind of folk. If we do, we are "suckers"; if we do, we have lost all the brains we ever had. Why go in over there? Let us take care of our affairs at home; let us build up our own markets; let us put an embargo on everything that is made in the United States and sell it to our own people; and to hell with Europe and the rest of the debt-canceling nations. Keep out of there; keep out of there. Why go in? Why go in and tangle us up more? We loaned Europe $15,000,000,000 privately.

Oh, we thought, we will get that back. Tell me the international bankers are not interested. They think if they can get us into the League of Nations along with the World Court by this trapdoor, they will get that back. Why are we going in? To cancel the public debts they owe us!

There is brewing today another war. That was affirmed by the distinguished leader of the majority in his statement in the newspapers when he came back from Europe last summer. This war, as we now know, and as the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] said the other day, was brewing even when a certain foreign representative stood in the Senate and spoke to us, his pockets bulging with secret treaties, and yet he was begging us, for God's sake, to come and help them. And we helped them and won their victory. Out of that victory was constructed—because of the secret, selfish, stealing agreements entered into previous—and during the war—a hideous, leering monster of future wars—the Versailles Treaty. Out of that monster grew the League of Nations, and out of the League of Nations comes the World Court, part and parcel of it. Can the leopard change its spots? Can any good come out of this fraud, hypocrisy, deceit, lies, injustices, selfish promise-breaking, ungodlike conglomeration of hate and jealousies?

So we went in to make the world safe for democracy. We made it free for dictatorship and tyranny and bureaucracies all over the world, including the United States. We have 44 bureaucracies of our own and 13 commissions today. That makes 57 varieties of Heinz's pickles that we are in. [Laughter.]

Bureaucracies? We have 75 volumes of laws made by some dinky little clerk in some back room somewhere, 75 volumes of laws, and 5,000 laws on top of those 75 volumes of law, and yet our Constitution says that this is a country of law.

That is one of the reasons we should go into the World Court, to tangle the people up a little more, to go in and help the Rothschilds, the Rockefellers, the Deterdings of the Dutch Shell Oil, to create a greater chaos than we have today so that the dictatorship aimed at cannot be missed and will have the assurance and backing of that foreign element so well served. Yes, we should get in over there and help the big international bankers grind us down some more, destroy our standard of living, destroy us, and take away from us, regiment us, lockstep us into a poverty-stricken, humble, cringing manhood and womanhood such as exist in Europe. We should be "raised" to the high level of the peasantry of Europe.

Why did Europe bring about that war? They wanted to get rid of Germany, to get possession of the business of the world she had. They got rid of her, but today there is growing another nation that is taking the place of Germany. That is Japan. Japan is going into every market of the British Empire. She is coming in here. Everywhere there is a little crack open; like the roots of the trees, she digs in. They want us to join the World Court so we shall be a part of the League of Nations, so that we can loan the money to Russia perhaps to whip Japan or possibly to whip her ourselves, because they will not do so. That has been their method all down through history, to get somebody else to do their fighting, to get somebody else to furnish the money.

We loaned $12,000,000,000 to these nations of Europe. We gave it to them freely. We gave it to them when their backs were to the wall. We shipped our boys over there; and for every boy we shipped over there on English ships, we paid England $140 to $180, and this was to fight England's battles. We paid cash all the way through. It has been said on the floor of the Senate, though I do not recall who said it, that we made money out of the war in reference to France.

I am told on good authority that the exchange between France and the United States is something over $100,000,000 in France's favor, and that includes the war debt she still owes us. That is to say we furnished her goods for the amount of the debt, but we bought from her and paid cash for $100,000,000 more than her debt to us.

In addition to paying England these amounts by way of cash, we loaned her $4,715,000,000. Then after the war we got together and made a settlement. We threw off everything and gave them everything they wanted and finally accepted their proposition, which was to pay 3.7 percent over a period of 62 years and the principal would be forgiven. That was the contract we made.

We loaned France something over $5,000,000,000—I think it was $5,700,000,000—and we deducted from that over $1,000,000,000, although we had loaned her $1,000,000,000 after the armistice. That debt was finally settled at $4,400,000,000. That included a great amount of supplies we had sent over there. At the close of the war those supplies were in France, and we did not want to ship them back, so we sold them to France at 10 percent of the value and took her notes without interest.

It is a peculiar thing, and it only shows which way the wind is blowing, but it shows the understanding over there and how far we can go and how far we can trust that kind of folks. The agreement was that none of those goods should come back into this country, but should be kept in France and should be given to the French people. Hardly had we returned home when shiploads of shoes and clothes of all sorts from those supplies began to appear in this country. Congress hurriedly had to enact a law prohibiting such shipments coming into this country. That is how they keep their word.

The $4,400,000,000 debt of France was settled by our throwing off something over $1,700,000,000. That is what France wanted. They said they would pay 2.17 percent interest on that amount for a period of 62 years, and we said their debts would then be forgiven. Those payments were very low at first, in order that they might be able to meet them. We wanted to place no burden upon anyone.

There was Belgium that owed us something less than half a billion dollars, and wet settled with her. She was to pay 2.1 percent. There was Italy, with a debt of $3,150,000,000, and we settled with her for an interest rate of 1.1 percent. The average percent for which we settled these foreign debts to be paid over a period of 62 years was about 2 percent, and still our Government was paying on the average of 4, or perhaps 4½ percent to the people of this country, and in 25 years the principal must be paid. It is costing us in interest alone nearly $800,000,000 a year.

No wonder we are in bad shape here. No wonder our Budget leaks. No wonder that somebody ought to stand up here and insist upon our rights. Why should the taxpayers of this country, burdened as they are, be cheated out of the payment of these legitimate debts? We gave our Allies 125,000 lives, and $42,000,000,000 was spent in their behalf. Why should not they pay the little debt remaining, made easy by the payment of a small rate of interest over a period of 62 years? Yet they default and say, "We will not pay it." They say, "We will get you fellows into the League of Nations or into the World Court, and we will wheedle you out of it all then."

That is why we are going into the World Court. That is the purpose today in getting us into the World Court, to rob us some more and to make us fight their battles. They are going to see to it that the hand is laid upon our shoulder to take care of Japan in the coming war. Japan must be throttled. She has to be floored, according to Europe, or the commerce of the world, the manufactures of the world, will be going to Japan. I notice in the morning paper Japan is making automobiles, and is making them in quantity production. She is going into the business for keeps. Therefore we have to go into the League and we have to go into the World Court and we have to loan money to Russia, or else fight the battle ourselves.

Oh, my friends, let us take to heart the experience of the war. That is why the 2,000,000 boys who went across the sea are opposed, to the last man, to our going into the World Court. They were over there, and they know. Those 15,000 boys in the troops going to the front were met by French troops and were told, "Go back. Go back. You are crazy. Sure death is ahead." But our boys went ahead and met and turned back a German army of five divisions. It was the beginning of the end. In 6 months our boys cleaned up and the war was won, because they grew up in a free country, God's country, a country reared upon the teachings of Christ.

Senators will all remember the story of the time of the advance, when the American salient was away out in front. The Allies on either side of the salient, driven into the heart of the enemy by their advance, were dismayed. The French commander tried to hold the Americans back. He called an American officer before him and "put him on the carpet." The American defended himself by saying, "How in hell do you expect me to hold them back when the whole German Army cannot hold them back?" [Laughter.]

That is the American soldier. That is the boy who is being pulled down by this administration. He is the fellow the administration jumped on first. It was a Democratic administration that conscripted him and put him in there in the first place.

When the squeeze came from the very war they put us into, the first thing the administration did was to cut their compensation, and now it refuses to give these boys $1.25 a day bonus. Each boy was to get $1.25 a day for the time spent over there. It does not make any difference whether we pay it now or pay it 10 years from now—we owe it. Why not pay it when it will do the thing we want done, right now? It would be far better than spending the money in the silly way we have been. But the administration said, "We will take it away from him now to balance the Budget." The sum of $400,000,000 was pulled out of the soldier in that way. They succeeded in pulling out $400,000,000, and yet they are paying something over $750,000,000 interest on the debt that our noble Allies have agreed to pay, and still will not pay. They cut the soldiers' compensation, deprived him of his bonus, and now shake hands with the nations that have defaulted in the payment of our money that would more than take care of these financial troubles. Yet we intend to go into the World Court, we intend to go into the League of Nations, to allow them to kick us around some more.

God help us that somewhere and somehow the thought may be in the hearts of men who will vote here today that they may know that their country is at stake and will stay out of these damnable international alliances that every President down to Wilson told us to keep out of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). The time of the Senator from Minnesota on the resolution has expired. He has 15 minutes on the pending reservation.

Mr. SCHALL. Very well; I shall take my time on the pending reservation.

I was a delegate to the Republican convention of 1920. I had the great honor to be invited to second the nomination of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] for the Presidency. It is too bad that he could not have been prevailed upon to accept the Vice Presidency. It was offered to him. He could have had it just by saying "yes."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has pending an amendment to the Constitution to do away with the electoral college. It should be passed. Our conventions meet on a strip of "no man's land" over which neither State nor Federal Government has any control. That is true of all Democratic conventions as well as of Republican conventions.

Our party nominees for President should be named by the voters. Had this been done, Senator JOHNSON would have been nominated and elected in 1920.

Any political convention that has a chance to elect a President attracts the foreign eye. I was told that at the 1920 convention there was enough foreign money present to pay off the German indemnity.

Since the war foreign countries have taken an extraordinary interest in the nominations of our Presidents in both Democratic and Republican Parties. Our present President up to the time that he took the Governor's chair in New York was a member of the board of directors of the International Bankers Association; and speaking of the governorship of New York, there was $80,000,000 in the state treasury when he came in, and when he left there was a deficit of $90,000,000. He is some spender.

I heard two Negroes quarreling in that convention of 1920. One of them had received $3,000 and the other one only $2,500, and the fellow who got $2,500 was sore. [Laughter.]

My friends, there is too much foreign influence here. It goes right into our political conventions, and through preconvention promises follows through to our country's detriment.

The defaulters and their appointees constitute the main and controlling body of this Permanent Court of International Justice to which, by our ratification, we are to subject our future international destiny. When we vote to ratify this League protocol, we vote that future questions of international justice involving the United States shall be settled in this Court of defaulters—and we bind ourselves in advance to abide by their adjudications.

We vote to submit our international questions to the adjudication of a European cartel, or conspiracy, that already has robbed us of $12,000,000,000.

If the League signatories are false to the extent that they default on their bonds, of what value are their treaties and their protocols? Are their protocols worth more than their bonds? What permanent justice can we hope to receive from those who have swindled us out of $12,000,000,000? Having had that many billion dollars' worth of experience, how much more do we want?

Shall we authorize this crime by ratifying the League protocol? Shall we shake hands across the sea so far as concerns the past war and war debts, and proceed to lay the foundation for another European war bund that may destroy civilization—except that remnant of it that is represented in war profits and war lords?

Finally I have just one question to ask of each individual Senator before he records his vote on this resolution to ratify the League's protocol. Have you any doubt that if the people of your State had the casting vote from your seat, they would overwhelmingly vote "no"? Is there any question that if this protocol were submitted to the people of the United States in the form of a referendum, they would vote "no" by a majority of perhaps 10 to 1?

Have we government by the people at this hour or government by Europe and the international bankers?

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to reannounce the absence of certain Senators, and give the reasons therefor announced by me on the previous roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the reservation of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this afternoon my friend the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] spoke about the Bolivian-Paraguayan War. I am sorry he is not in the Chamber at this time. I will ask to have a telephone message sent to him asking him to come here.

The Senator from Kentucky, with some participation from the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], has just fallen into error relative to what caused the war between Bolivia and the Republic of Paraguay. Some of my statements relative to the matter have been challenged by the Senator.

On yesterday the Senator from Kentucky said that the award made by President Rutherford B. Hayes did not bind Bolivia. The Senator from Arkansas observed that his understanding was that the League of Nations had expressly excluded from the controversy that part of the territory in the Chaco that had been awarded to Paraguay.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] was entirely correct when he said that an arbitration between Argentina and Paraguay did not bind Bolivia. It is also true that the League of Nations, being one of a great number of agencies that have tried to compose the controversy, issued a map expressly showing that the territory comprehended in the Hayes award should be excluded from any arbitration between Bolivia and Paraguay. The map issued by the Chaco Commission—a commission appointed by the League of Nations—showed that the purpose was to exclude from arbitration the territory awarded by President Hayes. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Louisiana has seen the map.

Mr. LONG. I have never seen the map.

Mr. ROBINSON. The map which I now exhibit to the Senator is one which was submitted with the report of the Commission. It shows the Hayes zone excluded from arbitration. It shows the zone occupied by Paraguayan police, and another zone occupied by Bolivian police.

In the Senator's time, if he will permit me, I will say that since the Paraguay-Bolivian controversy has not been referred to the Permanent Court of International Justice, and as the Court cannot take jurisdiction of it unless the respective countries shall so refer it, I am utterly at a loss to understand how this controversy can be settled by the Senate, especially while considering the resolution of adherence to the World Court protocols.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I take it, then, that the League of Nations are as much confused as the Senator's statement would indicate. They do not know whether or not they are going in there to annul the Hayes award. There is a map issued by them in which they say that the part included in the Hayes award is not to be affected.

Mr. ROBINSON rose.

Mr. LONG. Let me say, before I yield further, that this was was not started by the Bolivian Government as such. This war was precipitated by the flotation in the United States of a loan in the sum of $68,000,000. After this loan of $68,000,000 had been floated in the United States there was an inquiry before a committee of the Senate in which the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] developed that $5,000,000 of that $68,000,000 had been loaned expressly for the purpose of paying Vickers & Co. for war materials that had been furnished to Bolivia.

It developed that, while they were not floating these loans in the United States for the purpose of buying war materials, they did float loans to pay the Bolivian Government's creditors for whatever war materials had been previously purchased. In other words, all the provisions of international law that prohibited the Department of State of the United States of America from floating loans in the United States in order to encourage war were violated by the State Department here in Washington, if we simply regard that floating them in order to give the Government's money to pay for war materials is the same thing as floating them for the purpose of buying war materials. That was brought out.

They started this war after the Standard Oil influences had palmed off upon the people of the United States $68,000,000 of bonds, which are now in default—bonds that will never be paid, the interest on which probably never will be paid—after they had put all over the United States bonds that are no longer good for anything but wall paper. Then comes a pronouncement from the President of Bolivia.

What was that pronouncement? He went before the Bolivian Congress and said, "We have found immense quantities of oil here in Bolivian soil." Let us admit that it is on Bolivian soil. Right now I will not argue that. He said, "We have found quantities of oil on Bolivian soil, but", he said, "it is impossible to get this oil to the deep water. The only way that we can reach the deep water is to go either through Argentina or through Paraguay, and", said he "we cannot go through Argentina."

Everybody knows why they could not go through Argentina. It was too large a country for them to try to go through. "But", said he, "we can reach the deep water by going south, not to the Pilcomayo, but by going south to the River Paraguay", which the Hayes award, Mr. President, shut them out of, lock, stock, and barrel; where they had no right to go. The war was declared by reason of the message delivered to the Bolivian Congress by the President of the Republic of Bolivia that they had to have a right-of-way through the territory down to the Paraguay River. Why? The River Paraguay is about 15 feet of water, whereas the Pilcomayo might run anywhere from 5 to 9 feet. That is the reason they had to go into the Hayes zone rather than to exclude it.

My friend from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has been reading, no doubt, some of the Sunday-school lessons that I used to read—Standard Oil boiler-plate lessons.

Mr. President, the good people of this country need someone to protect them who has had some barroom experience. It has gotten to be a positive fact that until some man with barroom experience protects these Sunday-school classes they will find themselves marching under the standards of the Power Trust and the Standard Oil Co. for the balance of their lives. They have got to get outside help.

The Rockefeller interests have subsidized every theological seminary in the United States today. There is hardly a theological seminary to be found in the United States of America which is not directly or indirectly receiving money from one of these Rockefeller foundations or agents. There has never been a doubt that everything put out by John D. Rockefeller, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., the Standard Oil Co., the Rockefeller Foundation, or any other kind of Standard Oil ointment, has brought back to their coffers in return for those kinds of alms 15 to 1,500 times what they have ever given out.

One of their agents came to me down in Louisiana a number of years ago and said, "Governor LONG, we think we can get the Rockefeller Foundation to give the Louisiana State University some money." I said, "That is very fine, but you just tell them to keep it. They are going to give it without their having to send it to me. I will have some other way of doing that." And every time any little old conflict comes up you will find that the Power Trust or the Standard Oil Co. or these various and sundry foundations, with the announced purposes of promoting peace and promoting public good, have been haltering the American people and taking them from 1,000 to 2,000 to 3,000 miles away to break the necks and to cut the throats of the American people and to drink their blood to fatten themselves on it. So now they come here with this World Court.

My friend from Kentucky this morning said that he would not say that all the officers of the Standard Oil Co. are crooks. I do not say so either. But I want to tell you, unless they are careful they are getting close to it. [Laughter.] I do not say they are all crooks; no. He said he would not say that all the laboring people that work for them are crooks. Well, I would not say so, either, but unless they watch they are getting closer to it by working for Standard Oil Co. if that company can make them so.

Senators heard about this citizens' army in Louisiana that surrendered the other day, Mr. President. It was said that there was an army of outraged citizens of about 50 who were captured down there. I send to the desk the names of 34 of them, all employees of the Standard Oil Co., that they had armed with shotguns down there defying the law.

I send a list of the names to the desk and ask to have the clerk read the list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The list will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

H. Lee, M. P. Payne, D. E. Kirk, E. G. Crochet, Grady A. Turner, Edward J. Crochet, Julius Brown, E. L. Dickson, W. H. Mercer, A. F. H. Cavell, J. T. Wilson, Thomas O. Day, A. J. Costell, W. E. Foil, L. E. Jones, Jack M. Beechem, Louis Kelley, H. J. Ferguson, H. D. Pritchard, T. H. St. Amant, Jerry Price, Lee Pritchard, John W. Perkins, T. B. Landry, C. H. Amacker, A. S. Lebeau, J. B. Barman, Allen Fairbanks, E. R. Graham, E. B. Herron, E. E. Lear, A. P. Babin, and C. V. Fridge.

Mr. LONG. That, Mr. President, is done just in order that my friend from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], and others who feel like he does, may know that the employees of this corporation are gun-won whenever necessary for the aggression and aggrandizement of the Standard Oil Co., and they cannot help themselves.

With regard to the political influence of the Standard Oil Co., I read from an article that has come to me from a source which I believe to be absolutely reliable, from the best information that I have been able to get:

The political influence of the Standard Oil Co. in Bolivia is decisive, for we find that the economical life of the nation is practically in their hands; they have control of the stock of the central bank—

No one can borrow money there except he borrows it from a bank of which the Standard Oil Co. owns a majority of the stock. Almost as bad as the United States in that regard—they have control of the stock of the central bank, and the most weighty politicians are their lawyers and employees, such as Senor Casto Rojas, actual Minister to Buenos Aires; Carlos Calvo, ex-Minister of Foreign Relations, and the present Minister to Rio Janeiro.

Lawyer for the Standard Oil Co. sent to Bolivia as the Minister to Brazil—lawyer for the Standard Oil Co.

The ex-President Baustista Saavedra and the Dictator Siles were also retained by the Standard Oil; also the Dr. Daniel Sanchez Bustamente (recently deceased), of enormous influence in the international policy of Bolivia.

As is known, Bolivia does not need nor will she need a port on the banks of the Paraguay River.

For this reason the Lieutenant (Bolivian) Reynold, who fell in Boqueron, wrote in his diary of the war—

This soldier who fell on the battlefield, there was found in his diary—

Bolivia is being bled in the Chaco for the interests of a very rich dame, the Standard Oil Co.

That was in the diary found on the person of one of those who fell in the Bolivian Army.

Mr. President, I do not wish to prevent a vote. I am ready for a vote on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana on the reservation has expired.

The question is on the adoption of the reservation offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I feel that a word should be said about this reservation in all seriousness. It provides:

That the adherence to the World Court by the United States is upon the express condition that awards which may have been made by the President and other officers of the United States under due authority of the United States or as mediators or conciliators shall in no manner be affected or modified.

If we should adopt a reservation of this type, we would, of course, be doing that which could not be done in any government wherever law and order prevail. The reservation is so broad in its nature as to suggest that actually we try to put an inhibition upon a court in regard to past decisions which that very court has made. That is the spirit of this reservation. Of course, the reservation has no place here, and I think it is apparent to all that not much more than that need to be said in regard to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I support the position taken by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. The effort in the reservation is to prevent any readjustment of any question that has been submitted to arbitration, and I do not think the Senate wishes to put itself in the attitude that, in going into a court, if it should be found necessary to revise an award the court should not be permitted to exercise jurisdiction. I am ready for the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reservation offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG].

The reservation was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution of adherence.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I suggest that we next consider the reservation offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], as follows:

Resolved further, as a part of this act of ratification, That the United States approve the protocol and statute hereinabove mentioned with the understanding that recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other state or states can be had only by agreement thereto through general or special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I should like to speak on this reservation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the Senator offer that reservation?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Does the Senator from California offer it?

Mr. JOHNSON. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the reservation is not as yet before the Senate and will not be until it is offered by some Member of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Then I wish to offer it as a reservation for immediate consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is the Senator's right to offer it. I do not offer it. It is his right to offer it, or the right of any Senator on the other side to offer it, but let it be understood whence it comes, and that I do not now offer it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. May I propound an inquiry to the Senator from California?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Louisiana for that purpose?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As I understand, this is a little backwater by the administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reservation offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, as a part of this act of ratification, That the United States approve the protocol and statute hereinabove mentioned with the understanding that recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the settlement of differences between the United States and any oher state or states can be had only by agreement thereto through general or special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I offer this as a resolution to be added to the resolution of adherence, and to be added also to the reservation offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. In 1926, when the five reservations, which have been here discussed many times, were attached to the protocol of adhesion, there were attached to those reservations two resolutions. One was the resolution which we have already accepted which has been offered now by the Senator from Michigan. The other was the resolution which I am now suggesting, which was presented to the Senate by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Those Senators who listened to the reasoning which I used in my discussion of the World Court will remember that I made the point that the Senate of the United States had already decided to adhere to the International Court of Justice with five reservations, and that those reservations were all accepted by the other nations with the exception of a portion of the fifth reservation.

It was also pointed out at that time that the pending resolutions to the reservation were adopted at the same time the reservations were adopted and that those resolutions were not replied to by the signatory states; that those resolutions were not noted by the signatory states; that those resolutions, in fact, should not have been noted by the signatory states, for they were resolutions dealing entirely with our own policy, entirely with our own method of procedure in regard to submitting cases to the Court.

Therefore the other day when the reservation suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was under consideration, I did not support it. That reservation carried with it not entirely the same words contained in the pending reservation, but much of the same theory; that is, that the Senate of the United States should maintain and should keep its treaty-making power and should be concerned with those matters that have to do with entering into agreements with foreign countries.

In theory the pending reservation in actual governmental theory probably is not so sound as it might be, but not to present the reservation at this time would be inconsistent with the stand the United States has previously taken; it would be inconsistent with the stand the Senate of the United States has heretofore taken. We decided to adhere in a certain way. It is in that way that I should like to continue to adhere. We decided to adhere in accordance with the spirit of two resolutions, and I suggest now that it is right for us to reincorporate the spirit of those two resolutions, and to reincorporate them in the very words in which we used them previously if it will make for a better understanding. We are merely doing that which we decided to do in 1926.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. What effect, if adopted, will this resolution have upon the advisory jurisdiction of the Court?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. This reservation, if I may answer the Senator, as I view it, will have no effect at all upon the advisory jurisdiction of the Court.

Mr. BORAH. The reservation does not in any way modify or change the full exercise of the advisory jurisdiction of the Court?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No, sir; in no way at all would it have that effect, as I understand. I do not think that it had that effect in 1926, and I do not think that it will today have that effect.

Mr. BORAH. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I believe that we shall face the nations of the world in a more consistent way if we show them that we are willing to stand by the resolutions which we have adopted in the past; and I wish to repeat that in standing by the resolutions which we have previously adopted we are merely standing by our own action.

Every man knows that under our scheme of government the President of the United States might lead us far toward war, and we might have to enter into war. Under the scheme of negotiating for peace, the President should not be limited in any degree but, Mr. President, when the question is a vital one and since we have already decided to meet this question in this way, I think it is but proper to offer this resolution and to have it incorporated as a part of our action if we shall adhere to the World Court.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. Did not the President say that he was opposed to this resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I know nothing about what the President has said, but I do not think that he would say that he was opposed to this resolution for the simple reason that it was a part of the negotiation and a part of the action of the Senate of the United States in 1926.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is going back to 1926 and proposes to adhere to the program of 1926 for the sake of consistency. What objection would the Senator have to recurring to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] yesterday, which proposed a reservation identical with the reservation of 1926, which would not permit action by the Court without the consent of the United States—not only over its objection but without its consent?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I assume, Mr. President, the action taken yesterday in the changing of the words "without the consent" to "over the objection" was a forward-looking action and not a backward-looking action at all; that it will make for better international relations and for better understanding between nations, and actually perfected the reservations as they were adopted in 1926.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reservation offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to the reservation proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. As stated by him, it is in form identical with the resolution adopted by the Senate in 1926. There is this distinction between the proposal on which we voted a few days ago, submitted by my friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and the pending reservation. That proposal required a two-thirds vote of the Senate in every case where a question was to be referred to the World Court. For instance, there might be numerous cases of a given class and not one of them could be submitted to the Court except by resolution of the Senate approved by a two-thirds vote, thus making, as I see it, the process cumbersome. The pending proposal is that, while a two-thirds vote of the Senate shall be required to submit cases to the Court, that end may be accomplished by either general or special treaties; so, if the Senate shall choose to do so, it may repeat its action in connection with international arbitration at the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague; it may provide, through treaties, for the consideration by the Court of cases without the necessity of coming to the Senate in every instance in which a case is to be referred to the Court.

The question was asked a moment ago by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] if the President had not stated himself as opposed to this proposition. It is not my understanding that such is the case. The President did oppose, and so announced, an arrangement by which the Senate could in every case proposed to be referred to the Permanent Court of International Justice interpose its objection, not by a majority but by a vote of one-third of the Senators plus one.

This arrangement is acceptable to the President. It will permit the President and the Senate to effect ratification of a treaty by which cases may be referred to the Court without a separate and special vote in the Senate on every occasion when it is proposed to refer a matter to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, it may aid us a little to get before us exactly the sequence of events in reference to this reservation and the one that was presented by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. When the World Court protocols were before the Foreign Relations Committee, two resolutions were presented to that committee for action, one by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and one by myself, both of which embraced the two resolutions that were attached to the accession to the Court of 1926. The roll was called in the Foreign Relations Committee upon both those resolutions, and the vote, as I recall it—and if I am in error I hope I may be corrected—upon that of the Senator from Michigan was 9 to 11, and the vote upon the resolution which I presented was 12 to 9, the vote in both instances being against the resolutions. Both were defeated by the Foreign Relations Committee. When the matter came into the Senate, I had proposed a series of reservations, embracing this and many others which are here upon the table, and the Senator from Michigan presented his reservation which had been defeated in the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will ask the Senator from California if it is not true that the ground stated in the committee on behalf of those who opposed the reservation was that there was no necessity for the reservation?

Mr. JOHNSON. As to the Vandenberg reservation, I think the Senator is correct. As to my reservation, the Senator from Arkansas said distinctly, as I recall, that under no circumstances could he permit that to be adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am correct in that, am I not?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is mistaken about it. I did say that I did not favor it and I did ask the committee to reject the reservation.

Mr. JOHNSON. But it was not upon the ground——

Mr. ROBINSON. The most that the Senator from California is attempting to say now is I was against the reservation in the committee and he was for it then.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. And that he is against the reservation in the Senate and I am now for it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; and let us ascertain the reason for the changes.

Mr. President, I have occupied a single attitude respecting the so-called "World Court" from the beginning to the end. I have avowed it upon the floor of the Senate, I have avowed it upon the hustings, and I have avowed it in every article I ever wrote. I am against the Court with or without reservations, and I never have deviated from that course in the slightest degree. It was remarked upon by the Senator from Arkansas in discussing the Norris reservation recently.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. The able Senator from California was recounting the amendments or reservations proposed before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. May I not recall to his mind that at the same time there was a reservation or proviso tendered by myself which sought to announce and intend that under no circumstances should either the matter of the Monroe Doctrine as an American policy or the matter of the immigration from European or Asiatic countries be in any wise taken into jurisdiction by the Court, and that also was defeated before the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. JOHNSON. Quite so; but when the Senator from Arkansas says he was against this reservation before the Foreign Relations Committee and is for it now, and that I was for it then and against it now——

Mr. ROBINSON. I say I make no objection to it now for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there any difference between that and the statement that the Senator is for it now?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think not any material difference. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. Then we are agreed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. The Senator was for it then and is against it now.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was for it then as a reservation to be annexed to this particular document, never concealing for a quarter of a second from any man—I do not care who he is—that it was my purpose in every way that I knew how to fight this particular entry into this particular pernicious contraption from abroad. I never have altered in any way, in any form, or in any manner that attitude in any degree.

Let us follow this out a moment. The other day there came before the Senate the reservation of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. That reservation was presented by him. It is in effect a reservation similar to the reservation which has been presented here today which originally I had printed. My reservation was printed with others first. His came subsequently, but he took up his first, as was appropriate, and presented it.

It was then stated upon the floor of the Senate in so many words, and it was stated to the press of the Nation that the President of the United States said that such a reservation was unconstitutional, that it invaded his prerogatives, and it was asserted here as well, although I do not know that that was a fact at all, that it was considered by him an offensive procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator will recall that I stated in my remarks on the Norris reservation that there are two limitations on the President's power to refer cases to arbitration to this Court, namely, first, if an appropriation is required, and, second, if a treaty is essential to effecting the settlement.

Mr. JOHNSON. What difference does that make? That does not alter the purport of what I have said at all. I have said that the President opposed the reservation because he asserted that it was unconstitutional and an invasion of his Presidential prerogatives. There was no question between us upon that, because that statement was made to the press of the Nation and made so all the country knew exactly what it was.

All right! The Norris reservation came before this body. Those of us who wanted to attach something that might give a modicum of safety to this thing we are trying to adopt today, those of us who thus hoped we might do a little to lessen the peril with which our country was faced, voted for the Norris reservation, just as I would vote for a reservation which would be presented here, as I would vote for amendments that might be offered to a bill, that would lessen, in my opinion, even in slight degree its wrong or viciousness, just as the Senator has done and just as all of us have done time and time again.

But the fact remains that if the Norris reservation had all the earmarks of wrong, all the things that were asserted it had, then this reservation has just those things, too, and the fact that a change has come about on the other side is apparent. I leave to Senators to guess the reasons. I do not need to tell them.

I have not any hesitancy in saying that it is designed to do this thing by some kind of strategy, by some sort of legerdemain, by some sort of changing this and altering that which has been expressed heretofore in this body. Unless something of that sort is done which will inveigle men and cause them to change their votes, men who have voted their convictions, America will be saved from going into this World Court. The reason for this particular reservation is for the purpose of enabling someone to change his vote or someone to be befooled into changing his vote.

Again I call to the attention of the Senate the vehemence with which my friend from Arkansas denounced the Norris reservation the other day and how he presented his reasons why that reservation should not be adopted. Today the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], whom we all regard with great respect, who sits now next to the Senator from Arkansas, offers a reservation of similar character. Who is going to be fooled by this sort of stuff at this time? Nobody is fooled by it in the slightest degree. Its purpose and its design are to avert defeat because of what is now threatening the accession of the United States to the World Court. Will anyone be fooled? That is the point. I do not propose to be fooled by the presentation of this reservation in order that a recalcitrant vote may be brought back into the fold. I do not propose that a reservation which was originally written in good faith in an endeavor in some respects to lessen the wrong and to minimize the perils that might be attached to this particular matter, shall be utilized here by those who do not like it and who hate it and who are against it in order to avert the defeat they so richly deserve upon this proposition.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I wish——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will suspend. Under the unanimous consent agreement a Senator may speak but once on a pending reservation, and the Senator from Utah has spoken on the pending reservation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to suggest an amendment for the consideration of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. In line 3 of the reservation submitted by the Senator from Utah, after the word "mentioned", insert "upon the condition and with the clear", so that it would read:

That the United States approve the protocol and statute hereinabove mentioned upon the condition and with the clear understanding that recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other state or states can—

And there I would insert the word "not", and after the word "had" I would insert the words "until and", so it would read:

cannot be had until and only by agreement thereto through general or special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute.

The reservation would read then:

Resolved further, as a part of this act of ratification, That the United States approve the protocol and statute hereinabove mentioned upon the condition and with the clear understanding that recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other state or states cannot be had until and only by agreement thereto through general or special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I should like to speak upon the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I thought the Senator would accept my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I cannot accept the amendment of the Senator from Idaho for the very simple reason that the sum total of all the logic to which I have attempted to give expression here was that I offered this reservation because it was word for word in keeping with the resolution which had already been adopted by the Senate.

There was nothing subtle about it at all. It seemed to me a plain, consistent, and logical thing to do. To imply that there was something subtle makes it necessary to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] offered in exactly the same spirit a resolution which had also been adopted, and the Senate, by unanimous agreement, I think, accepted that resolution as it had been adopted previously by the Senate of the United States.

It would be absolutely inconsistent, just as inconsistent as it was the other day for us to have voted for the Norris resolution when we had this resolution before us, a resolution which had already been accepted word for word.

I should like to say further that that is the only thing behind the logic. I wish I might be as subtle as the great Senator from California suggests, but he happens to have selected the wrong person for his characterization.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I offered this amendment in the interest of clarity. It does not, in my judgment, change the substance of the reservation, but it does make perfectly clear what we are undertaking to do.

May I ask the Senator from Utah in what respect does it change the substance of his reservation?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It changes the words of the amendment; that is all.

Mr. BORAH. I ask the Senator in what respect does it change the substance of the amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator from Idaho a question? In what respect does it improve the reservation?

Mr. BORAH. In the interest of clarity, and nothing more. I want it perfectly clear, as I understand the Senator wants it perfectly clear, that a matter may not be submitted to the World Court until the Senate of the United States shall have passed upon the question of submission.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is it not perfectly clear in the language that is employed? Does the Senator propose language to make it any clearer? The language is:

That the United States approve the protocol and statute hereinabove mentioned with the understanding that recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other state or states can be had only by agreement thereto through general and special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute.

There is no ambiguity. The most visionary mind cannot suggest an ambiguity in the language employed there.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in my opinion, when we say "that the United States approve the protocol and statute hereinabove mentioned upon the condition and with the clear understanding", what we desire to accomplish is much clearer than when we simply say "with the understanding." Who knows who is going to interpret the understanding, and what is the understanding?

Mr. President, I do not desire to continue the argument upon this particular amendment; but I ask for a vote upon it, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the reservation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and withhold my vote. If the Senator from New York were present, my understanding is that he would vote "nay", and if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. GIBSON]. He has a pair with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. I do not know how either Senator would vote on this question.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are necessarily detained.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], and the Senator-elect from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] are absent on official business, on a mission to the Philippine Islands.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 44, as follows:

So Mr. BORAH'S amendment to the reservation of Mr. THOMAS of Utah was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the reservation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending reservation. On line 7, I propose to strike out the words "general or", so that, if amended, the reservation will read:

Only by agreement thereto through special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the reservation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire first to discuss, just briefly, the reference which has been made to the reservation I offered the other day, and which was defeated, which was practically the same as this one.

One of the objections made to the reservation I offered was that it required the submission of a question to the Court to be approved by a two-thirds vote of the Senate. If we should agree to this reservation we should have to approve the treaty by a two-thirds vote of the Senate. So far as the voting of the Senate is concerned, there is absolutely no difference between the two reservations.

I offered the former reservation because I thought it was a more simple and easy way to reach the desired end than this reservation, which I had read and was familiar with at the time I offered mine; but my idea was that we could submit to this tribunal a dispute, if we agreed with some other nation to do it, without going through all the formality and red tape of agreeing upon a treaty. The other nation would not have to do anything of that kind, and would not have to pass upon the question by a two-thirds vote, or submit it to a parliament. So I thought it was a more simple procedure. So far as reaching a conclusion is concerned, I think so yet; but we should have been compelled to make an agreement each time, and approve it by a two-thirds vote of the Senate, before a question could be submitted.

Under the reservation now pending, a general treaty can be made by us now with Great Britain, let us say, which will provide that all differences that may arise between the two countries in the next 200 years shall be submitted to this Court without referring to the nature of the difficulty or the kind of dispute that may exist, and we can provide in that treaty that the question in dispute shall be submitted by the President of the United States on the part of this Nation. So by one treaty with a nation we can make an indefinite agreement which will extend to the submission of all disputes for all time, as long as the treaty and the Court exist.

To my mind, this is very objectionable. To my mind, that will destroy what I was trying to reach by my reservation. We cannot tell today what the dispute is going to be a hundred years from now, and we may not want to submit to that tribunal a dispute which may arise 25 years from now, about which we know nothing. Neither do we want to give to the President of the United States 25 years from now the power to submit that dispute, because we do not know now who then will be President.

I am not thinking now, and I was not thinking then, of any particular President. There is not intended and, of course, there is no reflection upon the present occupant of the White House; but he will not be there forever. Some other President will take his place. We do not know who he will be; and, if we agree to the pending resolution of adherence, we shall be deciding in advance that a treaty made this year may provide for the submission of a controversy a hundred years from now.

With the words "general or" stricken out, I think the matter would be left so that we would have to make a treaty, which would make the procedure a little more cumbersome than my reservation would; but for some reason the Senate rejected mine. It has had a change of heart in the meantime. I do not know whether it has come down from the White House or from some other high source; but, as a result, the Senate seems to be willing to take today something that it would not have taken yesterday.

If it is desired to take this reservation and make it more cumbersome, and put in a little more red tape than I had in my reservation, and provide for an agreement each time, I myself do not see any objection to it. I would have voted for the general resolution of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] had my reservation been agreed to, feeling as I did that I did not want to make an agreement in advance covering years of time after I was dead, perhaps, and then an entirely different Senate would be here which would perhaps get us into trouble. I should be glad to do anything I can to help Europe in settling its difficulties, but I am not willing to say that Europe should settle our difficulties unless we agree each time the difficulty arises, and submit it to the Court, which would probably often occur. There are many questions I would be perfectly willing to submit to that Court. There are some questions I would not under any circumstances submit to that Court. I appeal to Senators now who do not want to have such questions submitted to the Court or tie the hands of future Senates, by taking action about the Court that will permit such questions to be submitted, to vote for this amendment.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], I understand, will vote for the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. Of course, had this amendment been offered the other day, he would have opposed it. He is for it now. It may be that in a day or two the Senator would favor the motion I am now making.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I am assuming that the Senator feels that the words "general or" should be stricken out.

Mr. NORRIS. The words "general or"; yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; and that special treaties would have to be approved by a two-thirds vote of the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. I do; yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Is there any reason why there could not be inserted after the word "dispute", the words "which said special treaties must be approved by a two-thirds vote of the Senate"?

Mr. NORRIS. I would not have any objection to that, but I do not think it does a particle of good to do it, because the Constitution of the United States provides for the method of approval of treaties.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but the trouble is that the Senator from Nebraska may not be interpreting this language, and it might be left open to an interpretation that special treaties meant something that did not have to be submitted to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, "special" undoubtedly refers to the——

Mr. WHEELER. It might be a trade treaty that would not have to be submitted, possibly, to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. As I understand, under the Constitution of the United States, we could not have any treaty which could be effective unless approved by a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, may I call attention to a matter?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; if the Senator from Montana has concluded.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say that my understanding is—I may be wrong about it—that perhaps we had entered into certain agreements which may be called "treaties" or might be interpreted as treaties. If I am wrong about it, I should like to know it. However, I can see no reason why we should not put in the reservation that any special treaty affecting this subject should have a two-thirds vote of the Senate, so there could be no question about it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question with respect to reciprocal tariff treaties? My recollection is that at the last session of Congress we gave the President authority to make reciprocal tariff treaties. I should like to inquire whether under those treaties it would be necessary to come to the Senate before submitting a matter involving some tariff question to the World Court?

Mr. NORRIS. I did not understand the last part of the Senator's question.

Mr. HASTINGS. I was wondering if the President should desire to submit to the World Court some question involving the reciprocal tariff treaties which he was authorized to make by the last Congress, whether or not the particular reservation which the Senator now suggests would cover that situation.

Mr. NORRIS. I should think so. I should think it would cover anything that is submitted to the World Court. It seems to me that that is plain on the face of the reservation. It would not have any application to anything else.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Reference is evidently had to the act of Congress of the last session authorizing the President to enter into trade agreements with foreign countries without ratification by the Senate. I suppose everyone knows that for more than 100 years Congress has authorized the President to enter into such trade agreements without requiring ratification on the part of the Senate, and that such trade agreements have been held not to be treaties within the language of the Constitution requiring ratification on the part of the Senate, and it is difficult to conceive how any such trade agreement thus entered into could be subject for consideration by the World Court.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly, if this reservation were agreed to, it could not be subject to the consideration by the World Court, because the resolution itself provides for a special treaty, which I do not think for a moment is covered by a trade agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I agree with the Senator. And any such treaty, as a treaty under the Constitution, whether it be special or general, must be ratified by two-thirds vote of the Senate, whether it is provided for in any such resolution or not.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the customs union submitted to the World Court, to which Germany and Austria were parties, was not a trade agreement?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know what it might be called, but other countries do not have the safeguards about treaties that ours does. For instance, it may be that some other country can submit a treaty without any reference of it to its parliament. We cannot do that. I do not think there can be any question about it. However, so far as that is concerned, Mr. President, this quibble about what is a trade agreement and what is a treaty is not involved in the motion which is now pending before the Senate. The question now before the Senate is whether we will strike out the words "general or", which means whether we are going to provide here for a treaty each time there is a dispute, or whether we are going to permit a general treaty to be made that will cover all time and all disputes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that we already have numerous treaties with other countries of a general nature by which we agree to submit to arbitration questions of dispute?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the fact that this reservation makes it impossible to submit any such controversy as may hereafter be included in a special or general treaty or as may now be included in any general treaty which has heretofore been negotiated, what objection can there be to this provision as it is, so long as none of these disputes can be submitted to the World Court without the consent of the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. But the consent of the United States must be obtained through a treaty.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. In one case a treaty can provide that all questions shall be submitted without any further action by the Senate—a general treaty. But if we must have a special treaty each time, we have an entirely different proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have such treaties already.

Mr. NORRIS. General treaties.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but they are not submitted to the World Court.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; but they might be under their terms, because the questions involved may be submitted to special courts of arbitration set up by the nations or to special arbitrators provided by each nation, or, of course, by agreement they could be submitted to any existing tribunal under such general agreements.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; by agreement. Here we have a World Court constituted in a certain way. It may be different in 50 years from now. Then I may have a different feeling about it. It may be worse. I am afraid it will be. I at least do not feel that I want to compel my country to submit a dispute, in advance of knowing what the dispute is, to men on the Court, honest and able though they may be, who have grown up under a different civilization, who have different ideas of society and humanity and government. I am not willing to say in advance that every possible dispute that might arise should be submitted to that particular Court. Suppose, for illustration, and not because it is going to happen, probably, that Court were to pass on whether the debts which the European nations owe to us should be forgiven, whether they should be compromised, or some other disposition made of them. Would we want to submit a debt question, a question involving money owed to us by another country, for decision by the people who owe us, or their representatives? We might get into a thousand such difficulties if we are to have such questions determined by the Court.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the Senator would feel that any such question is covered by any general or special treaty that now exists between the United States and any other country.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not.

Mr. BARKLEY. So it would not be submitted under that language of the treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to put in a reservation here under which at some time some future President who may have a wonderful influence could bind us for all time. Of course that would not happen now; but Presidents have many appointments to make; they control a great many things, and some President might influence some Members of the Senate to vote this way or that way on a proposition, and by his power he might put through a treaty which would bind all future Presidents, bind future Senates, and submit our disputes, whatever they may be, to a court although at the time it might be impossible to get the approval of the Senate to such submission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question? I am rather an uneducated person when it comes to the question of the World Court—all I know is what I read in the papers—but as I understood the Senator from Idaho, he asked the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] whether or not this amendment would exclude advisory opinions, and the Senator from Utah responded, "No; this amendment would not affect the World Court", or League of Nations, whatever it may be called, "from going ahead and rendering its advisory opinion." Did I correctly understand the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the question was asked by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with relation to the amendment which he offered, and the answer was given with relation to that amendment. That was voted down.

Mr. LONG. In other words, as I understand, this amendment does not affect advisory opinions of the World Court? Does it or does it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Certainly not. It has nothing to do with advisory opinions.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the point I desire to make is this: I know these courts. They never decide against their own jurisdiction unless it is pretty clear. Now, if they adopt this amendment, it is going to be the judges of the World Court, the four that Great Britain picks up, and somebody from Japan, and then, after they get the barrel pretty well filled, we will have a man there somewhere hanging around. And I know that courts very seldom render anything against their own jurisdiction.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to know whether the unanimous-consent agreement which was entered into some days ago is still in effect?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not understand how some of the Senators who have used up all their time can continue to make speeches.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Each Senator is entitled to speak on each amendment 15 minutes. The amendment to which the Senator from Louisiana is now addressing himself is the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

A RECOLLECTION FOR AMERICA!

Mr. LONG. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he would not consider adding this further amendment to his amendment, namely:

These provisions shall apply to advisory opinions of the said World Court affecting the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not accept such an amendment, because, while I would vote for that kind of an amendment if it were offered independently, I would not accept it with this, because I think it would endanger any possibility of the pending amendment being adopted.

Mr. LONG. Then I will offer it as a separate amendment. I am glad to have the Senator's statement, however, that he would vote for such an amendment.

Mr. President, as I understand from what my friend from Nebraska has intimated, no doubt upon lack of information rather than upon information, there is a mellowing on the question of the World Court to where the steel gauntlet is going to be gloved just a little bit for the time being, or rather is it the sword, or is it the rapier rather than the broadsword that is being employed here with which to cut us round without making so much noise about it? What is this policy of abdication? Whence comes it that only a day or two ago you were not going to accept this or that reservation, but that now with a melodramatic, retiring attitude, you find this, that, and the other to be more or less persuasive? What must be done to have gentlemen finally get up and say, "America for Americans"? What music was there that wafted through the ether that brought about this change in attitude? What stroke of the harp has made the song of liberty appear inspiring to our statesmen, Mr. President? What more may we do to make Senators remember that once there was a Washington; once there was a Jefferson; once there was a Lincoln; once there was a Monroe?

What can we do to make the sacred words uttered from the days of Washington to Lincoln, from Valley Forge to Appomattox, ring in the ears of Senators that America is for Americans, one Union now and forever, inseparable? What else could be done to bring the siren song closer to the heart and mind and emotions so that the damnable monstrosity attempted here in the Senate might be thrown out in its entirety rather than being forced out piece by piece, note by note, sound by sound, line by line, until the true spirit of religion and Americanism could pervade these Democratic hearts? [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what does the Senator from Louisiana know about the true spirit of religion? [Laughter.] Mr. President, what we have just listened to is illustrative of the character of a great many arguments that are being made during the course of this debate. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska is important; it goes to the very substance of the objection that was made a few days ago to the reservation which he offered. If the amendment should be agreed to, we would be in the same situation, or almost the same situation, as if the Senate had approved the Norris reservation.

If anyone is friendly to the World Court, if anyone wishes to support it as an agency for the adjustment of controversies among nations, I am asking him why does he wish to make it as difficult as possible to get into the Court? The Senator proposes to strike out the words "general treaty." It is well known that we have heretofore availed ourselves of the opportunity to refer to arbitration through a general-treaty class of cases.

There is a dispute now which it may be necessary to refer somewhere, which is known as the "smelter case", involving the United States and Canada. There are numerous cases involving damages and claims. What is the necessity of requiring that in every instance a special treaty shall be entered into and ratified by two-thirds of the Senate? It is sound, it is sensible, it is practicable, and there is not the slightest harm that can come to the country by reason of the adoption of an arrangement for general treaties.

The Senator from Nebraska has stated that we might bind ourselves by a treaty to submit every kind of question. I point out the fact that general treaties before they become effective must receive the approval of the Senate by a two-thirds vote. There is ample opportunity in the case of a general treaty to take such precautions as may be necessary.

It is absurd to undertake to require that every time we wish to go into court we must have a special treaty and go through the formula of having an agreement on the part of the Senate that a particular case be referred to the Court.

I hope that those who believe that the World Court may be made an agency for the promotion of justice, those who are in sympathy with the Court and in sympathy with the pending resolution, will vote down the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I can add very little to what the Senator from Arkansas has said, but it seems to me that the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska will practically nullify the provisions of every general treaty into which we have entered heretofore for the arbitration of disputes between the United States and other nations.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me follow that statement with my reasoning for it. We have entered into many such treaties and our entry into those treaties has been acclaimed almost universally by the people of the United States as well as of the world. If this amendment shall be adopted, it will make it impossible for any subject to be submitted to the World Court under such general treaties without a vote of two-thirds of the Senate——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Because we cannot submit those disputes to the World Court under treaties that now exist; and each time a controversy might arise, however acute it might be, however nonpolitical it might be, however capable of judicial adjudication it might be, it could not be even submitted to the World Court unless a separate treaty was entered into between the United States and the other nation, and that treaty brought here and discussed for days and weeks and months, and finally receive a two-thirds vote of the United States Senate. And, if there were sufficient Members of the Senate, which would be a third, who did not desire any such controversy submitted to the World Court, they could prevent it ever being submitted under the language proposed by the Senator. I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has passed the point in his address where I wanted to interrupt him; but this amendment, if agreed to, as I see it, would not have any effect whatever upon any general treaty of arbitration we have. It only applies to the World Court. None of the general treaties that we have, of course, apply to the World Court; and in a provision for arbitration the selection of the tribunal is one of the things that can be done after the question arises. It would only prevent the submission of a controversy to this Court that is made up now; but if it were such a question that we thought that Court would be the proper tribunal to pass on it, it would be possible to submit it to that Court.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course we do not have to submit it to that Court even under the general treaties which now exist.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course we do not.

Mr. BARKLEY. We may do it; we may submit it to any tribunal that exists or we may set up a special tribunal for the adjudication of the question involved; but if the Senator's amendment should be adopted, however much it might be desirable immediately to submit a question in dispute to the World Court, it could not be done without a special treaty designating the World Court as the tribunal to settle it. That special treaty would have to be brought here and argued and argued and argued and finally ratified by a two-thirds vote before we could ever get started toward the settlement of the dispute. If the Senate should not be in session at the time for 6 months, as it is entirely likely it may be, and an acute dispute should arise which might be arbitrated and settled under a general treaty by the World Court, if it were desirable to submit it to that Court, it could not even be submitted until the Senate reassembled and the treaty was submitted and two-thirds voted for it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to an interruption there?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say to the Senator, first, the President has authority under the Constitution to call the Senate in special session, which he could do in a week's time or even a few days' time; and, second, while the Senator has suggested that there might be some important question or dispute that ought to be disposed of, let me submit this query: Suppose we had a President not in agreement with the Senate or with a country or who was a crank on some particular subject, for instance, on the question of the debts which Europe owes to us. Many of the men we have had for President, and many of them who would like to be President, are in favor of canceling those debts. Suppose we had such a President, would not the Senator feel that it would be pretty safe for the country if the Senate had to pass on his acts and not submit something that might be vital to one man's judgment instead of the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. The question of the European debts is a matter of fact; they are legal; nobody denies their legality; the only question is whether the debtors are going to pay them. It is impossible for me to conceive that the World Court will ever be called on or ever could be called on to pass on the question whether European nations will pay the debts which they acknowledge they owe us. If some President wanted to cancel the debts, he could not do so under the very act of Congress which is now in force; and not only could he not cancel them, but he could not reduce them without the consent of the Congress. So I do not think that need bother us.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, sometimes out of a multitude of counsel comes wisdom. As I have listened here today since the discussion first arose, when the distinguished Senator from Utah presented this reservation, I have reached the conclusion that, after all, our viewpoints are not so vastly different. I have learned now that if this amendment, designed to do what the Norris resolution or reservation would have done, shall be attached to the particular reservation, it is going to work tremendous harm and do enormous injury to the World Court in the subsequent submission of cases to that Court. It must not be adopted because of the delays that may ensue, and because the Senate may be absent 6 months of the year, and it will be impossible during that period for the Senate to pass upon treaties. So if there be any of my friends here who "lay the flattering unction to their souls" that the particular reservation presented by the Senator from Utah does what the Norris resolution sought to do the other day, let him pause for a moment, listen to the arguments that have been advanced here, and heed them, for it is now conceded by those arguments that the Norris resolution that was voted down by this body the other day after a very heated debate is a very different thing from the one that is now proposed and is sought to be adopted by Senators on the other side.

So we may dismiss the idea as sentient human beings, who have heads upon their shoulders that God put there for some other purpose than mere ornament; we can dismiss the idea as to gentlemen who are Members of this body that their souls are going to be soothed or their indignation assuaged or their consciences solaced because of the defeat of the Norris reservation by the adoption of the one presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

That much this particular argument has accomplished, and we can dismiss the peculiar similarity of the two, or that the one will do what the other was endeavoring to do. That is the situation which now comes to us in regard to the two reservations thus presented.

Of course, I understand the strategy of the position as it now presents itself. Equally, of course, I understand that the utilization of that strategy is not the subject of criticism of any of the Senators here; but let me say to the men who are in earnest upon this floor, let me say to those who feel that their country should not undergo the peril of entry into this Court abroad, let me say to the men from the Pacific coast who are more interested in this situation perhaps than any other representatives upon this floor, that after all now there comes to us the knowledge that the thing that was sought to be done the other day by the Norris reservation is not done at all today by any other reservation. Conceded now is the wide difference between the two, and the man who believes in the Norris reservation cannot accept that now presented as affording the necessary protection to our country.

So let us go on and determine whether or not, with the facts before us thus, our minds will remain in the same condition and actuated by the same motives as they were before this very able, and very clever, and very strategic proposition was presented to this body.

Now we know where we stand, and knowing where we stand, let us stand up like men regarding it. Let those who believe in this Court be for it. Let those who do not believe in it be against it, and do what ought to be done under the circumstances, notwithstanding the strategy or the assumed cleverness in presenting a reservation heretofore derided and denied as a substitute for one deemed essential.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the reservation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. NORRIS and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. My understanding is that if he were present he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I repeat my announcement that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent by reason of illness, and I reannounce the absences of those Senators engaged on the Philippine Commission.

Mr. AUSTIN. I reannounce the general pair between my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] and the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. I do not know how either Senator would vote if present.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 48, as follows:

So Mr. NORRIS' amendment to the reservation of Mr. THOMAS of Utah was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the reservation offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. LONG. I move to amend the reservation by adding to it the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Louisiana proposes to add to the reservation offered by the Senator from Utah the following:

These provisions shall apply to advisory opinions of the said World Court affecting the United States.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in view of the statements made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I am offering this further addendum to provide that the reservation shall apply to advisory opinions.

There are no opinions by the League Court that are not more or less advisory. The failure to enforce them merely means war, and that is all. In other words, when the last finding of the League of Nations was made and Japan ran out and told us all where we could go, we found that the World Court meant nothing.

I want it understood that I am going to vote against the World Court, whether this reservation is adopted or not. I think every other Senator who has ever voted against the World Court, particularly with the defeat of the resolution just voted upon, is going to vote against the World Court. I am going to vote against the World Court whether the reservation is adopted or not.

As I see my American duty, I could not vote for entrance into the World Court, regardless of what is put into the resolution of adherence. I do not intend to have these gentlemen whose names I cannot even pronounce, let alone spell, passing upon the rights of American people. I do not intend to have the affairs of this country meddled in by various and sundry men from the four corners of the Orient, telling us what is and what is not an American policy, and what is or what is not a North American policy or a South American policy.

I do not intend to vote for this infernal thing that is being offered here, and it does not make any difference what kind of soothing sirup, salve, or sweetening is put upon it. I could not go back to the hills and bottoms of the State of Louisiana and tell the good, honest citizens down there that I have voted their rights away to be American citizens unless some Japanese, British, or French citizen or envoy owing us some money is willing to approve it. That is my logic, and that is my offering, and that is how I stand on the matter.

As to those who feel they should go some 3,000 miles away to find out what the law is, that is indicative of the legal mind—to get away from the base of activity. Half the lawyers of the country have it in their heads that two times two ought to be proved by the ages of scientific development and reasearch. Therefore, it is only natural and customary that the human mind gropes and gropes and gropes a little bit further, the higher it gets, to get away from the common base and understanding of activity.

Therefore, I have proposed that this reservation of my learned friend from Utah shall apply to advisory opinions. If it is right in one, it is right in all. If it is not right to have a binding opinion, then it is not right to have an advisory opinion.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator, I assume, is well aware of the fact that an advisory opinion can be given only upon the request of the Council of the League of Nations.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. And the resolution we are now proposing to adopt specifically provides that there can be no advisory opinion that affects this country, or one that we claim affects us, unless the United States Government consents to it.

Mr. LONG. Then the language I have proposed to add will not hurt anything.

Mr. LOGAN. It puts us in the League of Nations.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; we will not go in the League of Nations.

Mr. LOGAN. But the Senator is asking the United States to approve becoming a part of the League of Nations.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no! I will put in there another line that we never will go in the League. Put that in there, too. [Laughter.] Just put in there, "It being understood that America will never go into the League of Nations; it being understood that this does not commit the United States ever to go into the League of Nations." I want to get the vote of the Senator from Kentucky on this matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, this perniciously constructed document in one place provides for an advisory opinion, and in another place for a binding opinion, and in another place for a council over here, and another thing over here. I am not the only man in the United States who does not understand what this thing is all about. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] does not know what half of it is about. [Laughter.] But we are being rushed in pell-mell to get into this World Court so that Señor Ab Jap or some other something from Japan can pass upon our controversies.

Nobody can pronounce their names. Not a Member of the United States Senate can spell half of them. It is proposed to put us before a court across the land and seas, 3,000 miles away. One of the things the Court can render is an advisory opinion that we do not have to observe. Another one is a binding opinion that we do have to observe. One of them is called for by a council and another is called for by some country. Let us have an understanding—a clear-cut, sensible, American understanding—that unless it is the will of the Senate, the treaty-making body, by its regular two-thirds vote, to have the American doctrine and fundamental principles effected, we are not going to have the World Court interfering with us by an opinion, whether it is a binding opinion or an advisory opinion or any other kind of an opinion.

Let us just assume a case that the Senator from Kentucky presents. Let us say that in the case of the Panama Canal—that is, not America, you understand—let us say that in the case of the Panama Canal, or in Colombia or Venezuela, we are fixing the build a canal across Nicaragua or across Venezuela. Let us say that the League of Nations calls upon the World Court for an advisory opinion as to whether or not a contract made between Colombia, Venezuela, and the United States can be effective; and let us say that the League of Nations World Court—for that is what it is, set up by the League of Nations, created by it—let us say that the League of Nations World Court comes out with an opinion, as it did in this trade-agreement case between Germany and Austria, that it is practically a bartering away of the sovereignty of Colombia or Venezuela for the United States to construct a canal across their land. Thereupon the United States of America, on that advisory opinion of the World Court, would be told by the entire world, through the medium of an advisory opinion, that it was illegal and rapacious to undertake to construct a canal joining the Pacific with the Atlantic Ocean.

You say, "That is not a binding opinion." Suppose the United States goes ahead and builds the canal after it has been decided to be illegal, unconstitutional, and rapacious by the other members of the World Court. We would be in the throes of a war, with the Asiatics attacking us on the one side and the Europeans on the other, and the Pan Americans from the south attacking us at the same time. We would be in a war, why? Because that advisory opinion would be just as binding, just as persuasive, just as belligerent as though it were actually a binding opinion.

If we are going to yield here, as we understand we are to yield, what is the objection to having it written here, so that he who runs may read, that whatever opinion is rendered by the Court, whether it is an advisory opinion or a binding opinion, or whatever kind of an opinion it is, that undertakes to affect, to modify, to thwart, or to affect American doctrines or principles in any manner or form, shall not be called for or rendered unless and until the Senate of the United States expresses itself as willing to have the World Court decide it?

Think what we are doing, Mr. President! We have already voted down the reservation to protect the Monroe Doctrine. Theodore Roosevelt could not have constructed the Panama Canal under this World Court that we are now going into. Do you think, Mr. President, if the League of Nations had called upon this World Court for an advisory opinion as to whether or not Theodore Roosevelt was acting correctly in the way he treated Colombia when he built the Panama Canal, that the World Court ever would have rendered a judgment against Colombia? Not on your life would it ever have done so. And that is what would happen today, when we are talking about building another canal—why?

Because the Panama Canal is inadequate; because the Panama Canal is not at sea level. There have to be locks and dams in order that the water of one ocean may be lowered into that of the other; and, therefore, if we continue the kind of trade we now have, we shall soon of necessity have to build another canal, either across Nicaragua or across some other territory down there from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

What are we going to be faced with? We are going to be faced, right at the threshold, with France, which owes us money, and Great Britain, which owes us money, and Germany and Russia, saying, "No; no! That means that America is going against the sovereignty of Nicaragua, against the sovereignty of Venezuela"; and here are these judges representing our debtors, owing us three billions here and two billions here and four billions here, and they are going to say:

Oh, no! You have never yet written off the debts that we owe the American people. Therefore we are going to stand here and forbid, through this advisory opinion of the World Court, a single aggression by the United States to convenience itself, or to make its arms or its trade more effective or more general.

Mr. President, our leaders on this side a few moments ago seemed to be willing—I do not know what has disturbed them—to get down off their high horse and adopt some of these reservations. It looked like it was getting better. I hope nothing I have said has disturbed that period of apparent equanimity. I hope everything will be all right now, and I hope they will remember we boys who are back at the forks of the creek. We do not know much about Europe. I have been trying to get enough money to go to Europe ever since I was elected to my first public office, but I have never been to Europe. We fellows who have never been to Europe, and who may never get to go to Europe, hope that before you put us into a European decision you will let us adjust some of our own little domestic affairs.

We who are down there starving to death from lack of milk that you are pouring in the creek because you have too much, we who are down there with the children crying for something to wear while you are burning up the cotton to keep them from having too much, we who are down there while you are shooting the cows and killing the hogs because you do not want an oversupply, with everybody crying for something to eat, until some of these things have been destroyed—until America has better taken care of Americans, we hope you will postpone this undertaking to go over and adjust European affairs.

Great Britain is already reducing its own taxes and balancing its budget—why? Because it has not paid the interest on the debt it owes the United States, because it has not paid the principal of the debt it owes the United States. For that reason the statesmen of Great Britain say they are able to lower their taxes and balance their budget. Well, for God's sake, do not go over there after they have defied us to collect our debts and adjusted their own selves to help their country at the expense of the United States, and put us in a court to have these internal matters adjudicated by any kind of an opinion, advisory or otherwise, contrary to the interests of the United States.

I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, there is no one in this Chamber who listens with more interest than I do to the learned Senator from the sovereign State of Louisiana—I was almost about to say "the sovereign Senator from the learned State of Louisiana", because I am not used to speaking readily here. I have gone all the way down to Louisiana to hear him speak; but I desire to say that he has me thoroughly confused by his last discussion.

With reference to not being able to spell these names, I should like to say that I, myself, have seen in print, many a time, the worthy Senator's first name spelled in a different way from the way in which he ordinarily spells it. [Laughter.] So ability to spell the name of a judge should not in any way either add to or detract from argument in favor of the World Court.

In regard to the advisory opinion, I was asked the question whether this reservation would affect the ordinary procedure in securing an advisory opinion, and whether it would affect the handing down of an advisory opinion. That is the way I understood the question; and I answered, of course, that it would not.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has replied to the Senator from Louisiana by showing how a request for an advisory opinion is put to the Court. It comes only through one of two channels—the Council of the League of Nations or the Assembly of the League of Nations. If we should wish to initiate an advisory opinion under this reservation, of course the Senate of the United States would have to pass upon the initiation of the request for that opinion.

I think that answers the question fully, and shows that so far as the amendment suggested by the Senator from Louisiana is concerned, it should be voted down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] to the reservation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reservation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The reservation was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, to the pending resolution of adherence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That the signature of the United States to the said protocol shall not be affixed until the powers signatory to such protocol shall have indicated, through an exchange of notes, their acceptance of the foregoing reservations and understandings as a part and a condition of adherence by the United States to the said protocol.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I am offering that proposal in the hope that those most interested in the sponsorship of the resolution of adherence may find it possible to accept it.

Senators will recognize the language as identical with the language employed in the resolution of adherence of 1926 and in the resolution which was presented to the Senate from the Committee on Foreign Relations in 1932 by the late Senator from Montana, Mr. Walsh, and the former Senator from Ohio, Mr. Fess.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STEIWER. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON. Both the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Ohio stated in their report that they were opposed to that provision. As a matter of fact, the provision which the Senator is now offering is what is known as "the Moses reservation."

Mr. STEIWER. That is true, Mr. President. Those Senators did not use the word "opposed", however. They said in the report, as I recall, that they did not assent to the provision, and I took it from the language they employed that they did not regard it as necessary.

I desire to address myself for just a moment to the question as to whether this kind of a safeguarding resolution is necessary.

I begin, Mr. President, by asking Senators whether the signatory powers have already agreed to the amendment which has just been adopted upon the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

I ask also whether the signatory powers have already agreed to the amendment accepted some days ago, the one offered by the Senator from Michigan. I ask also whether the signatory powers have agreed to the change in the body of the pending resolution, in which the committee has substituted for the proposition of the consent of the United States the phrase "over the objection of the United States."

I take it, Mr. President, that with respect to all these questions there is no assurance at all, either in the protocol of accession or in any other document, or through any other means, that the signatory powers have signified their acceptance of these reservations. The purpose, evidently, of this reservation, which was incorporated in both of the earlier resolutions, was to make sure, before we gave our signature to an agreement binding us with respect to the World Court, that the signatory powers understood our reservations as we understand our reservations. That, as I take it, is the only thing involved in this proposal.

Inasmuch, as has been stated in these debates over and over again, as the Court and the powers concerned in the Court would construe our reservations; inasmuch, as was said by a distinguished Britisher, as the Court would construe our reservations, it seems to me that those of us who favor adherence, but who, at the same time, favor the protection of American interests, can do very well to see to it in advance that these gentlemen will not have the capacity and power to construe our reservations differently from the way we ourselves construe them.

There is, therefore, I think, a very clear reason for acceptance of this reservation, because if we incorporate it in the resolution of adherence it means that we will not become bound until the signatory powers, by express action, have made it known to us that the things against which we are protecting ourselves are recognized by them and become a part of our relationship to the World Court.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I regret that I am not in a position to support the reservation offered by the Senator from Oregon. It is known in World Court debate history as the "Moses reservation." The effect of it would be to refer back to all the signatories our action on the World Court protocols for their approval.

As stated in the beginnning of this debate, our five reservations have been accepted, the fifth being accepted upon such terms as we accept in the resolution of adherence. To adopt now the proposal of the Senator from Oregon would be to make it necessary—indeed, that is the purpose of it—to send the whole matter back for ratification again.

I do not think there is any doubt that the two reservations, known as the "Vandenberg reservation" and the "Johnson or Thomas reservation", recently adopted, pertain to domestic policy. They relate to matters which are of indifference to the other signatories.

I do not understand that there has been express affirmation by the signatories as to these two propositions, nor do I understand that it is necessary that there shall be in order to give them such effect as they may have. They are merely enunciations of our policy, and, as stated by the Senators who propose them here—and this has special reference to the Vandenberg reservation—they make no change, effect no alteration, and I do not think that our method of submitting cases to the Court is necessary to be approved by other nations. We can submit them in the way we choose, and the way we have chosen is by treaties, general or special.

I hope the Senate will vote down the reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the reservation offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, before the roll is called, I should like to inquire as to the effect of this reservation, in view of the fact that the protocol has already been signed in behalf of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN (when Mr. GIBSON's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] has a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. I am not advised as to how either Senator would vote on the pending question.

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement I made a short time ago on another vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to reannounce the absence of Senators heretofore announced by me. I desire also to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 49, as follows:

So Mr. STEIWER's reservation was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of adherence, as amended.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I submitted a few days ago a reservation, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the reservation offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That adherence to the said protocols and statute provided for above shall not become or remain effective and shall not be or become binding while or when any nation which is an adherent of said protocols and which is indebted to the Government of the United States shall be in arrears for a period of more than 6 months in respect of any payment due upon such indebtedness.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, my first remarks will be addressed to the resolution of adherence itself. Then I shall make some reference to the proposed reservation. It was my original purpose to discuss the pending resolution at some length, but I have been a victim of the epidemic of colds sweeping over Washington, and I do not feel physically fit to undertake that task. I shall content myself with incorporating in the RECORD a few quotations, letters, and documents which will explain my views and my vote, if they do not justify my views and vote.

I should have been content to remain silent on the subject had it not been for the fact that three distinguished professors in the Chicago University felt it their duty on last Sunday night, in a national broadcast, to animadvert upon me and upon some of my associates of the Senate. Those dazzling Daniels who came to judgment upon us characterized us as "ignorant" and as "provincial."

Mr. President, I have always regarded ignorance as a misfortune rather than a fault. That term needs no definition. Even the most ignorant understand its significance and its implications, but the word "provincial" which was applied to me and to my associates I think calls for a definition. Being ignorant, I consulted the dictionary to find out exactly what those gentlemen meant when they characterized us as "provincial." I found that the dictionary says that "provincial" means not cosmopolitan. Well, Mr. President, that definition left me still in a state of ignorance, and I felt obliged to ascertain just what was meant by "cosmopolitan", and I send the definition to the desk and ask to have it read into the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Cosmopolitan: Belonging to all the world; not restricted to any locality; at home in any country; without local or national attachments or prejudices: not provincial.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, those distinguished doctors are not provincial; they are cosmopolitan. They are entirely at home in every clime and in every quarter of this globe. I have a deep suspicion that when those doctors stigmatized us as "provincial" they intended to use that epithet as a disparagement and not as a compliment, but I have decided to take it as a compliment coming from those cosmopolitans, coming from those intellectual, those emotional, those international eunuchs whose souls are so dead they never to themselves have said:

This is my own, my native land.

If to love my own country better than any other—if that, sir, be "provincial", then, I must "own the soft impeachment." If to place America first among all the nations of the earth—if that be a high crime and misdemeanor, then, sir, I am guilty. If to prefer America above all the tongues and tribes and kindreds of the earth—if that be "provincial", then, sir, I am "provincial." If to agree with the Father of his Country, if to agree with George Washington that Europe has a set of primary interests with which we have no concern and with which we should not meddle—if George Washington be "provincial", then I am "provincial."

Mr. President, if Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic Party; if Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence; if Thomas Jefferson when he declared that all men were created equal—if Jefferson was "provincial", then, sir, I am as "provincial" as Jefferson. I make no other pretensions; I am a mere American. It was said in ancient Rome that to be a Roman citizen was greater than to be a king. I have the same high opinion of American citizenship.

Mr. President, I desire to have read into the RECORD at this point several quotations from the father of the Democratic party, and I conjure his descendants and his disciples in this body to give heed to the voice of our father. Lest we forget, lest we forget, I ask that the secretary commence reading with the paragraph numbered 296 from the Jefferson Cyclopedia; then read paragraph no. 300, and then paragraph no. 304 down to the point where it is indicated that the reading shall stop.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the Jefferson Cyclopedia]

296. Alliance, abjure.—I sincerely join you in abjuring all political connection with every foreign power; and though I cordially wish well to the progress of liberty in all nations, and would forever give it the weight of our countenance, yet they are not to be touched without contamination from their other bad principles.—To T. Lomax. iv, 301, Ford Ed., vii, 374 (M., March 1799).

300. Alliance, destructive.—To take part in European conflicts would be to divert our energies from creation to destruction.—To George Logan. Ford Ed., viii, 23 (W., March 1801).

304. ——— ———. It ought to be the very first object of our pursuits to have nothing to do with the European interests and politics. Let them be free or slaves, at will, navigators or agriculturists, swallowed into one government or divided into a thousand, we have nothing to fear from them in any form.—To George Logan. Ford Ed., viii, 23 (W., March 1801).

305. Alliances, entangling.—I know that it is a maxim with us, and I think it a wise one, not to entangle ourselves with the affairs of Europe.—To E. Carrington. ii, 334. Ford Ed., iv, 483 (p. 1787).

306. ——— ———. I am for free commerce with all nations; political connection with none; and little or no diplomatic establishment. And I am not for linking ourselves by new treaties with the quarrels of Europe; entering that field of slaughter to preserve their balance, or joining in the confederacy of kings to war against the principles of liberty.—To Elbridge Gerry. iv, 268. Ford Ed., vii, 328 (p. 1799).

Mr. GORE. I will ask to have the other paragraphs which are marked, down to no. 317, printed at this point without having them read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The paragraphs referred to are as follows:

307. ——— ———. Let our affairs be disentangled from those of all other nations, except as to commerce.—To Gideon Granger, iv, 331. Ford Ed., vii, 452 (M. 1800).

308. ——— ———. The Constitution thought it wise to restrain the Executive and Senate from entangling and embroiling our affairs with those of Europe.—Parliamentary Manual, ix, 81 (1800).

309. ——— ———. Honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none, I deem (one of the) essential principles of our Government and, consequently (one), which ought to shape its administration.—First Inaugural Address, viii, 4. Ford Ed., viii, 4 (1801).

310. ——— ———. Determined as we are to avoid, if possible, wasting the energies of our people in war and destruction, we shall avoid implicating ourselves with the powers of Europe, even in support of principles which we mean to pursue. They have so many other interests different from ours that we must avoid being entangled in them. We believe we can enforce these principles, as to ourselves, by peaceable means, now that we are likely to have our public councils detached from foreign views.—To Thomas Paine, iv, 370. Ford Ed., viii, 18 (W. March 1801).

311. ——— ———. Peace and abstinence from European interferences are our objects.—To M. du Pont de Nemours. iv, 436 (W., April 1802).

312. ——— ———. It is against our system * * * to entangle ourselves at all with the affairs of Europe.—To Philip Mazzei, iv, 553 (W., July 1864).

313. ——— ———. Our Nation has wisely avoided entangling itself in the system of European interests, has taken no side between its rival powers, attached itself to none of its ever-changing confederacies.—R. to A. of Baltimore Baptists, viii, 137 (1808).

314. ——— ———. The less we have to do with the amities or enmities of Europe the better.—To Thomas Leiper, vi, 465. Ford Ed., ix, 520 (M., 1815).

315. ——— ———. All entanglements with that quarter of the globe (Europe) should be avoided if we mean that peace and justice shall be the polar stars of the American societies.—To J. Correa, vii, 184. Ford Ed., x, 164 (M., 1820).

316. ——— ———. The fundamental principle of our Government—never to entangle us with the broils of Europe.—To M. Coray, vii, 318 (M., 1823).

317. ——— ———. I have ever deemed it fundamental for the United States never to take active part in the quarrels of Europe. Their political interests are entirely distinct from ours. Their mutual jealousies, their balance of power, their complicated alliances, their forms and principles of government, are all foreign to us. They are nations of eternal war.—To President Monroe. vii, 288. Ford Ed., x, 257 (M., 1823).

Mr. GORE. I now ask to have printed at the close of my remarks extracts from George Washington and a number of other illustrious American statesmen of the elder days, which were carried in the morning Washington Herald.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. GORE. I want to have the pictures, the portrait gallery of these American statesmen I cited, likewise printed in the RECORD. That will make it convenient for those who desire to turn these portraits to the wall. They would be available for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair remind the Senator from Oklahoma that it would require an order of the Joint Committee on Printing to have the illustrations printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GORE. Very well. I shall try to get such an order. I shall take whatever parliamentary steps are necessary to have these portraits of American statesmen included in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. President, it is obvious from these quotations from Jefferson that if we observe his maxims and his precepts we will never entangle or embroil ourselves in the quarrels of Europe. We became embroiled in the quarrels of Europe even without membership or entanglement in any European institution, whether League or Court. I do not know whether or not the Chicago University professors are carrying on a propaganda, but I do know that attempts at propaganda have been carried on in the past. I ask Senators to listen now to what I shall have read into the RECORD at this point from Harper's Magazine of March 1918. It is from an article by Sir Gilbert Parker. Sir Gilbert said that from the outbreak of the war in Europe he was in charge of American publicity. His sketch in Who's Who states that he occupied that position of trust for a period of 2½ years—indeed, sir, until he witnessed the entry of the United States into the World War.

I ask that the clerk read as I have indicated.

Senators, lend me your ears.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From Harper's Monthly Magazine, issue of March 1918]

By Rt. Hon. Sir Gilbert Parker, Bart.

Perhaps here I may be permitted to say a few words concerning my own work since the beginning of the war. It is in a way a story by itself, but I feel justified in writing one or two paragraphs about it. Practically since the day war broke out between England and the Central Powers, I became responsible for American publicity. I need hardly say that the scope of my department was very extensive and its activities widely ranged. Among the activities was a weekly report to the British Cabinet on the state of American opinion and constant touch with the permanent correspondents of American newspapers in England. I also frequently arranged for important public men in England to act for us by interviews in American newspapers; and among these distinguished people were Mr. Lloyd George (the present Prime Minister), Viscount Grey, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Bonar Law, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Sir Edward Carson, Lord Robert Cecil, Mr. Walter Runciman (the Lord Chancelor), Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Lord Cromer, Will Crooks, Lord Curzon, Lord Gladstone, Lord Haldane, Mr. Henry James, Mr. John Redmond, Mr. Selfridge, Mr. Zangwill, Mrs. Humphrey Ward, and fully a hundred others.

Among other things, we supplied 360 newspapers in the smaller States of the United States with an English newspaper, which gives a weekly review and comment of the affairs of the war. We established connection with the man in the street through cinema pictures of the Army and Navy, as well as through interviews, articles, pamphlets, etc., and by letters in reply to individual American critics, which were printed in the chief newspaper of the State in which they lived and were copied in newspapers of other and neighboring States. We advised and stimulated many people to write articles; we utilized the friendly services and assistance of confidential friends; we had reports from important Americans constantly, and established association, by personal correspondence, with influential and eminent people of every profession in the United States, beginning with university and college presidents, professors and scientific men, and running through all the ranges of the population. We asked our friends and correspondents to arrange for speeches, debates, and lectures by American citizens, but we did not encourage Britishers to go to America and preach the doctrine of entrance into the war—

Mr. GORE. Mark, Senators, that Sir Gilbert Parker did not encourage Britishers to come to the United States and go to and fro hurtling our people into the slaughter pens of Europe. For many an American boy it was indeed the last round-up.

Will the clerk continue reading?

The legislative clerk read further, as follows:

Besides an immense private correspondence with individuals, we had our documents and literature sent to great numbers of public libraries, Y. M. C. A. societies, universities, colleges, historical societies, clubs, and newspapers.

It is hardly necessary to say that the work was one of extreme difficulty and delicacy—

Mr. GORE. Why should it have been a work of extreme delicacy and difficulty to encourage a great idealistic nation like the United States to enter the World War in behalf of its lofty ideals?

Read on.

The legislative clerk read further, as follows:

but I was fortunate in having a wide acquaintance in the United States and in knowing that a great many people had read my books and were not prejudiced against me.

Mr. GORE. Will the clerk stop there for a moment?

It is obvious, Senators, that Sir Gilbert Parker performed his task with infinite industry, I need hardly add with infinite success. I do not know to what extent this propaganda could have contributed to the United States, entering into the World War; but so far as Sir Gilbert was concerned, he discharged his task with unremitting pains and efficiency. Does any Senator doubt that Sir Gilbert Parker had the cooperation of the munitions makers and the munitions mongers of that time? Does the Senate investigating committee doubt that the munitions makers and munitions mongers aided and abetted Sir Gilbert in his campaign? Does anyone in the Senate or out of the Senate doubt that the munitions mongers then as now were sitting like vultures upon the tree of life?

Sir Gilbert says that he began with university and college presidents, professors, and scientists. I wonder if the distinguished professors in Chicago have been contacted by some propagandist of equal industry and equal efficiency.

Sir Gilbert naively says:

> We advised and stimulated many people to write articles.

I know what he meant by "advised." I do not know what he meant by "stimulated." I am ignorant. I wonder if some generous knight errant—if some other Sir Gilbert—began with university professors and contacted the "three wise men" of Chicago University and stimulated them to barter away their birthright for a mess of pottage—for a miserable mess of European pottage? I have here a letter stating that 67 professors of international law in our universities and colleges think we ought to enter the World Court; and the truth is further vouchsafed—if it be true—that of 745 professors of law, just ordinary law, 475 thought we ought to disregard the warnings of Washington, thought we ought to violate the maxims of Jefferson, and thought we ought to embroil ourselves in the quarrels of Europe.

There is a short passage just preceding where the clerk began to read in the first instance which I should like to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Americans have nothing to gain by success in this war, except something spiritual, mental, manly, national, and human.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, Sir Gilbert advised us that we had nothing to gain by success in that war except something spiritual, and other terms equally as indefinite.

Now, when Sir Gilbert surveys the tragedy which followed in the trail of the war, when he surveys the wreck and the ruin that were wrought, he ought to find his feeling fitly expressed in the passage:

> Oh, give me the land of the wreck and the tomb!
> There's grandeur in graves; there's glory in gloom.

Now I ask to have read a passage following the first quotation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> Perhaps the safest situation that could be imagined actually did arise. The Democratic Party in America, which probably would not have supported a Republican President had he declared war, were practically forced by the logic of circumstances to support President Wilson when he declared war, because he had blocked up every avenue of attack.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, Sir Gilbert thinks that the Democrats followed their leader into the war; that the Democrats followed their leader—

> Into the jaws of death,
> Into the mouth of hell.

That is Sir Gilbert's opinion. I vouchsafe no judgment of my own upon that debatable issue.

Mr. President, President Roosevelt has sent a message to the Senate with respect to the World Court Treaty or protocol. I quote one sentence from the President's communication:

> Republican and Democratic administrations and party platforms alike have advocated a court of justice to which nations might voluntarily bring their disputes for judicial decision.

Mr. President, if that be the soul of this controversy, then there is no controversy. I, too, am in favor of a court where nations can voluntarily submit their disputes for a judicial decision. I do not believe there is a Member of the Senate who is opposed to such a court. I do not believe there is an American citizen who is opposed to a court where nations can voluntarily submit their disputes for a judicial decision. Sir, the word "voluntarily" is the soul of that passage.

Some of us are opposed to involuntary submission of our quarrels. Some of us are opposed to compulsion. Some of us are unwilling, by advisory opinions or otherwise, to be haled into this European Court against our will and against our interest.

Now, let us see what the real point is in this controversy, and see how slender an issue divides us all.

Everybody agrees to what the President says, that we should have a court where nations may make voluntary submission of their issues for judicial trial. We have such an institution now—the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague. Its doors stand ajar. It is available for disputants, where they can voluntarily submit their disputes for judicial consideration and judgment.

But, Mr. President, we are not relegated and restricted to the Court of Arbitration at The Hague. This World Court, with all its benedictions and its blessings, is available to the people of the United States. Its gates stand ajar. I ask to have read at this point article XXXV of the statute of the Court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the article will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE 35

> The Court shall be open to all states generally recognized by treaty or diplomatic relations with the signatories.
> When a state which is not a signatory is a party to a dispute, the Court will fix the amount which that party is to contribute toward the expenses of the Court.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the World Court stands open for the United States voluntarily to submit any quarrel or any issue to its consideration and its judgment. If we desire to connect ourselves with this Court for our own advantage, in order to avail ourselves of some peculiar advantage which this institution holds out, that advantage is available now. If we desire to join for some other reason, if we desire to join for some other motive, if we desire to join for some other object, if we desire to join for the advantage of others than ourselves, then we ought to ratify the pending resolution. Joining the Court brings no facility for justice that it does not now hold out for the United States.

If we are to join for the advantage of others, then we venture into the realm of risk and responsibility and of danger and of sanctions and possibly of war itself.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] the other day said that we could not afford to stand upon the privilege contained in section 35 of the statute of the Court because if we did it would characterize us as "spongers"; that we would be availing ourselves of the Court without paying the Court costs. That would make us "spongers."

Mr. President, section 35 provides that when we avail ourselves of the inspired justice of this World Court, we shall have the privilege of paying the costs of the Court, as we should pay.

I am willing to endow this Court, Mr. President. I will vote today an endowment of a billion dollars for the World Court, and give the Court an order on our defaulting debtors across the seas.

I listened to the impassioned eloquence of the Senator from Arkansas when he said that we would classify ourselves as "spongers" if we relied upon section 35 and did not pay the fiddler. I felt the force and the impact of his argument. It was designed to urge us to join the Court.

To me it is the most powerful argument I have yet heard against our entrance into the Court. The Senator said we would be "spongers", and sought to introduce us into the Court in order to escape the imputation and the epithet of being spongers, spongers, spongers!

I then envisaged that we had joined the Court under the spell of his irrestible eloquence; that a decision had been handed down by the Court; that our judge was among the dissenting judges; that sanctions were then imposed. And eloquent Senators rise in their places here and say, "Unless the United States takes part in the imposition of sanctions, unless the United States wages war at the bidding of the League, the United States will stigmatize herself as a slacker, as a slacker."

I doubt not that there are internationalists out of Congress who would be willing to sacrifice a half million American boys in order to escape the imputation of being a slacker.

Mr. President, when we join this Court, that brings us within the realm of sanctions, of pains and penalties; and I shall not discuss that point. I shall invoke the highest authority upon the World Court, "Sir" Manley Hudson, another professional patriot who is a cosmopolitan. However, I want to have read a passage from Dr. Hudson; and while the second quotation from Mr. Reuben Clark will be a little long, I shall ask the patience of Senators, because it is charged, perhaps, with the destiny of many American boys.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The statute fails to make any provision for the enforcement of either interim or final judgments, and the only "sanctions" behind the Court are those contained in the Covenant; and if any state should fail to abide by a decision, it will be for the Council of the League to "propose what steps should be taken to give effect thereto."—The Permanent Court of International Justice, by Manley Hudson.

Mr. GORE. Now, I shall ask to have read from the testimony of J. Reuben Clark given on May 16, 1934. Senators know Mr. Clark is a prominent American diplomatist.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

But I submit it is difficult to escape on any theory the practical certainty that by joining the World Court we would become amenable, that is, we would have agreed and would be understood to have agreed, that the provisions of article 17 of the Covenant could be applied against us when our action took us within the purview of its provisions. This article stipulates that if disputes shall arise among nonmembers of the League, they shall be—

"invited to accept membership in the League, for the purposes of such dispute, upon such conditions as the Council may deem just. If such invitation is accepted, the provisions of articles 12 to 16, inclusive, shall be applied with such modifications (not ameliorations) as may be deemed necessary by the Council."

The Covenant states:

"If a state so invited shall refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the League for the purposes of such dispute, and shall resort to war against a member of the League, the provisions of article 16 shall be applicable as against the state taking such action."

While in the contemplation of the Covenant these provisions would be applicable to us in our present status versus the League and the Court, if we came within the prescribed conditions, the point now made is that by joining the Court we may be held to have consented to the application to us of this jurisdiction and sanction; and our subjection to those provisions specifically involves us in all the sanctions provided in the Covenant, including the blockade and economic boycott stipulated in article 16 of the Covenant, measures which President Wilson characterized as a "peaceful, silent, deadly remedy", "something very much more terrible than war."

And may just a word be said in passing about this remedy so graphically and accurately described. For almost 3 centuries prior to the World War the efforts of jurists, statesmen, and military men had been to inject as much humanity as possible into the inhumanity of war. Distinctions had been drawn between combatants—the armed force—and the noncombatant population—the civilian population, between the soldiers in the field and the old, the infirm, the halt, the lame, and the blind, the women, the helpless children who were at home, and between the sick and wounded soldier in the hospital and the able-bodied man at the front. All nations engaged in the World War were guilty of practices that tended to break down all these humane rules.

Now this new remedy—"peaceful, silent, deadly remedy", "something very much worse than war"—is to be applied to the whole Nation; it makes no discrimination between soldiers and civilians, between old, infirm men and women and children and soldiers, between soldiers sick and soldiers healthy. The experiences of the last war teach us that when this remedy is applied the last to suffer will be the soldiers at the front who for the sake of Nation must be clothed, housed, and fed; they must be kept well, healthy, and strong; and the first to suffer, and to them it will come to die of famine and plague, will be the old and infirm, the mothers, and the helpless children, these are to be consigned to all the horrors of the old sieges of the ancients and of the Middle Ages. No wonder military men today are planning war measures that will exterminate whole peoples—men, women, and children—with such an example of world agreement for their guide. Nothing more inhuman has ever been proposed by any group of powers than the measures visualized by article 16 of the Covenant and adopted by its signatory States.

In this view, the remarks of Mr. de Lapradelle to the Committee of Jurists in 1920 gain a sinister significance. He said:

"If the League did not supply sufficient force to the Court, it certainly would fail."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if we heed the warnings and take the counsel of Washington, if we stand upon the maxims of Jefferson, we will not enter this Court.

If when the League of Nations says to the United States, "Will you walk into my parlor"—said the spider to the fly—we decline that invitation, if we stand upon the rights vouchsafed to us under article XXXV, we can avail ourselves of all the benefits of this benignant institution, and protect ourselves against all its calamities and the risk of its calamities.

Mr. President, I for one do not want to run the risk. We became involved in a European war without membership in any of their institutions. Could we hope to escape when we obligate ourselves, either expressly or impliedly, by the ratification of this treaty? For my part I will never vote to draft American boys and ship them across the sea to fight and bleed and die in anybody's battles but our own.

Mr. President, I would not sacrifice the life of one American boy, I would not break the heart of one American mother, to guard the boundaries or to maintain the territory of all the faith-breaking and debt-defaulting nations on this globe.

I do not believe this institution can be conjugated into a court. It cannot be made into a court. A judicial tribunal is supposed to decide controversies in accordance with established rules of law and equity and proven facts. This institution is not qualified for that service.

In the summer of 1931 I received a letter from one of my constituents urging me to support American adherence to the World Court. I desire to have read at this point my answer to that communication.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., July 17, 1931.

MRS. THOMAS S. NEWMAN,
Okmulgee, Okla.

MY DEAR MRS. NEWMAN: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated July 14, in which you make inquiry as to my opinion of the advisability of the United States becoming a member of the World Court, with full participation in its problems and support of its decisions.

I have been trying to keep an open mind upon the question as to the United States becoming a member of the World Court. I say this notwithstanding I have a decided conviction against the United States entering into any kind of entangling alliances with any nation on the globe, particularly with the nations of Europe.

Permit me to add that I am now watching and awaiting with the keenest interest the action of the World Court in respect to the proposed customs union or tariff union between Germany and Austria. That issue has been referred to the World Court. If the Court decides in favor of the customs union, it will do much to inspire my confidence in its judicial character and fairness. But if the World Court decides against the proposed customs union, it will do much to destroy any faith or confidence which I might otherwise have had in its judicial character and fairness.

I confess that I have entertained some doubt as to whether any international organization such as the World Court can in actual fact and practice be a court at all. A court as such ought to be governed in its decisions by established principles, customs, and laws, as applied to the facts proven in the particular case. Europe is now as in the past divided into different political groups. I have felt some fear that the decisions of the World Court might be governed by political interest and consideration, not to say political rivalries, rather than by established principles and proven facts. If this fear should come true, the Court would not be a judicial tribunal no matter what its name and membership, and it might prove a source of embarrassment, not to say a positive handicap.

I am sure that you have given full consideration all these points and have resolved in favor of our membership in the Court.

Whether it is the World Court or Russian communism I am sure that you will agree with me that any kind of inspired propaganda, whether for a world court or Russian communism, ought to make a disclosure of its credentials and its sponsors in order to entitle itself to "full faith and credit"—and favorable action.

Yours truly,

T. P. GORE.

Mr. GORE. Will the clerk now please read the next letter?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the letter.

DECEMBER 31, 1931.

GEORGE G. WATSON,
Vice President First National Bank,
Bartlesville, Okla.

MY DEAR SIR: I am pleased to acknowledge yours of the 28th and to have the expression of your views concerning the United States becoming a member of the World Court.

It would give me pleasure to find myself in accord with you upon this subject, and I therefore regret that I have reached a contrary decision.

I am enclosing a letter which I wrote a constituent last summer. I rather hinged my conclusion upon the decision of the Court upon the proposed customs union between Austria and Germany. The decision was, as you will remember, against the tariff, or customs union. Our representative and that of Great Britain, and five others, decided for the union. France was supported by enough of her satelites to defeat the proposed customs union. Perhaps the controlling feather which determined my judgment was a statement in the Manchester Guardian, which I take, which reported France as saying that she would not adhere to, or would not be bound by the Court's decision, if it was adverse to her attitude.

The Court is really a French Court. The League of Nations is really a French League. In my judgment, it is not a judicial tribunal. It is a political institution.

Entertaining these views you will, of course, appreciate my attitude toward the Court. Again regretting our difference of views, I remain,

With best wishes for a prosperous New Year.

Your friend truly,

T. P. GORE.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS,
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 19, 1934.

Miss AMY COMSTOCK,
Associate Editor, the Tulsa Tribune, Tulsa, Okla.

MY DEAR MISS COMSTOCK: This will acknowledge your letter of late date with reference to the World Court.

I am enclosing copies of two letters I wrote in 1931 on this subject, which will explain my position.

It is much more than probable that the bloody catastrophe which has just happened in Austria is a direct result of the decision on the part of the World Court against the proposed tariff, or customs union, between Germany and Austria. If the Court had permitted Germany and Austria to enter into the customs union, it might have obviated the campaign which Hitler has been carrying on to build up a following within the confines of Austria adverse to the present political establishment in Austria.

I may be wrong, but I do not think we could do a better thing than to keep out of the bloody whirlpool of European politics and European wars. No matter how much we differ, I am sure you will appreciate my point of view.

With best wishes, believe me,

Yours very truly,

T. P. GORE.

Mr. GORE. The World Court is a creature of the League of Nations. The League of Nations is the creator, and the Court is the creature. The League of Nations is made up of some 52 different powers—

Embracing every character of race—black, brown, and yellow—every kind of government from dictatorship to democracy; every sort of religion from voodooism to Christianity; every degree of progress from cannibalism to civilization.

I quote this from a former distinguished Member of this body, Senator Reed, of Missouri. I pause here to pay a merited tribute to Jim Reed, to William Borah, to Hiram Johnson. More than to any other—I might almost say more than to all other—American citizens, we are indebted to them for keeping the United States out of the League of Nations. Their services remind me of Horatius of old, when he and his two intrepid comrades held the bridge against 90,000 Tuscan troops. I would not undertake to cast the characters. Each may arrange the cast for himself. Either might well serve as Horatius when he said:

"Hew down the bridge, Sir Consul,
With all the speed ye may;
I, with two more to help me,
Will hold the foe in play.
In yon strait path a thousand
May well be stopped by three:
Now who will stand on either hand,
And keep the bridge with me?"

Then out spake Spurius Lartius—
A Ramnian proud was he:
"Lo, I will stand at thy right hand,
And keep the bridge with thee."
And out spake strong Herminius—
Of Titian blood was he:
"I will abide on thy left side,
And keep the bridge with thee."

"Horatius," quoth the Consul,
"As thou sayest so let it be."
And straight against that great array
Went forth the dauntless three.

And the dauntless three held 90,000 Tuscans at bay, while saw and hammer destroyed the bridge across the Tiber, and saved Rome from pillage and destruction.

I can understand the motives of the burglar who breaks into a house to rob it of its plate or its jewels; I can understand the motives of the highwayman, the racketeer who uses a machine gun in order to murder and plunder his victims, weighing all the advantages and disadvantages, he hopes to profit by the transaction; but I cannot appreciate the motives of him who would usher the United States into the bloody shambles, into the slaughter pens of Europe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GORE. My time on the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On both the resolution and the reservation. The Senator has spoken on both, 15 minutes on the reservation, and 30 minutes on the resolution. The question is on agreeing to the reservation offered by the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I shall not, of course, attempt to pursue the subject, but I am sorry I did not have opportunity to discuss my reservation, which provides that the nations of Europe shall pay their debts before we join the Court.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the reservation.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to have the reservation read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That adherence to the said protocols and statute provided for above shall not become or remain effective and shall not be or become binding while or when any nation which is an adherent of said protocols and which is indebted to the Government of the United States shall be in arrears for a period of more than 6 months in respect of any payment due upon such indebtedness.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, manifestly this is a reservation which is intended to encompass the defeat of the resolution in every practical aspect.

I ask the friends of the Court to vote down the reservation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the limitation of 6 months be amended so as to make it 1 year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I make that motion.

Mr. GORE. I thank my colleague.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That the reservation be amended to strike out "6 months" and to insert "12 months"?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] to the reservation proposed by the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if I am eligible to comment for a moment on that amendment, I shall not take much of the time of the Senate——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has 15 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. GORE. I shall come to the point. I note what the Senator from Arkansas has said, and while I may be ignorant, as the professors say, I am not ignorant of the fact that 12 nations of Europe owe the United States $12,000,000,000. I am not ignorant of the fact that England owes us $4,700,000,000, that France owes us $3,900,000,000, that Italy owes us more than $2,000,000,000. I am not ignorant of the fact that France is in arrears $141,000,000, and that England is in arrears $261,000,000.

Mr. President, it perhaps is natural that the Senator from Arkansas should suggest that this is a mere motion to embarrass the friends of the Court. We are asked to join this Court, to sit around the council table with nations which are indebted to us more than $12,000,000,000.

I am under no illusion that these debts will ever be paid in full. I am under no illusion that the United States will ever cancel these debts, I mean, outright. But I do realize that these debts are an obstruction to commerce, to international trade, and, to some extent, they are an irritant which disturbs international relations.

President Roosevelt has been trying, under the law passed a year ago, to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements with the different nations of the earth. Only one such agreement has been consummated, and that with our understudy, the island of Cuba.

It seems to me that if this reservation be adopted, it would at least remind the people of Europe, if they have forgotten these debts, that we have not forgotten them. I have in mind several adjustments which could be made which would facilitate the settlement of these debts and the furtherance of more friendly and cordial relations between this country and Europe. I have not time to elaborate upon them now; but, Mr. President, the nations of Europe now in default are resentful toward the United States. The money which they borrowed to preserve their existence is in default, and they resent the suggestion that we should like to be paid, not in full but in part.

Mr. President, I desire now to quote from an English magazine upon this point. An English magazine said that the terms in which Americans are commonly referred to in Europe are "bloodsuckers, hypocrites, and Shylocks." I quote: "Bloodsuckers, hypocrites, and Shylocks." In Europe they say that "U. S." does not stand for "Uncle Sam"; that it stands for "Uncle Shylock."

Mr. President, as you know, the ancient law of divorce was that when a husband cohabited with his wife after a known act of infidelity, he had condoned the offense and forfeited his right to a divorce on the ground of infidelity. How shall we sit about the council board of Europe with nations sitting at the board who stigmatize us as "bloodsuckers, hypocrites, and Shylocks" without condoning their default?

Mr. President, those epithets slander the living. More than that, they slander the dead. The living may submit to this insult if they please. Someone should defend the dead. Someone has said that "Noble spirits war not with the dead. They war not even with their enemies when they have paid the last, final debt to Nature." These people are warring with their friends. They are warring with their defenders. They are warring with those who died in their defense. They are dishonoring the dead.

I sometimes wonder what our boys would think; I sometimes wonder how our boys would feel; I sometimes wonder what our boys would say—our boys who lie buried in France, who laid down their lives in the morningtide of existence, who laid down their lives that France might live—I sometimes wonder what they would say if they could hear the words "bloodsucker", "hypocrite", "Shylock"; could hear those words whispered by the mourning winds as they murmur melancholy music through the grass upon their graves. Would they not say, "Was it for this you bade us die?" Would they not say, "Was it for these that you sent us to untimely graves?"

Ah, sir, if only the dead could speak! But, alas! "from the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word."

EXHIBIT A

SENATORS OF THE UNITED STATES!

ARE THESE THE FORGOTTEN MEN?

From the farewell address of George Washington (President of the United States, 1789–97) to the people of the United States:

Friends and fellow citizens:

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. * * * The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. * * * Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our interests. * * * Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

United States, September 17, 1796.

George Washington wrote to Patrick Henry in October 1795, when he offered him the Secretaryship of State:

"My ardent desire is, and my aim has been as far as depended upon the executive department, to comply strictly with all our engagements, foreign and domestic; but to keep the United States free from political connection with every other country, to see them independent of all and under the influence of none. In a word, I want an American character, that the powers of Europe may be convinced that we act for ourselves, and not for others. This, in my judgment, is the only way to be respected abroad and happy at home; and not, by becoming partisans of Great Britain or France, create dissensions, disturb the public tranquillity, and destroy, perhaps forever, the cement which binds the Union."

John Adams (President 1797-1801)—from his letters:

"It is obvious that all the powers of Europe will be continually maneuvering with us to work us into their real or imaginary balances of power. They will all wish to make of us a make-weight candle, when they are weighing out their bounds. Indeed, it is not surprising; for we shall very often, if not always, be able to turn the scale. But I think it ought to be our rule not to meddle; and that of all the powers of Europe, not to desire us, or, perhaps, even to permit us, to interfere, if they can help it."

---

Thomas Jefferson (President 1801–9) in a letter to President James Monroe:

"I have ever deemed it fundamental for the United States never to take active part in the quarrels of Europe. Their political interests are entirely distinct from ours. Their mutual jealousies, their balance of power, their complicated alliances, their forms and principles of government are all foreign to us. They are nations of eternal war."

From his first inaugural address:

"Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none."

---

James Madison (President 1809–17) in his first inaugural address March 2, 1809:

"Indulging no passions which trespass on the rights of the repose of other nations, it has been the true glory of the United States to cultivate peace by observing justice and to entitle themselves to the respect of the nations at war by fulfilling their neutrality obligations with the utmost impartiality."

---

James Monroe (President 1817–25) in his annual message to Congress, 1823:

"The political system of the allied (European) powers is essentially different from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments; * * *

"We owe it, therefore, to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those European powers, who declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety.

"With the existing colonies and dependencies of any European powers we have not interfered and shall not interfere."

---

John Quincy Adams (President, 1825–29), while Secretary of State, wrote, on July 5, 1820:

"The political system of the United States is also essentially extra-European. To stand in firm and cautious independence of all entanglements in the European system has been a cardinal point of their policy under every administration of their Government from the peace of 1783 to this day. If at the original adoption of their system there could have been any doubt of its justice or its wisdom, there can be none at this time. Every year's experience rivets it more deeply in the principles and opinions of the Nation. Yet in proportion as the importance of the United States as one of the members of the general society of nations increases in the eyes of the others, the difficulties of maintaining this system and the temptations to depart from it increase and multiply with it.

---

Andrew Jackson (President 1829–37) in a message to Congress:

"Cultivate free commerce and honest friendship with all nations, but make entangling alliances with none. Our best wishes on all occasions, our good offices when required, will be afforded to promote the domestic peace and foreign tranquillity of all nations with whom we have any intercourse. Any intervention in their affairs further than this is contrary to our principles."

---

Abraham Lincoln (President 1861–65) in his second annual message December 1, 1862:

"The Civil War, which has so radically changed for the moment the occupations and habits of the American people, has necessarily disturbed the social condition and affected very deeply the prosperity of the nations with which we have carried on commerce throughout a period of half a century.

"It has at the same time excited political ambitions and apprehensions which have produced a profound agitation throughout the civilized world. In this unusual agitation we have forborne from taking any part in any controversy between foreign states. And between parties and factions in such states. We have attempted no propagandism. We have left to every nation the exclusive conduct and management of its own affairs."

Grover Cleveland (President 1885–89 and 1893–97)—In a message to Congress:

"The genius of our institutions, the needs of our people in their home life, and the attention which is demanded for the settlement and development of the resources of our vast territory, dictate the scrupulous avoidance of any departure from that foreign policy commended by the history, the traditions, and the prosperity of our Republic. It is the policy of independence, favored by our position and defended by our known love of justice and by our own power. It is the policy of peace suitable to our interests. It is the policy of neutrality, rejecting any share in foreign broils and ambitions upon other continents and repelling their intrusion here. It is the policy of Monroe, and of Washington, and Jefferson—'Peace, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliance with none.'"

---

William McKinley (President 1897–1901):

"It has been the policy of the United States since the foundation of the Government to cultivate relations of peace and amity with all the nations of the world, and this accords with my conception of our duty now.

"We have cherished the policy of noninterference with the affairs of foreign government, wisely inaugurated by Washington * * *. Content to leave undisturbed with them the settlement of their own domestic concerns."

---

Theodore Roosevelt (President 1901–9):

"I do not believe that the United States should enter into a world-wide career of disinterested violence for the right; because where both the lands and the issues involved are remote from us our people wouldn't know with certainty where the right lay and wouldn't feel that we ought to go into the quarrel. We have enough to do that is our business."

---

Patrick Henry (born 1736, died 1799):

"It is natural for man to indulge in the illusion of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth, and listen to the song of that siren 'till she transforms us into beasts. Is this the part of wise men, engaged in a great and arduous struggle for liberty? Are we disposed to be of the number of those who, having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not, the things which so nearly concern their temporal salvation? For my part, whatever anguish of spirit it may cost, I am willing to know the whole truth; to know the worst, and to provide for it. I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging of the future but by the past."

Daniel Webster (born 1782, died 1852):

"Great father of your country, we need your words; we feel their force, as if you now uttered them with lips of flesh and blood. Your example teaches us, your affectionate addresses teach us, your public life teaches us, the sense of the value of the blessing of the Union. Those blessings our fathers have tasted, and we have tasted and still taste. Nor do we intend that those who come after us shall be denied the same high function."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment I offered a moment ago be withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The question is on the reservation offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I have previously made today, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I reannounce the general pair between my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] and the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. On this question I do not know how either Senator would vote if present.

Mr. LEWIS. I repeat the announcement heretofore made by me on previous roll calls as to the absence of certain Senators, and the reasons therefor.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 57, as follows:

YEAS—26

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Bilbo | Donahey | Murray | Thomas, Okla. |
| Bone | Frazier | Nye | Trammell |
| Borah | Gore | Reynolds | Walsh |

So Mr. GORE's reservation was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution of adherence.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending resolution, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution:

Resolved further, That as a part of this act of ratification the United States approve the protocols and statute hereinbefore mentioned upon the condition and with the clear understanding that recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the interpretation of or for any adversary opinion concerning any treaty, agreement, or arrangement fixing or dealing with tariff rates and duties imposed upon the importation of goods, wares, and merchandise into the United States shall not at any time be had.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, it is so late that I shall not discuss the amendment beyond undertaking to state its purpose. Its simple and sole purpose is to make certain that the tariff acts and the tariff policy of the United States shall not come within the jurisdiction of the Court.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the reservation.

The reservation was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Legislature of Massachusetts has pending before it a resolution instructing the two Senators from Massachusetts to oppose the pending resolution. The parliamentary situation is such that action cannot be taken upon that resolution for some days. In the meantime I have received telegrams, one being from the members of the Massachusetts State Senate, protesting against the resolution of adherence, which telegram is signed by 30 of the 40 members of the State senate. Among the 30 members of the State senate who signed the telegram are both Democrats and Republicans, the present president of the State senate and the ex-president of the State senate.

I also have a telegram signed by 176 members of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts expressing their views in opposition to the pending resolution and asking the two Senators to so regard their votes. The 176 members constitute both Democrats and Republicans. I am informed that the number of representatives signing the telegram would probably have been 200 of the 240 members if some members located in distant parts of the State could have been reached. I am informed further that but two members of the State senate refused to sign this petition, and that of those interviewed only a limited number of the members of the house refused to sign.

I have also a telegram from the department commander of the American Legion of Massachusetts in opposition to the pending resolution.

I also have a telegram from the Massachusetts Democratic senators and representatives assembled at their first luncheon of the present session resolving opposition, without a dissenting vote, to entrance into the World Court.

I ask that these communications be printed in the RECORD in connection with the debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The communications referred to are as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., January 26, 1935.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.:

We the undersigned members of the Massachusetts Senate, unalterably opposed to American adherence to Court of League of Nations, respectfully petition you to vote against adherence when the matter comes up for a vote in the United States Senate.

Senators Joseph P. Donahue, Boston; Edward C. Carroll, South Boston; William F. Madden, Jamaica Plain; Joseph A. Langone, Jr., Boston; John S. Sullivan, Worcester; P. Eugene Casey, Milford; Charles T. Cavanagh, Cambridge; Walter L. Considine, Ipswich; Charles F. Daly, Medford; Albert Cole, Lynn; James G. Moran, president, Mansfield; Cornelius F. Haley, Rowley; James C. Scanlan, Somerville; William A. Davenport, Greenfield; Frank Hurley, Holyoke; William F. McCarty, Lowell; Francis M. McKeown, Springfield; Charles G. Miles, Brockton; George G. Moyse, Waltham; Donald W. Nicholson, Wareham; Edward H. Nutting, Leominster; Albert Pierce, Salem; Harry B. Putnam, Westfield; Joseph C. White, Jamaica Plain; Samuel H. Wragg, Needham; James P. Meehan, Lawrence; William S. Conroy, Fall River; John F. Donovan, Chelsea; Erland F. Fish, Brookline.

BOSTON, MASS., January 28, 1935.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.:

I have been contacted by hundreds of my constituents who are opposed to the entry of the United States into the World Court. As a liaison officer of the State department of the American Legion and senator of the eighth Suffolk district, I wish to record myself in accordance with the opinion of the great majority of my constituents, and the opinion of practically every member of the American Legion, as unalterably opposed to the entry of the United States in the World Court, and I request that you vote "no" on this legislation.

THOMAS M. BURKE,
Senator Eighth Suffolk District.

P. S.—Sunday, January 27, I addressed the Suffolk County Veterans of Foreign Wars and Suffolk Voiture of the Forty and Eight, and both organizations passed unanimous resolutions against the entry of the United States into the World Court, and telegrams were forwarded asking you to vote against our entry.

---

BOSTON, MASS., January 29, 1935.

We, the undersigned members of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, convinced of the wisdom of the injunction laid down by Washington against foreign entanglements and therefore unalterably opposed to American adherence to the Court of the League of Nations, hereby respectfully request United States Senators DAVID I. WALSH and MARCUS A. COOLIDGE to vote against adherence when the matter comes up for a vote in the United States Senate.

Representative Thomas Dorgan; Representative John F. Aspell, Boston; Representative Timothy J. Murphy, Boston; Representative Joseph H. Downey, Brockton; Representative Edward J. Kelley, of Worcester, Mass.; Representative Thomas P. Dillon, Cambridge; Representative Daniel J. BOSTON, MASS., January 24, 1935.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator:

Respectfully urge you vote for support of maintenance of sovereignty of United States by refusing ratification World Court protocols.

JEREMIAH J. TWOMEY,
Commander American Legion Massachusetts.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am instructed to inform the Senate that a telegram has been placed in my hands to be read, the contents of which I shall recite. From Genoa, Italy, comes a cable to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN] saying:

Pair us for the World Court.

MCKELLAR AND TYDINGS.

As the Senator-elect from Tennessee has not been sworn in, of course, a pair may not be arranged for him. As to the Senator from Maryland, a subsequent announcement will be made as to that pair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of adherence as amended.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the final vote on the resolution of adherence to the World Court is about to be cast, and I presume, from what I know about the situation, that it will be in the affirmative by the required constitutional majority.

I offered an amendment a day or two ago in the form of a reservation which, it seemed to me, if it had been agreed to, would have clarified the situation and made it plain, fixing it beyond the possibility of a doubt that no danger would ever have come to our country through our adhering to the World Court.

While I do not criticize, and do not want to be understood as finding fault with any Senators who voted against the reservation, as I view the situation now that reservation, or some similar reservation, is absolutely necessary in order to save our country from some possible danger. And holding that view, believing, as I do, that the safeguards which seem to me to be necessary to protect us have been swept aside and voted down, I feel it my conscientious duty to vote against the resolution of adherence.

Practically the same thing I sought before would have been accomplished today, in my opinion, if an amendment striking out the words "general treaty" had been agreed to. As it stands now, there is a possibility, if not a very strong probability, that we will be called upon before long to approve general treaties by which we will agree on our part to submit to the World Court every controversy which may arise.

As I see the situation, that would be a dangerous step for the United States to take. I have said before that I can reach this conclusion, and do, without necessarily implying any lack of ability, any honesty, or any patriotism, in any of the members of the Court. But it seems to me I can see plainly that there is a great possibility that questions will arise in the future which, under no circumstances would I feel justified, as an American citizen, in submitting to that Court as it is now constituted, and as it will probably be constituted in the future throughout all time.

One thing about it that grieves me much—and it is for that reason principally that I feel it is a duty I owe to say something on this occasion—is that under no circumstances do I want to be one who will in any way directly or indirectly interfere with any movement in Europe that will have a tendency to decide questions in dispute between nations in a court of reason rather than upon the battlefield.

I know the charge will be made that those of us who shall vote against the resolution of adherence will do so because we are friendly toward the settlement of international disputes by war rather than by arbitration. Nothing could be further from the truth as I see it. I feel that I should like, by any gesture I can make, to help Europe to decide her international questions by means other than war. That is the reason why I think I should not like to put a straw in the path of any such settlement in Europe by any European tribunal.

At the same time I feel that I cannot go so far in that assistance as I want to go, and feel desirous of going, as to jeopardize by any possible action any future controversy that may arise in which our country has a direct or even an indirect interest.

I thought I had made it easy for friends of the World Court to vote for the reservation which I offered the other day, because I had provided in the reservation, instead of putting in, as there is now, a stipulation that treaties should necessarily be made, that our consent on the part of the Senate to the submission of any dispute should simply require a two-thirds vote here and such action on the part of the Senate before any dispute could be submitted.

The reservation that has now been adopted provides for the red tape of a treaty. If the original reservation offered by me had been agreed to, it would have been a very simple matter for the President to submit the question to the Senate as to whether it would agree to the submission of a matter to the Court. No other country would have had any interest in it. No other country could by any possible construction of law have any complaint to make as to what method we took on our part to submit a controversy to the Court. I very cheerfully would have voted for the resolution of adherence had that amendment been agreed to. I am exceedingly sorry that I feel that I cannot vote for it without that reservation.

When today the reservation came up providing for a treaty, general or special, it was divulged then in the debate that by a single treaty any number of controversies could be submitted, although the treaty providing for such procedure must, of course, receive a two-thirds vote on the part of the Senate for its approval. But one treaty would put us under obligations to submit controversies to that Court about which we knew absolutely nothing at the time we might approve the treaty. With that condition in it, which previously I had not really understood, it seemed to me that it still left us in the dangerous position of submitting to this Court controversies far in advance of the arising of the controversies themselves, and at a time when we could not possibly know anything about the controversy or even that there would be such a controversy.

I am unwilling to go that far. I am unwilling to submit to that tribunal controversies which may arise in the future, about which I can know nothing whatever at this time and about which our country can know nothing whatever at this time. I am not willing to submit to that tribunal any controversy that is not understood at the time it is submitted.

I think in taking that position I am not taking a position that can be by any possible means construed to mean that I am opposed to arbitration or that I am opposed to submitting international controversies to arbitration.

But there may come controversies, after we are dead and gone, if we agree to such a general treaty, which, in my judgment, would not get a dozen votes in the Senate of the United States as it is constituted now if we were called upon to submit such controversies to this Court. We know what the Court is. We know how it is constituted. We know how it is going to be constituted. It is in the main and always will be a Court composed mostly of men not familiar with American questions—and that is no detriment to it and I do not offer it as a criticism—not having the viewpoint of the American Government and its citizens, but constituted of men who have grown up under a different civilization and with entirely different views as to what ought to happen.

We agreed some time ago to a resolution adhering to the Court with certain reservations. I voted for it at that time. It had in it then the reservation that we have now agreed to. My idea was, until the discussion today, that that resolution practically covered the situation. I can see clearly now that it does not, as I have tried to point out to the Senate.

Moreover, since that time a great deal of water has gone over the wheel; a great many things have happened. I would mention some of them if it were not for fear that I might be misunderstood in the discussion of some of those questions. We have had many dealings in the years that have passed. The Court has made some decisions during that time, for instance, a decision, which has been discussed here to a considerable extent, growing out of the agreement between Austria and Germany which is conceded, I believe, or conceded in large part, at any rate, to involve some political issues. It is known that some of the great countries and the great statesmen of Europe said while that case was pending in the Court that they would not submit to the decision if it went contrary to their views. If we were in the League and in the Court and that decision had not been the other way and some of the nations that had agreed to the submission of the case and agreed to have the Court act had objected to the decision after it had been made, if they had refused to abide by the judgment of the Court, it would probably have meant war. If we were in the Court, I think we would feel some obligation to back up the decisions of the Court; we would feel some obligation and some responsibility for its protection; and to see that its judgments were carried out, even though those judgments involved no American question, and it is possible—it is probable, I think, although it might not follow, I concede—that if war had resulted, we would have been drawn into it.

Many of us who are here now know how we were drawn into the last war, and the things that happened then that brought us in may happen again. I hope to God they never will; but we know how men were taken off their feet, how men lost their reason, how men went wildly in favor of war who perhaps would not do so again. But other men are coming on; they are going to be subject to the same impulses; they are going to be subject to the same kind of propaganda which was successfully employed then and which took us into the war; and I do not want to take any action now that, by any possible construction in the future, with a new set of men here, will, as I fear, under the same conditions, bring us into another bloody catastrophe.

So, Mr. President, I feel that under the conditions existing today I cannot afford to vote to take my country into the World Court; and notwithstanding the possibility, notwithstanding, perhaps, the probability of my being wrong, I am not able to reach the conscientious conviction that a vote in favor of the pending resolution of adherence would be satisfactory to my own conscience. Therefore I shall embrace the opportunity to vote against it.

Mr. BULOW. Mr. President, I had not intended to speak on the pending resolution, and do not now intend to speak at any length. I have no desire to trespass upon the time of the Senate, but I feel that I should take just a moment or two to explain the vote which I intend to cast.

Heretofore I have been in favor of the League of Nations and of the World Court, but the reflections of the last year or two have caused me somewhat to change my mind. I have listened to this debate, heard most of it, and most of that which I have not heard I have read; and I find, so far as I now remember, that every Senator here who is in favor of going into the World Court is only in favor of going into it provided certain reservations are made. That leads me to the conclusion that perhaps it is a dangerous thing to go into the Court.

During the more than 60 years of my life, in an humble way, often questions have come to me upon which action had to be taken; and from that experience I have realized that my Creator endowed me with a something which, for the want of a better name, we have seen fit to call a conscience. That conscience has always pointed out the road to me. If there were two roads to take, that conscience has always told me the right and the wrong road. I have not always obeyed it, but every time I have violated its dictates, apologies and regrets have been necessary. When I have followed its dictates, I do not now remember of a single apology that was necessary.

I sincerely dislike, and it is with deep regret that I am forced, to part company with my administration. It is with deep regret that I cannot follow my leader upon this side of the floor. To me that leadership is voluntary and I can do as I please, but my conscience is not voluntary and I must walk with my consicence constantly until the end of my days.

Under the view I now entertain, much as I regret it, I cannot support the pending resolution of adherence. I thank the Senate for its kindly consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to delay the vote of the Senate. It seems appropriate, however, that a moment be taken to take note of the remarks made by the Senator who has just taken his seat [Mr. BULOW].

I point out to him, as to all others, that the reservations which have been adopted, and which he says make him mistrustful of the correctness of his attitude in supporting the World Court, are the identical reservations which were adopted in 1926, and which have therefore been in the contemplation of everyone who has formed a conclusion concerning the subject since that time.

In reference to the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the whole effect and purpose of the campaign that has been made during the past few days has been to terrify people who profess to be in favor of the Court, and lead them to the conviction that there is some mysterious, hidden danger likely to produce disaster, disturb peace, and cause destruction of life and property in the United States if we should adhere to the World Court. The object and purpose of the Court is to afford a judicial process for the settlement of disputes which, without such process, might lead to unfriendly relations or war.

There is no argument upon which to rest the conclusion that in joining the World Court the United States endangers the lives or the property of our citizens, or involves our country in European entanglements. The simple question which comes out of all the confusion that has enveloped us during this debate is this:

Do we, as intelligent persons; do we, as law-abiding and peace-minded citizens, wish to hold out hope to our people that we are capable of contributing to the maintenance of an institution which has the power and the integrity to settle issues according to law?

If we answer that question in the negative, we say to every citizen in this country, "No; we have not the intelligence, we have not the power to do anything about it. There is nothing that can be done which will hold out to peace-minded citizens even the hope that the nations may have their issues settled in accordance with law and in accordance with judicial principles. You must look forward to only what you have seen in the past. You must await not the calm decision of men, but to tumult and the shouting, to the beating of drums, the blowing of the horns, the sounding of cannons. You must await the results which are to be determined on fields of strife."

Mr. President, it is a sad thought to me that, after years of deliberation on the subject, the Senate should recede from the position it took many years ago, and now indicate its purpose not to do anything that may be helpful in the peaceful composition of international disputes.

Do not forget it. There has been unfair, unjust, unreasonable propaganda carried on during the course of this debate, carried on by agencies outside the Senate. Appeals have gone from end to end of the country to citizens to send telegrams to Senators to take a stand of opposition on this issue. More than 40,000 telegrams have been sent here in response to such requests, every one of them prompted by inflammatory statements in public addresses that are not based on facts.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I decline to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not care to interrupt the Senator from Arkansas, and I am willing that he should make his speech; but when he declines to yield, it occurs to me that he is out of order. He has spoken upon this subject under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no!

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, yes!

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no, Mr. President; I have not spoken on the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator has spoken half a dozen times upon the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not spoken at all on the resolution since the agreement became effective. I have spoken on the reservations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk advises the Chair that since the unanimous-consent agreement was made the Senator from Arkansas has not spoken on the resolution, but has spoken on the reservations. That is the advice the Chair has from the clerk who keeps the record of speakers.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I was only going to ask the Senator about what propaganda he referred to. Did he refer to his own speech of last night? [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President. I shall be entirely frank with the Senator from Louisiana. I referred neither to my speech last night nor to his numerous speeches delivered on the subject. [Laughter.]

I doubt whether either my speech or the speeches of the Senator from Louisiana have had very much influence or effect on public opinion in the United States. I have in mind an address made by Father Coughlin in which he made declarations that I do not believe are supported by the record or by the facts. I think he permitted his imagination to run riot.

In the first place, he impugned the intelligence of Senators. He appealed "from an ill-informed Senate to a well-informed Senate." I am wondering if he did not appeal from Philip sober to Philip drunk.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SCHALL. I am wondering if the address by Mrs. Roosevelt did not offset that of Father Coughlin.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am not surprised that the Senator from Minnesota is wondering. He is at liberty to wonder all he pleases. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHALL. I heard Mrs. Roosevelt's address, and I heard Father Coughlin's address.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not going to yield to the Senator from Minnesota to make one of his characteristic attacks on Mr. Roosevelt. I have not time to listen to that just now.

Mr. SCHALL. No; I was speaking of Mrs. Roosevelt.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Reverend Father made another statement which I think should be called to the attention of the Senate. He said that the chief support of the World Court comes from plutocrats and international bankers. That sounds like the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], does it not? [Laughter.] The truth is, when I made that statement he seemed to enjoy it so much that I was reminded of the methods of statement and declaration commonly employed by the Senator from Louisiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the National Grange, almost every bar association in America, all the church organization of every faith, numerous civic clubs, women's clubs, political clubs, and even those old-fashioned clubs, the Democratic and Republican conventions, have declared for the World Court; and here I wish to point out the fact that the declaration of the Republican Party was without qualification.

It did not insist on any reservations. The Republican platform of 1932 boasted that three Republican Presidents had advocated the World Court; and it announced the principle that this country would be safer—the people of the country would be safer, and their rights would be more secure—if we should go into the World Court. Now some of our friends on the other side have forgotten the terms of their platforms and are looking for a way in which to escape from the obligation to stand on it.

Not only have the farm organizations and all the clubs I have mentioned taken this action, but the American Federation of Labor has repeatedly declared for adherence to the World Court.

The Reverend Father, in his characteristic and impassioned speech, also said or implied that all the veterans in the country are against the World Court. Apparently he did not recall that in 1925 and 1929 the American Legion adopted resolutions urging adherence to the World Court.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Arkansas, of course, recalls that the last pronouncement of the American Legion on this subject was against the adherence of the United States to the World Court.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not question that, but it has repeatedly declared itself for the adherence of the United States to the World Court.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not in the last few years, however.

Mr. ROBINSON. One convention, of course, cannot bind another. I do not wish to waste my time discussing an elementary principle like that. The next convention might declare for it.

There is another statement made by the Reverend Father which I think ought to be challenged: that is, that he intimates that the constitution of the Court and its statutes indicate that it will wage war on women and children. There is no foundation for such assertions as that.

A few days ago, when the Senate entered into an agreement to limit debate, a large number of newspapers in this country published, with glaring headlines, "Gag rule adopted by the Senate", as if an effort had been made to suppress debate. The fact is, known to every Senator, that there are only two ways here of limiting debate—one by unanimous consent and the other by cloture.

The cloture rule was not invoked because there was no filibuster. There has not been an attempt at filibuster during the progress of this debate. But a unanimous-consent agreement was entered into under which we are now operating, and that agreement was consented to by every Member of this body. A single Senator could have prevented it. Then to say that a "gag rule" has been resorted to in order to prevent free expression of opinion by Senators is unfair. It is on the same plane with other propaganda that has been carried on during the course of this debate.

I know the Senate is anxious to vote. I am appreciative of the attention that has been given to me, and I shall conclude with this suggestion.

An American tradition is at stake. An American aspiration is attacked in the name of Americanism. I plead for an interpretation of Americanism in line with the insistence by every President since McKinley, every Secretary of State since Hay, and by an overwhelming majority of the unexcited people of America.

Yesterday reference was made by the Senator from California to the general expressions by McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt, the implication being that those great statesmen would be opposed to the World Court. I point out the fact that they have committed themselves on that subject, and by their expressions I will prove that they were in favor of the World Court.

When a general expression is quoted as an indication of the position of anyone, it is fair to refer to what has been said by that individual on the particular question that is under consideration. I make the assertion that the World Court idea originated in the mind of McKinley and in the mind of Theodore Roosevelt, and I propose to prove it by brief quotations from what they said.

McKinley said:

> The long-continued and wide-spread interest among the people of the United States in the establishment of an international court gives assurance that the proposal of a definite plan of procedure by this Government for the accomplishment of this end would express the desires and aspirations of the Nation.

On the basis of that declaration, I say that President McKinley favored the creation of a world court.

What was Theodore Roosevelt's statement? He said this:

> It should be your effort to bring about in the second conference a development of The Hague Tribunal into a permanent tribunal composed of judges who are judicial officers and nothing else, who are paid adequate salaries, who have no other occupation, and who will devote their entire time to the trial and decision of international causes by judicial method and under a sense of judicial responsibility.

Those were unequivocal declarations by McKinley and Roosevelt. They favored the creation of a world court. I have a longer statement here from former President Theodore Roosevelt, but I shall not read it.

Senators, this is a grave issue. It is not simply the immediate issue which we have to face; it is the danger to our institutions from demagogic appeals made in ignorance or with malicious purpose. Based upon the attack which I have referred to, the Hearst press is calling upon the citizens of this country to vote against what it calls a "conspiracy to involve us in the World Court." There is no conspiracy among the nations members of the World Court. There can be no conspiracy when the object is to promote a wholesome and desirable end—the substitution of justice for force.

For 12 long years this issue has been openly discussed and every detail of it has been laid bare to the scrutiny of the American people. If there be conspiracy at this hour, it is in the methods pursued by those who seek to mislead the judgment of the American people.

I shall not claim the further attention of the Senate. In presenting this matter to the Senate, my associates and I have discharged what we believe to be our duty. We are hopeful that something substantial may be done by the Senate of the United States as an evidence of its readiness to contribute to the cause of international peace throughout the world. There are mutterings of coming storms. We are told by the opponents of the Court that the Court will not be powerful enough to avoid or prevent those storms. We are told by some opponents of the Court that while it is not powerful enough to do good, it is possessed of power to accomplish destructive purposes.

I point out to the Senate the fact that out of all the troubles of the last few years there has come one proposal, one agency which is designed to compose peacefully controversies among nations. It was created by others, but the original suggestion came from our own statesmen.

Now, if we say that we will not accept this agency, that we have no other agency to propose, what is the hope of the mothers of the land? What is the hope of the children of this and coming generations? Must they be born to a heritage of blood and sacrifice? Must they advance into the future realizing that it is far more easy for Government and governmental agencies to drag them into the vortex of a destructive war than it is to lift them up to a plane on which they may enjoy peace?

I leave the issue with you.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have remained silent throughout the discussion of this question. I have very decided views on the question of this country's entering the Permanent Court of International Justice. I have heretofore opposed it. I have heard nothing in the discussion that has in any way persuaded me to change my former views. I know of no developments which have diverted me from my original opposition to the World Court.

It happens I was one of those who voted against the unreserved ratification of the League of Nations. At that time I was rather lonely among my good Democratic friends, but with the passing of time I believe the sentiment of the American people has not yet ripened in behalf of the League of Nations, but, to the contrary, has become more set against the League. I am sure, in casting my vote against our entrance into the World Court, that I am voicing the overwhelming sentiment of the people of Florida. It is my desire, if I know myself, to represent the people of my State and my Nation.

I am not going into any detailed discussion. By environment, by tradition, by association, my idea and conception of courts have arisen from the American system of jurisprudence. Our American plan is to have a court composed of an impartial judge, a judge who has no interest or prejudice in the question in litigation, a jury without interest or prejudice as between the litigants. If there is anything that safeguards the idea in the American system—and that system is good enough for me—it is the impartial judges, the judges who have no interest, and it is the jurors who have no interest. I have been unable to discover any such policy provided for the World Court, and no one here advocating our entrance into the Court has claimed for such Court any such safeguards as prevail in our American jurisprudence.

The average person would laugh at a lawyer who would go into court and try a case in behalf of his client with a packed jury, with the judge and the jury having an interest at stake or a prejudice in the controversy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I prefer not to yield, as my time is limited. The Senator has already spoken two or three times.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; I have not spoken at all.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator may speak after I shall have concluded. [Laughter.] However, Mr. President, I will yield just for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for his permission to speak after he finishes. I wanted to ask the Senator if he does not know that every criminal case tried in this country is tried by a jury which has an interest as a part of the public which prosecutes every criminal who violates the laws of his State.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Anybody who knows anything about the system in this country understands the difference between that system and the international World Court system which we are asked to adopt. By what provision do we retire a judge representing one of the States that is a member of this Court if his nation is interested, like our debtor nations are interested? The Senator refuses to retire them. His whole proposal, as represented by this system, permits judges representing every nation that owes America and is in default to sit upon that Court in passing upon cases in which the United States is involved. Why not have a provision in the resolution of adherence that where they are interested they should be excused from service upon the bench in that particular litigation? Here in this country we try desperately to get a fair jury. For instance, in my State three peremptory challenges are allowed to each side. Then we can challenge and have excused for cause any juror who has any interest in the case or who may be prejudiced in the litigation.

In the case of the judges of the World Court they are interested in the political fate of their respective nations; each is interested in what may be the fate of his own nation. In our system we ask the prospective juror if he is prejudiced in the case in any way, and if he admits any prejudice he is excused. Does anyone believe that if we had a judge representing a nation that is in default to America, he would not have a decided prejudice in behalf of his own country? I do not know of any American jurist who would not have a pronounced sympathy for his own country. If he were a good American, he naturally would have. When we reach the point that we can set up a court that we are sure would go about the trial of the issues without prejudice, then we might more seriously consider the entering of such an international court.

Pictures may be painted of this being a great panacea for all the ills of all governments. We talk about war. We have endeavored to be friendly with all nations. We practically forgave them the debts they owed us when we made the debt settlement. I am glad to say I voted against the terms of the settlement of those debts at the time. But we were friendly. We were generous. We did everything in the world to encourage the friendship of the nations that were owing us. What did it avail?

Our Presidents have proposed to forestall war and the danger of war by different disarmament conferences and the curtailment of armaments. Our foreign friends have prevented accomplishments in that respect. We have been generous in helping all the nations in distress, feeding and clothing their people. When I think of it, I am reminded of an incident that occurred in the life of a man I happen to have known. Someone said to him, "Why is old man Miller opposing you?" He said, "I do not know of any reason why he should be fighting me except that one time I endorsed his note at a certain bank and I had to pay the note."

I do not know of any reason why our European friends are so prejudiced and so antagonistic against the United States except that they came here begging for money to carry on the war, came here pleading for assistance, for somebody to save them from the immediate danger that was pending against them, and the United States responded—responded nobly, responded generously—with her money and with the young manhood of this country and saved those nations. I do not know why they should be so unfriendly to us. I do not know why it is that we cannot get fair consideration from them, unless it is because this country spent and loaned some $42,000,000,000 of her money to rescue them from defeat by the German Empire.

I should like some of our good friends advocating our entrance into the World Court to show where these European nations have extended any friendship to us, where they have shown any appreciation to the United States for the part we played in the war and for the money which we loaned them.

Why, they refused even to pay the interest on the debts—and that is all most of them agreed to pay; just the interest. We waived the principal of all they owed us, and said, "If you will just pay interest on that, we will accept the installments in full settlement at the end of 62 years." They have not paid.

Our people are in the midst of a great depression. They are overburdened with taxation. Millions of them are unemployed and hungry. These other nations take the money that they should pay us for interest and use it for carrying on their own affairs, trying to restore their own countries, and they are spending billions for armament.

My friends, there is a good reason why the honest, patriotic American is not in sympathy with the idea of America bowing down and responding to the call of the internationalist in America, and to the desire of foreign countries to have America go in to help support the Permanent Court of International Justice. We do not feel that our Nation would get justice in such international tribunal.

I do not criticize anybody's sincerity or patriotism, even though we may differ on the issues involved; but sometimes, when I see this effort to plunge our Republic into the World Court, I am impressed that some people would rush in "where angels fear to tread." We have in many instances witnessed such folly.

We have many questions demanding our attention here at home. I do not think there is any great exaggeration about the questions that the other nations will try to force before the Court if America goes into the Court. They will seek to bring all kinds of questions before the Court, if they can, involving immigration, involving trade relations, and involving other problems which are of the most vital concern and interest to America. Will the other nations seek before the Court to help our country? The question answers itself.

I am not willing to vote to have the United States enter this Court and go into a trial before judges representing nations which, generally speaking, are unsympathetic to America, which are unfriendly to America; and the controlling and dominating elements in that Court, being indebted to America to the extent of billions, who are treating America's claims with absolute indifference, I might say have trampled under their feet an honest obligation to the American people. They, through that Court, are not going to do very much for America.

I am strongly convinced that the United States can far better conserve the interests of the American people by remaining out of this Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of adherence, as amended, will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution of adherence, as amended, was read as follows:

Whereas the President, under date of December 10, 1930, transmitted to the Senate a communication, accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of State dated November 18, 1929, asking the favorable advice and consent of the Senate to adherence by the United States to the protocol of date December 16, 1920, of signature of the Statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice, the protocol of revision of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice of date September 14, 1929, and the protocol of accession of the United States of America to the protocol of signature of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice of date September 14, 1929, all of which are set out in the said message of the President dated December 10, 1930: Therefore be it

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring), That the Senate advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to the said three protocols, the one of date December 16, 1920, and the other two each of date September 14, 1929 (without accepting or agreeing to the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction), with the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, over an objection by the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

Resolved further, That adherence to the said protocols and statute hereby approved shall not be so construed as to require the United States to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign state; nor shall adherence to the said protocols and statute be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

Resolved further, as a part of this act of ratification, That the United States approve the protocols and statute hereinabove mentioned with the understanding that recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other state or states can be had only by agreement thereto through general or special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senate advise and consent to the resolution of adherence, as amended? The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. COPELAND's name was called). I am instructed to advise the Senate that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who is detained on account of illness, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER]. The Senator from Oregon will announce his own attitude. I am instructed to say that the Senator from Louisiana, if present and voting, would vote "nay", and the Senator from New York, if present and voting, would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN (when Mr. GIBSON's name was called). I again announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. GIBSON]. I announce a pair between my colleague and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] with the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], all of whom are detained on the Philippine mission. On this question I am informed that my colleague and the Senator from Maryland, if present, would vote in the affirmative, and the Senator from California would vote in the negative.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. MCADOO's name was called). In response to the request of the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], I beg to repeat and approve the announcement of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] as to the pair of the Senator from California with the Senators mentioned by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. STEIWER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired, in accordance with the announcement already made by the Senator from Illinois. I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. On account of the pair, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea", as would the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator-elect from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is necessarily detained in connection with the Philippine Commission. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call resulted—yeas 52, nays 36, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the resolution of adherence, as amended, the yeas are 52, the nays are 36. Two-thirds of the Senators present not having voted in the affirmative, the resolution of adherence, as amended, is rejected. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The occupants of the galleries will kindly refrain from manifestations of approval or disapproval and will observe the rules of the Senate, for they are our guests.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD, following the proceedings on the World Court, an editorial which appeared in the Sheboygan Press of January 23, 1935.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Sheboygan Press, Jan. 23, 1935]

JIM FARLEY A REAL SERVANT

By C. E. Broughton, editor

The other evening the Honorable James A. Farley, Postmaster General, speaking before the anthracite-coal men in New York City, reviewed the administration of President Roosevelt and contributed kernels of thought which ought to be remembered.

He referred to the progress that had been made in the way of recovery, the soundness of banks today as compared with March 1933, the improved conditions on farm, in store, factory, and mine, and the economies practiced by the Government. Outside of the money actually expended for relief, the regular expenses of Government showed a decrease of a billion dollars from the year previous. There were many things contributing to this, one of them being a surplus of $12,000,000 in the Post Office Department as against a deficit when Postmaster General Farley took office. With the same accounting and bookkeeping system utilized there was a deficit in 1931 and 1932 of $153,000,000.

In discussing the improved conditions Mr. Farley gave this timely reference to relief:

"Of course, there are still millions of men and women out of work, eager though they may be to find employment. Until most of these do find employment in industry the Government has to take care of them. There may be honest differences of opinion as to the best way of doing this, but there can be none as to the necessity that it be done.

"There are two ways of meeting the inescapable problem—by direct relief—that is, the dole—or by putting them to work on public jobs. The first course will probably be the cheaper, in terms of what it takes to provide a living for an individual. The work system, however, takes into consideration not only the circumstances that the country gets something back in the form of public improvements, greater security against such calamities as floods and fires, crossroads collisions, etc. Of still more importance is the value of preserving in the American people a spirit of self-reliance and self-respect. No man who is worth saving could indefinitely eat the bread of charity if he had the alternative of earning his living."

Truer words were never spoken, and they come from a man of wide experience, and one who has been a companion of President Roosevelt and a member of his Cabinet during the entire period of his administration. Not only has Mr. Farley the confidence of the President but he has demonstrated that it is possible to work out of the red in the Post Office Department, something that no administration has accomplished for many, many years.

Jim Farley deserves a place in history for the services he has rendered to the President of the United States and to the people of the entire country.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of nominations on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank R. McNinch, of North Carolina, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be passed over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I did not catch who objected to present consideration of the nomination of Frank R. McNinch.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] objected to considering the nomination.

Mr. WHEELER. I wonder if the Senator from Nevada will not withdraw his objection. This nomination has been held over for something like 2 weeks, and at the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] I purposely delayed reporting favorably the nomination much longer than I felt it should be delayed, so that the Senator from North Carolina could be in the Senate when it was taken up for action.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am sorry I cannot comply with the request of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest that when the report of the committee is made and a nomination goes to the calendar one objection is sufficient to carry the nomination over until the next meeting of the Senate. One objection to a report of a committee carries it over to the next day. However, when that day has gone by and the nomination comes up again for action, one objection cannot carry it over. It can be done only by majority vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator from Florida that this nomination has been passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER. One objection cannot carry it over now. It now takes a majority vote to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana desire to move that the Senator recur to this nomination?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, unless I can have a definite time fixed at which to take it up, within the next day or so, I shall move that the nomination be considered now.

Mr. FLETCHER. The nomination is automatically before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I understand I do not have to move to consider it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not at all. The nomination automatically comes before the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, as to the nomination of Mr. McNinch to be a member of the Federal Power Commission, a definite time be fixed to consider the nomination. I understand that the Senator from Nevada desires to make a speech on the nomination, and that another Senator also desires to be heard; but I want a definite time fixed for considering the nomination, and do not desire to have it delayed. I want to accommodate Senators.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to any arrangement the Senators interested would like to make about the matter. There will be a session of the Senate tomorrow, and there is very little business on the calendar, but I understand there is a measure which the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency would like to have considered, and perhaps there is one other measure which it is also desired to have considered. The nomination in question might be reached tomorrow afternoon, if Senators will be ready to have it then considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator that there is a measure which the State Department is anxious to have considered and in which many people are interested. I refer to a bill to carry out the terms of the Mexican Claims Treaty by the appointment of the Commission. The measure has been reported by the committee, and I shall be very glad if that can be considered tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that may be done.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, would be glad to have the bill considered.

Mr. HARRISON. I had very much hoped, Mr. President, that the first thing tomorrow we could take up the bond bill, which it is very necessary to enact soon if it is to be enacted at all. It has passed the House already, and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there will be no objection to that, but after that measure shall have been disposed of, if Senators agree, I shall move an executive session to consider the nomination of Mr. McNinch.

Mr. WHEELER. Then, I ask, Mr. President, that that arrangement be made, and I will not press the matter this afternoon, with the understanding that tomorrow we shall have an executive session for the purpose of considering the nomination.

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot agree to that.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not asking the Senator to agree to it; but we will either take it up now, or take it up tomorrow. I have held this nomination over at the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] for some time. It was unanimously reported out of the committee. There were no protests against it at all, and it has been on the Executive Calendar for something like a week, as I recall, and ought to be disposed of and acted upon.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not think a week's time on an appointment of this kind and of this importance is any too great a length of time. I wonder how far the committee went into this particular appointment. I wonder what investigation the committee made. I wonder if they are ready to render a report on the investigation made.

Mr. WHEELER. The Interstate Commerce Commission, of which I happen to be chairman at the present time, held a thorough investigation into this matter when Mr. McNinch's name was before the committee upon a former occasion when it was sent to the Senate. We did not at this time go into a further investigation because there was no protest before the committee. Mr. McNinch served faithfully on the Power Commission, in the judgment of the members of the committee, and we reported his nomination favorably because there was no objection to him, that being the customary thing to do. The Senator from Nevada made no objection, and no one else asked for a hearing before the committee.

I serve notice that tomorrow, if we shall have an executive session, I shall ask that the matter be disposed of.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am a little surprised at the attitude of the Senator from Montana in this matter. Within my short experience here similar matters have come up in which I took no such attitude as that taken by the learned Senator from Montana. If the Senator desires to enter into a fair agreement regarding the matter and let it go over for 1 week, then I shall consider the suggestion; otherwise I am going to be on the floor of the Senate for some time discussing this particular nomination.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not going to be blackjacked by any such statement as that. The Senator can suit his own wishes so far as I am concerned. I am going to ask that the nomination be taken up tomorrow and I shall ask that we remain in executive session until it is disposed of.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to have the further attention of the Senator from Montana long enough to say to the learned Senator that he may be familiar with the use of blackjacks, but I am not, and I do not utilize that particular method.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I understand that the question of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Frank R. McNinch has gone over until tomorrow by agreement. I wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, I have not sought to delay the disposition of this matter for one moment. I happened to be at home sick when the nomination was sent to the Senate. When I received news of it I did communicate with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], Chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and requested that he hold the nomination until I could be heard. That was a mere matter of prudence on my part because I knew I would be back in the Senate within 24 hours and I was sure the nomination would not be considered within that time.

Upon my return I saw the Senator from Montana and assured him that I had no intention of pursuing a policy of delay. Yesterday when we were considering the resolution of accession of the United States to the jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice, the nomination came up in the midst of the debate. That was no opportune time for its consideration. I suggested to the Senator from Montana that it would be inappropriate to bring the question up for discussion at that time because I intended to take some little time—I hope not more than 20 or 25 minutes—and we promptly agreed that it should go over until today.

When the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] offered his objection to its consideration today, that was not at all disagreeable to me, not that I hoped to delay it, but I looked at the clock and realized that it was late, that Senators had been here all day, and I thought it would be very appropriate to have it go over. I wish to make it perfectly clear that I am ready to go into the matter at any time.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has been exceedingly fair with reference to the McNinch nomination. When recently he asked to have it go over because of the fact that he happened to be out of town, I was willing to accommodate him and asked that it should go over.

The only interest I have in the McNinch nomination is that I want it disposed of. It has been reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ought to be disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William Denman, of California, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court, Ninth Circuit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. ROBINSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the nomination of Lela E. Randolph to be postmaster at Portland, Pa., be reconsidered, and that the nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

That completes the calendar.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Senate resume legislative session.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

SURVEY OF LAND AND WATER POLICIES AND PROJECTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to Senate Resolution 58, the Chair appoints as the committee to make a survey of land and water policies of the executive agencies of the Government the following Senators: The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr.

PITTMAN], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 50, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 50) submitted by Mr. PITTMAN on the 14th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is authorized to appoint one additional clerk to serve until the expiration of the present session of the Congress, and to be paid a salary at the rate of $1,800 per annum out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. MCNARY. What is the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. BYRNES. The resolution authorizes the Committee on Foreign Relations to appoint an additional clerk. The resolution was submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

THE WORLD COURT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR REYNOLDS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of the World Court, delivered by the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] on the 27th instant.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen of my unseen audience, I wish to talk to you tonight in reference to the World Court, a court which is the right arm of the League of Nations.

We are on the eve of a grave crisis in the affairs of America. We are at this very hour standing on the threshold of the main entrance to the League of Nations—the so-called "World Court", a court located 3,000 miles from our own Capitol.

Within a few short hours the United States Senate, the upper branch of our Congress, said to be the only surviving independent deliberative body on earth today, will be called upon to decide whether or not it will cast adrift the sacred rights handed down to us by the framers of our Constitution by joining the World Court, this court of trickery and chicanery.

I wish to solemnly warn the people of our beloved country against once more becoming entangled in the political ramifications of the 60 foreign nations that are members of the League.

The horrible wounds, both physical and financial, that America suffered in the World War are as yet far from healed. Thousands upon thousands of our brave soldiers still bear the scars received in battles fought on foreign shores across the sea. Thousands and thousands of America's fathers and mothers still mourn the loss of their courageous sons who gallantly fell on foreign fields.

Millions of our citizens still bear the overloaded burden of taxes that they are paying in the form of interest on the 40 billions of good honest sweat-earned American dollars that we poured into the world conflict in a vain effort to save the world for freedom and independence, and to effect a permanent peace among all nations.

A bitter dose of medicine that the American people cannot swallow is the fact that $11,000,000,000 that our Government loaned our Allies remain unpaid. As if to test our patience our European debtors brazenly refuse to pay even the interest on the loans. These nations that defaulted in paying their honest debts to us, at a time when we are struggling to emerge from the worst business depression in our history, are the same nations that constitute the real powers behind the World Court and are urging our entrance into the Court.

These countries which have failed to pay us offer the excuse that they are bankrupt, yet they are now competing with one another in a race to see which one can exceed the other in the manufacture of munitions of war and the equipping of vast military machines, all of which requires tremendous expenditures of millions. They have the money with which to build up their armies and navies but not one cent with which to pay their honest war debts to us.

For 12 years international propogandists have been beseeching, cajoling, and pleading that the United States should surrender its birthright and plunge into this foreign mess, and, for 12 long years Uncle Sam has escaped all the snares and traps that have been set by honeyed promises to entice him into the private quarrels of foreign nations.

Why enter this World Court now? What has America to gain by such a grave move? Is the League of Nations a creation of the thought of the people of America? It is not—absolutely not. Because the United States of America has nothing of a critical issue now with foreign nations, nor do we fear, or can we foresee, anything in the future that will cause us to be at odds with any other nation on the face of the earth if we remain independent.

We proudly acclaim that we have no territorial lines to be adjusted. We proudly acclaim that we have no quarrel to pick with our neighbors across the seas. We are a great continent unto ourselves; and if the world will not molest us, we shall not place an unfriendly hand upon any other people on the face of the globe. Ours is a peace-loving Nation. Our past history proves that. I recognize well and true that throughout the length and breadth of this great land of ours there are thousands of good mothers—God-fearing women—and thousands of conscientious men, who advocate our entrance into the World Court. But if these good mothers and fathers realized, as many of us do realize, that entry into the World Court means entry into the League of Nations, and eventually means trouble for us, I am sure that their attitude would undergo a change.

The ideals and characteristics of America and the foreign countries are absolutely different. Never so long as this world endures will the people of the Continent beyond the turbulent waters of the Atlantic or will the inhabitants of the Orient agree with the attitude of these United States—they have been reared in a different atmosphere—a different school of thought and have different inclinations—they speak a different language—they have different attitudes—they live by conquest. They are as totally different from us as night is from day.

What has the League of Nations, the guiding spirit of the World Court, accomplished in its 14 years of existence? The warmest advocate of the Court has not attempted to point out a solitary significant achievement.

Fourteen long years ago these international advocates boasted that the League would abolish wars. While right at this very moment Japan and China—both members of the World Court—are engaged in a harrowing war, and even at this very moment Paraguay and Bolivia—both members of the World Court—are waging a devastating conflict, and right at this very moment Italy and Ethiopia—both members of the World Court—are fighting a bloody war of conquest. Thousands of men have been slain in these wars. Scores of other grim wars have also been fought since the inauguration of the League of Nations. And each one has been a war of conquest.

Why has not the League prevented the slaughtering of those thousands upon thousands of innocent human beings and the destruction of millions upon millions of dollars of property? I'll tell you why.

Because the powers that be—because the great foreign powers—are in absolute control of the Court, and the smaller nations are like dummies in the hands of masterful manipulators. These countries, imbued with selfish motives, handle and pull the strings in a manner that they may benefit and further entrench themselves with more world-wide power. And the wars still rage, despite the World Court, League of Nations, or what have you.

Certainly America cannot be blamed for these furious wars, three of which are now in brutal blast.

Proponents of the League claim by vague promises and glittering generalities that if America adheres to the Court peace—universal peace—will prevail.

Yet while we are debating the issue—at this very second—factories on European and Asiatic soils are teeming with activity—turning out battleships, cruisers, aeroplanes, submarines, cannon, and ammunition, preparing themselves for more and bigger wars.

Does this condition manifest a desire for peace on the part of those nations who would have us join the World Court? Does this situation evidence the confidence that they claim to have in one another? And America is asked to ally itself with countries that not only betrayed us in their failure to meet their obligations but which are at this very moment suspicious and wary of one another—mistrusting one another's intentions—as is proven by their gigantic war munitions producing programs.

I want to enlighten you a little further on this World Court proposal.

Has any single nation, has any single country, kingdom, republic, or otherwise a member of the League of Nations, come forward with lifted hands and said in all frankness, candor, and honesty, "If America will enter the World Court, the League of Nations, we are confident that war will be forever wiped out?" No. Because no one of that body, no single person in the whole world is sufficiently convinced that the benefits to be derived by way of or from the Court or League of Nations will forever wipe out war. Therefore, I say, if we are so all-fired sure, if we are so certain that our entrance into this court of intrigue is going to forever banish war, why do not those countries disarm?

The World Court is nothing but a court of babble, ballyhoo, and bunk—a court of intrigue. The League of Nations is nothing but a league of notions designed to deceive and camouflage. If we affiliate with the World Court, it perhaps means the ultimate cancelation of the war debts—the breaking down of our immigration barriers, and injection of Old World ideas of conquest into the New World's idea of peace.

I am interested in this subject because I realize that the people of America are interested in it. I know that mothers and fathers whose sons' warm red blood of courage was spilled on the fields of France are interested in this matter. I assert without hesitation that if the American people as a whole, every single voter in this country, were afforded at this hour an opportunity to cast a vote in favor of or against our entering the World Court, that an overwhelming majority would vote to stay out. Already various State legislatures now in session, including Nebraska, Georgia, Washington, Illinois, and Massachusetts, have urged against the United States' becoming involved in the World Court.

The Democratic platform adopted by the Democratic convention at Chicago in June 1932 did not provide nor did it propose to place this country in the World Court on the terms now proposed. Therefore those who in the exercise of their own sincere and honest convictions oppose adherence are not acting contrary to the pledges contained in the Democratic platform.

We all want peace. And the best way to acquire and nourish peace is to remain independent—is to remain aloof from foreign entanglements—to heed the sound warning and advice of George Washington and the framers of our Constitution.

Are we going into any business of any kind with any man in whom we have not implicit confidence? Why, of course not. Are we going to subject ourselves to the will of those who have misled us? Are we going to tie up with those who have deceived us? Those whose words we cannot completely depend upon? Why, of course not.

Some advance the argument that we ought to go into the World Court because it would increase our world commerce. They claim that our exports will increase and that our business will naturally prosper. They say, "Let us settle this thing that the commerce of the world may be stimulated." In my opinion the huge export trade that we have heretofore enjoyed with the countries of continental Europe is a thing of the past. You may talk all you wish about the great trade that will flow to us from over there, but existing facts disprove such glowing prospects.

It surely can't help us in the Orient either.

Japan, annually adding 1,000,000 people to its present population of 69,000,000, has just about gobbled up the commerce in the Orient. Japan has cheap labor. Japan's scale of wages for its workmen averages about 1 cent an hour. How can America compete against such starvation wages? To top it all, Japan has served notice that it intends to withdraw from the World Court and the League. It maintains that it is too expensive to be a member of that society—its percentage of its cost amounting to around $900,000 annually. As the cost is divided among the nations on a population basis, then the overhead expense alone to America would be approximately $2,000,000 per year. I seriously suggest that it would be far a better bargain for us if America gave them $2,000,000 and stayed out of the World Court. At least, we would suffer no bad after effects. Now let us look deeper into this pit.

Germany resigned from the League of Nations on October 21, 1934. Germany is now saying: "If we come into the League again and participate, it has to be distinctly understood that we can manufacture, have and hold in the grasp of our citizens, arms and equipment in design and numbers in proportion to those of the other nations of the world according to our population and standing."

If the World Court is going to bring about universal peace, why should Germany say: "We will only come in with the understanding that we may increase our army, that we may manufacture more poisonous gases, more rifles to place upon the shoulders of our men, more cannons for our enemies' breasts." If she really thought that her entrance into the League is going to bring about universal peace, why should she be so determined to increase her armaments?

I am absolutely confident that our established governmental agencies here and abroad are beyond the slightest ray of doubt thoroughly capable to cope with any situation that may now or in the future arise requiring diplomatic adjustment.

America, the cradle of liberty, has well earned the right to judge of other nations. Yes, America is for international justice. But let that international justice be the variety of unimpeachable American justice that is tempered with mercy—that radiates with devoted fairness to the weak as well as to the strong, with that brand of American justice that administers squareness to the lowly as well as to the mighty—with that kind of justice that has made this Nation a beacon light for all nations sincerely seeking liberty and freedom. Yes, we want peace—and we want justice for all mankind—but we don't want the kind of international justice that will be dished out to us through the World Court, a court presided over by and controlled by our enemies who owe us money and won't pay us—those whom we befriended and who have proved to be ingrates—who are jealous and envious of us.

Let those nations wanting peace adopt the American standards of justice, and there will be no cause for strife and conflicts among our neighbors of the world.

Let America remain independent so that she may be unhampered to lead the way in a peaceful march to further progress, setting an inspiring noble example for the World Court.

May America shun all foreign entanglements at this time by declining entry into the World Court.

Let us of America initially look after our own interests. America for America. America first, last, and all the time. And after that the finest humane consideration and service for all the peoples of all the nations—with friendliness toward all—with enmity toward none.

I thank you. Good night.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 29, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Lord and our God, Thy mercy is ineffable, universal, and inexhaustible. Heavenly Father, condescend to hear our prayer: Winter, cold and barren, fruitless and flowerless, is upon our land. Its ravages are benumbing, impairing, and threatening the worthier things of life. Countless numbers have been thrust into this fierce emergency until gratitude is slow and the feelings of the soul may be deadening. Be not unto them an absentee God; and we pray that their love of country may not be fatally impoverished. Grant, blessed Lord, that wholesome ministries may soon be tested, tried, and determined, and the oak of harshness changed into the lily of human sympathy. We most earnestly entreat Thee that we shall be good Samaritans, going where love suffers and smiles to suffer, where friendship is most unselfish, where heroism is bravest, where sorrow is illuminated, and even where mercy blesses the least deserving. In the name of our Elder Brother. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ALBERT SCOTT

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, everything moves so smoothly around the House of Representatives and in the Office Building that we take for granted the splendid service that is given us, but all of this is but a part of a general comprehensive scheme. Every little cog in the legislative machinery is arranged to help us. We are so accustomed to this splendid service that we seldom stop to think of it because of its smooth running. So, in passing, I want to ask the House to take a minute to pay reverence to the memory of one of our excellent employees who has passed to the Great Beyond.

I speak of Albert Scott, a loyal and faithful employee of this House for over 33 years. He was assigned to the Democratic cloakroom, and during the years his genial and kindly presence cheered us, and the excellent service that he rendered endeared him to every Member. Albert was a quaint character. In early life he had much to do with the care and handling of horses.

During the Cleveland administration, Colonel Livingstone and Colonel Stone and Col. Isiah Hill presented the President with a handsome team of Kentucky horses. It was Albert Scott's proud duty to drive these horses from the Capitol to the White House. They were a gift of the colonels to our distinguished President.

Albert was a native of Georgia and was originally appointed by Colonel Livingstone when he was Sergeant at Arms of the House.

At the time of his death the Congress was in recess; nevertheless a large delegation of employees and some of the Members who had remained in Washington attended his funeral at Halls Hill, Va. May I say in passing that we all miss his cheerful and genial presence. In his humble way he added his service to our comfort and to the efficiency of the legislative machinery, and I know you will join with me in saying that we wish peace to his soul and rest to his ashes.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOSEPH B. SHANNON

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech I made on January 15 at Independence, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech made by me on January 15, before the Women's Democratic Club, Independence, Mo.

I am speaking here today on the invitation of the Women's Jackson Democratic Club, who at present are engaged in the laudable task of promoting sentiment for the enactment of some effective legislation for the protection of old age. It is a movement that has my hearty sympathy. But there is an atmosphere to this century-old city of Independence, with its great pioneer tradition as the head of the Santa Fe trail and the little mother of western exploration and development, that always moves me back into a past of rich memories, and I know that you will bear with me generously if I digress from the formal program to bring up a few perhaps forgotten things that I think are interesting and important in the history of this, our county seat, which has figured so largely in the traditions of the West and of the State of Missouri.

As you all know, a new United States Senator was elected from this State in the fall elections. The man who was chosen by the voters for that high honor is a citizen of your community. It seems to me that his election is a significant event to you men and women of Independence in particular, as it brings to my mind the fact, perhaps forgotten or unregarded, that in its more than a hundred years of existence Independence has been thus honored but four times in its political career. Only 4 men in the National Congress, from the stirring days when the great caravans of adventure and enterprise were mustered here for the trails of the West down to the present day, claimed Independence as their home—3 of them in the lower House and 1 in the Senate.

The three in the lower House were all men of outstanding ability.

The first was Samuel Hughes Woodson, a native of Kentucky, who served Missouri with distinction in the Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Congresses (1857–61). His father, whose name was the same, represented the State of Kentucky in the lower House in the Seventeenth Congress (1821–23). After serving two terms in Congress, Mr. Woodson resumed the practice of law in Independence. He later became a circuit judge.

The next was Abram Comingo, a prominent Member of the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses (1871–75). He, like Mr. Woodson, was a Kentuckian by birth, having been born in Harrodsburg, Mercer County, Ky., the place famous for its associations with Daniel Boone and George Rogers Clark, and which received much press notice when it was visited recently by President Roosevelt. Mr. Comingo served with distinction on the side of the North in the War between the States. He was honored by an appointment from President Grant in 1876 as a member of a commission to arbitrate with the Sioux Indians. He moved to Kansas City in 1881, where he died in 1889. Among his descendants now living in Kansas City is Dr. Comingo Griffith.

The next Member of the lower House of Congress whose home was in the city of Independence, Mo., was Samuel Locke Sawyer, a distinguished citizen who was engaged in the banking and law businesses, and whose descendants are still prominent among your people. He served with credit in the Forty-sixth Congress (1879–81), but did not seek reelection. This illustrious citizen of Independence was a native of the State of New Hampshire.

Fifty-four years elapsed before another Independence man served in either House of Congress. Now Senator TRUMAN, of this city, is in the United States Senate. It will mean much to Independence if Senator TRUMAN attains in the Senate the distinction attained by the three Independence men who served in the House.

A popular belief seems to prevail that Missouri has had but two great Senators—Thomas Hart Benton and James A. Reed. This is far from being correct. From the time of the admission of Missouri as a State in the Union, up to and including the present time, Missouri has always had at least one, and for the most part two, men in the United States Senate who achieved distinction and fame.

The colleague of Thomas Hart Benton in the Senate from 1821 to 1831 was David Barton, a noted jurist, who served as president of the convention which formed the State constitution in 1820, and who also served as circuit judge for many years.

Thomas Hart Benton was a most able and aggressive man. He was Andrew Jackson's representative in the Senate during the period of Jackson. After more than 30 years' service in the Senate, he returned in 1851 to the city of St. Louis, only to be elected 2 years later to the Thirty-third Congress (1853–55) as a Member of the lower House. He was a candidate for Governor of the State of Missouri in 1856 but failed of nomination and died shortly thereafter.

David R. Atchison served with honor and distinction in the United States Senate from 1843 to 1855. On seven occasions during his service he was elected President pro tempore of the Senate. It is said that he was President of the United States for a day. This famous man was born in Frogtown, Ky.; commenced the practice of law in Liberty, Mo.; and was buried in Plattsburg, Mo.

James Stephen Green, of Canton, Mo., served in both Houses of the National Congress. Champ Clark paid a splendid tribute to him. He referred to him as "the forgotten Senator", and, quoting from James G. Blaine, said that Mr. Green was the one man who was able to cope in serious debate with the little giant, Stephen A. Douglas.

In the beginning of the period of great disturbance—the War between the States—Missouri had in the United States Senate Trusten Polk, a distinguished man whose sympathies were with the South. The Senate expelled him in 1862, after 5 years' honorable service, because of his leanings toward the Confederacy.

Waldo Porter Johnson, of Osceola, Mo., was one of Missouri's most eminent sons. He was a great lawyer, a high-type statesman, and a renowned soldier of both the Mexican War and the War between the States. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1861. The records of Congress indicate that he was expelled from the Senate on January 10, 1862, at the same time with Trusten Polk. His son, the late William T. Johnson, told me that this entry is in error. He said that his father declined to qualify as a Senator but entered the service of the Confederate Army and attained the rank of lieutenant colonel. He was later appointed member of the Senate of the Confederate States and after the war was president of the Missouri Constitutional Convention in 1875.

During the critical period of the War between the States, a number of great men from Missouri served in the United States Senate, amongst whom was John B. Henderson. His political activities antedated the war. He was a Presidential elector on the ticket of Buchanan and Breckenridge in 1856, and of Douglas and Johnson in 1860. When the war came on he became a supporter of the Lincoln Union forces, and was elected to the United States Senate, where he served from 1862 to 1869. He was the author of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution. Only one vote in the Senate saved Andrew Johnson from impeachment by the radicals; John B. Henderson was one of those who voted "Not guilty."

During the same period a very famous lawyer named Charles D. Drake served with distinction. Mr. Drake was a native of Ohio, who moved to St. Louis in 1834. He was a Presidential elector on the ticket of Lincoln and Johnson in 1864, a member of the State constitutional convention in 1865, and was elected to the United States Senate in 1867, where he served until 1870.

Coming out of the war, a very distinguished Missourian by adoption, a native of Germany, Carl Schurz, soldier, author, lawyer, and newspaperman, achieved a brilliant reputation. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1869, where he served until 1875.

Also veterans of the war were two very distinguished Kentucky-Missourians, Benjamin Gratz Brown and Frank P. Blair. It is said that the same grandmother looked after the welfare of Brown, Blair, and Joseph Orville Shelby. Brown and Blair espoused the cause of the North; Shelby, of course, was a gallant officer of the South. Frank P. Blair's brother, Montgomery Blair, was a member of Lincoln's Cabinet. Frank Blair was so highly regarded during the trouble between the States that he had access to the lines of both sides. On many occasions he served as message-carrier from one line to the other. He was a distinguished Member of the lower House, as well as of the Senate, where he served from 1871 to 1873. After the war he became incensed over the reconstruction of the South as practiced by the radicals and became a Democrat.

Benjamin Gratz Brown was elected as a liberal Republican to the United States Senate and subsequently became Governor of the State of Missouri.

These two distinguished men not only had an important part in the war but were eminent statesmen, and both were vice-presidential candidates, Mr. Blair with Horatio Seymour in 1868, and Mr. Brown with Horace Greeley in 1872.

We pass from that period to the period which followed those distinguished men and we find that great soldier and statesman, Gen. James Shields, a man who represented three States in the Senate of the United States. He served as Senator from Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri. No other American was ever similarly honored. In addition, by appointment of President Polk, he served as Governor of Oregon Territory. He served as major general during the Mexican War and as brigadier general in the Union Army during the Civil War. He was born in County Tyrone, Ireland.

Then followed the period of George Graham Vest and Francis Marion Cockrell. These two great men attained distinction in the service of the Confederacy—Mr. Cockrell as a soldier, and Mr. Vest as a legislator. Both of these men became eminent for their statesmanship and held high places during their long service in the United States Senate. No word of mine, said here today, could add to their fame.

That able and chivalrous Kentucky-born gentleman, William Joel Stone, who was a distinguished Member of both Houses of the National Congress, as well as Governor of the State of Missouri, needs no encomiums from me. His memory lives in the hearts of all Missourians.

Maj. William Warner, of Kansas City, who also served in both Houses of the National Congress, is another home candidate for our Temple of Fame. He had a great record as a citizen, as a soldier, and as a statesman. He was a native of Wisconsin, who moved to Kansas City when he was a young man. When the War between the States broke out, he returned to Wisconsin and entered the Federal service. He returned to Kansas City in 1865, served that city as mayor, then was elected to the National House of Representatives, and later to the Senate. He was a gallant soul.

And now we reach that period of those eminent gentlemen, James A. Reed and Harry B. Hawes, both of whom still hold important places in the public mind. Surely every Missourian knows of the achievements of Harry B. Hawes, and the name of James A. Reed is a household word throughout the United States.

Time does not permit me to mention today all of the great men who have served Missouri with honor in the United States Senate, many of whom I have not specially referred to. I have here a list of them—31 in all; it is a roll of honor. If you look it over you will see many names well known to Missourians.

So I can say in conclusion this afternoon, let us all hope that Senator TRUMAN will comport himself in such a way that it can be said of him, "He was a worthy successor of these great men." I believe he will do it. We are looking forward with hope and confidence to a senatorial career that will link his name with the great Missourians and the great sons of Independence who have gone before him.

The places of birth of Missouri's Senators are as follows: Kentucky leads with 8, Missouri follows with 7, Virginia with 4, Ohio with 3, and 1 each from Tennessee, Delaware, Maine, Maryland, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Ireland, Germany, and Canada.

Harry S. Truman (Missouri), 1935 ———, Seventy-fourth Congress (term to expire in 1941).

A WILDLIFE SITUATION IN THE UNITED STATES AND ITS REMEDIES

Mr. BERLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a speech made before the American Game Conference by J. N. Darling, Chief of the Biological Survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERLIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of J. N. Darling, Chief, Bureau of Biological Survey, United States Department of Agriculture, delivered at the Twenty-first American Game Conference, in New York City, on January 22, 1935, and on the same date briefed extemporaneously in a broadcast during the National Farm and Home Hour.

I wish it were possible to talk about many things at the same time. Our problem as sportsmen and conservationists is by no means limited to ducks. And while this session is dedicated to the discussion of the migratory waterfowl, the ducks are only one branch of the whole animal kingdom, which needs urgent and immediate attention. The same neglected precautions which have brought the migratory-game population to a crisis are also responsible for the gradual depletion of all our wildlife resources, some of them almost to the point of extinction and many of them to a very narrow margin of existence.

There is not now, and never has been, a national policy for the conservation of wildlife resources. There is not now, and never has been, a Government agency intrusted with the prerogatives of general wildlife conservation. There is not now, and never has been, a Federal plan for the maintenance and preservation of the tremendous economic and social values inherent in the fur, game, and fish species. Such a national policy is badly needed for all game as well as ducks.

The same thing happened to our wildlife resources that happened to our national-forest resources. It was happening at the same time when this continent was subjugated to the interests of commercial civilization. Both receded at an alarming pace before advancing settlement. The one great difference between forests and wildlife resources was that 30 years ago Theodore Roosevelt and Gifford Pinchot saw what was happening to forests and prescribed a national remedy. A systematic plan of conservation and restoration of forests was established, and a Government agency was provided with funds for its custodianship.

To this day no administration in the history of this Government has considered the conservation of wildlife resources from a national viewpoint. Such refuges as have been provided have been the result of spasmodic hysteria, local in character, and unstudied as to the measure of its efficiency. Our magnificent endowment of wildlife species—including fur bearers, game, and beneficial bird life—has never even remotely entered into our plan of national conservation.

Game has remained the orphan child, without asylum, and has subsisted on such crumbs as fell from the table of forestry, irrigation, reclamation, and national-park administration.

Bison, antelope, elk, mountain sheep, prairie chicken, wild turkey, marten, fisher, beaver, deer, and ruffed grouse have all had their narrow escapes and lived on what the neighbors sent in. At this moment the hereditary game ranges of some of our most valued species are but for our prayers about to be shut out forever from 80,000,000 acres of our public domain by dedication and withdrawal of this vast area to controlled public grazing, without any provision for game upon it.

So many of our game and wildlife conservation activities begin at the post-mortem stage. There is no authorized Government agency to which has been delegated the responsibility of custodianship. Game has no place to live in this broad land and call its own.

How much space and where should game have to satisfy the public needs cannot longer be left to chance. It is, in my judgment, the hour of decision.

Do you realize that in all the millions of Government expenditures during these last 3 years not one thin dime was appropriated specifically for wildlife restoration—that the only money actually available now has to be sucked through a straw from someone else's barrel? Forestry has had its hundreds of millions and has had for years. Erosion control, reclamation, C. C. C., C. W. A., and all the heavily endowed agencies have been taken care of. Saving soil, saving trees, saving water, cutting trails, and building roads have been taken care of, but game was not a part of the vast program for conservation.

Our eight and a half millions being spent now for duck-mating areas and refuges was secured only because we were able to show that by spending this money to do something for the ducks we could at the same time aid distressed agriculture and the unemployed.

Our endowment of wildlife resources is the bowlegged girl of the village. Everyone sympathizes with her, but never asks her to the picnic.

It is time for our sportsmen and game conservationists to quit quarreling among themselves and unite on something more fundamental than local issues and local benefits. We have more quarreling factions and faiths than the churches. There is no group of people in this country to whom the preservation of our game and other wildlife means so much as those represented in this gathering. It is time to think soberly in terms of preservation rather than of post mortems.

We need a Nation-wide plan to make refuges of the areas that belong to the wildlife, areas that will give the birds and animals a place to live, to rest, and to rear their young in safety. Every year the destruction of the natural environment of our game species causes more reduction in the population than any other one cause. We need an army of sportsmen to fight for the defense of the natural environment and for the rights of wildlife to be adequately represented in the conduct of our Government.

The Biological Survey has made a start on the job of restoring wildlife areas. We have five big-game refuges and a miscellaneous lot of waterfowl and bird refuges scattered hit and miss over the country, their location in the past being largely dictated by local rather than national viewpoints. A systematic study is now being made of other suitable areas that it is hoped may be made available by Executive orders, purchases, donations, or by other means. We have already selected 45 areas in the public domain that we want set aside primarily for the use of wildlife under the Taylor Act. Other areas are being selected as rapidly as we can get the required information together.

These areas are more valuable for production of game, furbearers, and other wildlife than for production of cattle and sheep or for other agricultural purposes. Our wildlife should have first right there, and sportsmen should get their shoulders to the wheel and work to this end. Strong, organized forces are at work day and night fighting for the rights and privileges of the stockmen. If we want our wildlife to have a fair break on these 80,000,000 acres that are to be included in grazing-administration plans, it must be done right now or it will be forever too late. The areas will be set up irrevocably and forever for livestock production unless effective action by sportsmen and conservationists is successful in securing them for wildlife.

We have a vast program under way to secure for waterfowl large areas that have been ruined in the supposed advancement of agriculture, and in futile reclamation and drainage attempts. These areas are being carefully selected and recommended for purchase under submarginal-land and drought-relief measures by the agencies handling these funds. Some are now under contract of purchase, some are under options, and others will be acquired by declaration of taking or by other means. This work is being pushed with all possible vigor, and the program needs your united support to make it win on a proper scale.

Now, as to the ducks. I want to divest myself of any suspicion that I think I know all about them. No one does. The amazing thing to me is that, with a $500,000,000 industry to maintain, no one should have started long ago to put the duck business on a factual basis. No one knows whether we kill 12,000,000 and hatch 11,000,000 a year or whether we kill 24,000,000 and hatch 10,000,000. That, obviously, is the first thing to determine in looking to the future of hunting of migratory waterfowl.

This year the Biological Survey has set its hand to that job as intensively as our constricted budget would allow.

Beginning with the spring migration last year, the ablest observers on the staff, plus such competent volunteers as were available, devoted all their time to determining the conditions and duck population in the nesting areas.

Intensive observations were made on all the flyways during the fall migration just passed.

Yesterday began a winter count. Men of practiced ability are at this moment stationed from Long Island to Yucatan to report simultaneously on the winter resting grounds of ducks and geese.

The spring flight will be closely watched and the 1935 nesting conditions again observed. On the tabulated results of these observations the Biological Survey will make its recommendations to the Secretary of Agriculture and the President for next year's migratory-waterfowl hunting regulations.

The first consideration will be the preservation of a safe margin of population among the ducks, I assure you.

There are many things to consider beside the thought of a peremptory closing of the season. I am not going to be rushed into any conclusion. I am going to do a square job. I intend to put this duck business on a bookkeeping basis, with stock on hand governing the extent of consumption to be permitted the public.

One of our big problems is enforcement. With the whole United States to patrol, the Biological Survey has had one-third as many men as New York has traffic cops on Broadway. With a 27-percent cut in the Biological Survey budget, we must increase our vigilance and set up the national bookkeeping on migratory waterfowl.

Even if all the members of the Biological Survey were four times as migratory as the ducks, we couldn't cover all the ground that should be covered; but we are doing our best. Do not presume, however, that with 59 law-enforcement officers in the whole United States we can enforce a closed season on migratory waterfowl without heavy losses to violators. So if you pass resolutions, see to it that these resolutions demand the appropriation of money for law enforcement.

Ninety percent of the reports are that the ducks are in a bad way. That fact seems well established. Premonitions of this crisis went unheeded in the middle twenties. In 1931 we had a 30-day season. In 1932 the protests of sportsmen resulted in a return to the 60-day season, which was repeated in 1933. The winter of 1933 was more destructive than anyone at the time realized. Starvation and freezing accounted for many more ducks than was at the time realized. That fact was made surprisingly apparent in the marked shortage among black ducks and the divers this year.

The destructive winter was followed by an unprecedented drought which sterilized the duck nesting and breeding areas as far north as Winnipeg.

The fall hunting season on ducks was so bad in many regions that consternation seized the sportsmen in many broad areas. Consternation is justified, but methods of treatment must be based on facts.

Emergency funds, which have been secured by sometimes disagreeable measures, are being spent in the hereditary nesting grounds on a program of restoration. Of the estimated 17,000,000 acres of former breeding grounds drained and diverted to unprofitable agriculture, we hope to put 600,000 acres back during the year. It is a most thrilling and practical program. But bear in mind that 600,000 acres will not be fully operative unless we have nesting ducks to occupy them, and there are still hazards in the way of accomplishing even the retirement of 600,000 acres.

I hope it is but the beginning and that it will so demonstrate the practicability of this method of attacking the duck shortage that Federal funds may be found to carry on the program from year to year until we have a dependable supply.

Now, the only controllable element affecting the duck population is the annual kill by the guns of sportsmen. Whatever your personal interests and local conditions, I hope we may be favored with your sympathy and your confidence that we are doing a hard job with all the honesty and sincerity of purpose which is in us.

COULEE DAM, THE COLUMBIA RIVER, AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE GREAT NORTHWEST

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Coulee Dam, and also to include therein some remarks by Mr. E. F. Banker, director of conservation and reclamation of the State of Washington.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have never objected to the remarks of any Member of this House or to the remarks of any high-standing Federal official, but to begin inserting in the RECORD remarks made by State officials will be never ending.

Every Member of the House has just received a letter from Senator FLETCHER'S Joint Committee on Printing, which has been sent to all Senators and Representatives, calling attention to the law which provides that not over two pages of extraneous matter may be inserted by any Member without getting an estimate from the Public Printer, and the joint committee called on the Public Printer to keep anything out of the RECORD that covers over two pages.

I do not want to stop the gentleman, but it does occur to me that the Members themselves should refrain from asking to place in the RECORD various documents from State officials. If we insert this from the commissioner of agriculture of the State of Washington, there are 48 commissioners of agriculture, there are 48 Governors, there are 47 lieutenant governors, there are 48 speakers of legislative assemblies, and there are various other State officials who write articles and make speeches; and, if all are eligible to go into the proceedings here, we would just clutter up this RECORD with a lot of extraneous matter. We have a House Committee on Printing, and I am not going to object if those in charge of the RECORD do not object, but I hope the gentleman will not make the request.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman tell the House what it costs the Government per page to print these things in the RECORD?

Mr. BLANTON. It costs a great deal. The law says that not over two pages of extraneous matter may be put in the RECORD by a Member without getting an estimate from the Public Printer. If we begin including these speeches, documents, and articles from various State officials, I think we had better increase the size of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD four or five times its present size. We have a Printing Committee, and usually the gentleman from Pennsylvania is here to take note of these things. I do not know why he is not functioning this morning.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not the duty of the majority to protect the RECORD as well as of the minority?

Mr. BLANTON. If I were on the minority, I would protect everything.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has the responsibility just as much as we have.

Mr. BLANTON. I have fulfilled my responsibility by calling attention to the rules and asking that Members refrain from inserting speeches from State officials. I am not the censor of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, typical of its clear vision, broad national statesmanship, and energetic action, the present administration has begun the construction of a dam at Grand Coulee on the Columbia River in the State of Washington. It will be the first structure built by man which will exceed the bulk of the Great Pyramid. Coulee Dam will rank first, the Great Pyramid second, and Boulder Dam third. This is characteristic of our great Northwest. This is merely a beginning of a development which as it progresses will astound the world and bring untold blessings to the future millions who will eventually populate this favored section of our great country.

The Washington State government has cooperated with and will continue to cooperate with the Federal Government in this magnificent undertaking.

The following is a statement made by E. F. Banker, chairman of the Columbia Basin Commission of the State of Washington on the Columbia River development, and director of conservation and reclamation in that State. By the way, so far as is known, the State of Washington is the only one among the 48 to have such an official. This statement was placed in the hands of President Franklin D. Roosevelt on January 22, 1935:

Considered from any major angle, to complete Columbia River development is sound and justified. In a rounded scheme of national-resource development and protection, utilization of these northwestern power, water, land, and other natural resources is of compelling importance. For ages the water has poured into the sea, an economic waste of energy, although impounding it presents no unusual engineering problem. Tremendous potential electrical power has gone unused. Soil second to none in richness and depth remains idle. Yet here in an excellent climate might be established and maintained thousands of model rural homes.

It is such a picture as has been envisioned by this administration.

There arise practical questions.

Will this regional development be self-liquidating? Is there strong and wide-spread public sentiment in the Northwest for the undertaking? Is there need of such additional farm land and power? Will citizens in private and official life in general (Washington, Oregon, Montana, and Idaho), and the State of Washington in particular, in years to come continue helpful and sympathetic to this bold undertaking? Will it pay them to do so? Do they recognize it not only a highly practical direct-labor project, but a gigantic effort to preserve national resources? Is the flow of the Columbia River, judged by the Government record of the stream-gaging stations for 22 years, sufficient to warrant perpetual impounding of its water by the key dam at Grand Coulee? (Stream-gaging stations were established in the Columbia River at Grand Coulee and Wenatchee, Wash., in 1913, and a continuous record has been kept since that date.) Is distribution of this water over 1,200,000 acres physically and financially feasible? Will the soil hold out? What are the present railroad facilities? What is the range of possible crops? What does the Northwest offer the Nation toward the solution of economic and human problems? Is this project a public necessity? Is it a sensible relief-employment project? Are 30,000 to 35,000 farms and homes for 750,000 people available here?

These and similar questions come to the minds of those who must decide whether now is the time to proceed further in the development of a new empire contributing to the happiness and prosperity of the American people and the wealth and strength of the Nation, or whether to halt and leave this excursion into intriguing fields to future generations.

As to advisability, the findings of the careful analytical experts must be accepted as final. The best qualified specialists in engineering, hydroelectrics, electrochemistry, irrigation, agriculture, dairying, fruit raising, sugar-beet crops, mining, forestry, flood control, factories, and other more or less technical fields agree that the Columbia River empire-building job is easy of accomplishment and justified. The magnitude of the undertaking may awe at first, but the average person is convinced, once the details are studied and understood.

As to public sentiment, the people of the Northwest approve and will continue to approve the evident determination of the administration to devote the Columbia River and adjacent lands and resources to the benefits of man. The people have caught something of the spirit of President Roosevelt. Their eyes are focused on the Columbia River development. Active business, political, and labor groups west and east of the Cascade Mountains are backing the project with fervor. It is not a sectional matter. Party lines have disappeared. States lines are undiscernible. Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana are united. These States will not bicker among themselves but unitedly will support the Federal Government. Local rivalries have disappeared. Communities will not too strongly press lesser wants. The average man knows that if the Northwest would shift into high gear and get on its way it first must claim and vitalize its greatest asset, now dormant.

Consider now the questions of the relative position of the Northwest's resources in their relation to the Nation, power consumption and repayment of investment for power and irrigation.

All observe with admiration the deep concern of the administration over the loss of vast acreage by erosion, winds, floods, drought, and misuse. Clear to the citizens is the administration's sympathy for those who have lost all, those whose present is mere existence, those for whom the future holds little or no promise. Even the least observing note that this sympathy has generated an active search for remedies, corrections, and, most important, action.

Sane persons everywhere not only approve the Federal policy of segregating or withdrawing lands proved unsuitable for present use, but they also eagerly uphold the administration in opening up lands that may be depended upon, year in and out, to render unto man a just return for his labors.

The administration, casting about for lands suitable for general farming, market gardens, fruit growing, dairying and stock raising, analyzes a great tract in the State of Washington, east of the Cascade Mountains. Such study on the part of the Chief Executive is a fortunate thing not merely for the section concerned but for the country at large.

This tract is twice the size of the State of Delaware and four times that of the District of Columbia. It is susceptible of irrigation at low cost. The soil is of great depth. The desert characteristics are "not due to soil and surface conditions, but lack of rain." The crops that may be grown embrace all grains and fruits. To enumerate the products would be to catalog all the staple agricultural crops of the Temperate Zone. Conditions for growing fruit in this section are particularly favorable, there being no place in the world better adapted for raising apples, pears, peaches, apricots, wine and table grapes—all fruits but those requiring tropical or semitropical conditions. The section is traversed by three trunk-line railroads. The land is gently rolling. Nearby are relatively small irrigated regions around Wenatchee, Ellensburg, and Yakima, where abound intensively cultivated and wonderfully successful farms, visual evidence of the potentialities of the larger Columbia Basin. Westward 175 miles, beyond the Cascade Mountains, is Seattle, a world port; 100 miles to the east, Spokane, a bustling, modern city.

The climate is moderate, extreme neither summer nor winter. There is abundant sunshine over a long growing season, and light snowfall. Hurricanes, tornadoes, cyclones, and blizzards are unknown. The land slopes toward the southwest. This tilt gives the land more of the afternoon sun than if it sloped to the north or lay horizontal, the increased heat being a big factor in crop growth.

Various delightful local characteristics make the territory attractive to those desiring to live on farms or in rural towns. Within 75 miles is one of the most beautiful mountain ranges in the United States—the Cascades—with gorgeous Mount Rainier at hand, both the range and glacier-spotted 14,000-foot peak affording ideal retreats for those who in leisure time seek elevation in the enjoyment of magnificent scenery and the indulgence of the pleasures of outdoor life. In an abandoned bed of the Columbia River you still see "Dry Falls", a waterless falls 40 times the size of Niagara. A million people, possibly many more, could find in such surroundings "the life more abundant." These vital considerations should have great weight in establishing a modern rural community, where substantial people would like to live.

The distribution and consumption of the power to be generated by the Columbia River will inevitably be coincident with the thorough development of the Northwest. This is no place for lengthy argument that cheap power is the answer to the question. Others have made that argument and proved the case. It may be said, however, that when the Columbia area is definitely functioning in the national agricultural scheme, the price of power reduced, and a new civilization established, there will be a spontaneous demand for a tremendous quantity of electricity, a quantity comparable to that required in any populous agricultural and growing industrial section. This consumption will increase as devices to lighten the labors of home and farm are cheapened in price and installment payments made possible over a longer period than now generally extended. Existing towns will grow larger and fine new ones spring up, increasing the power demand.

With the increase in population, not only in Washington but throughout the Northwest, there will follow extensive industrial expansion to meet the daily needs of the people. This means power consumption. This means a balanced agricultural and industrial growth—the ideal condition. Illumination of certain national highways by electricity must be considered.

To determine new power demand there are numerous competent Northwest agencies, private and public, now delving into the hitherto concealed mineral resources of the country. It is found that these are greater than has been supposed. Thus in metallurgical fields there is indicated wide use for power in considerable quantities. Experts are learning more about ores that are useful in warfare. Encouragement is being given private capital in its quest for gold and other precious metals. Study of possible adaption of some of our mineral deposits which indicate availability for conversion to so-called "lighter metals" and similar researches are being conducted by the Washington State College. The object is to create new industry for the Northwest and new markets for Grand Coulee power. Others are attempting to justify more extensive paper manufacture and the development of can-neries. Over all kindred investigations is the aim to stimulate old markets and create new ones. Satisfactory progress is being made. If President Roosevelt's Science Advisory Board solves problems "related to long-distance transmission of power and the protection and utilization of natural resources", the rich Northwest becomes an important workroom in the Nation's laboratory. Ultimately California will draw on the Northwest for such electrical power as it will need but be unable to find nearer home. The four Northwestern States, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington, with an area larger than France and Germany combined, will contribute their natural resources for this industrial development.

As to the repayment of the investment, earnestly tilled soil of the richness of that of the Columbia Basin will pay for itself many times over in a relatively brief period. Over the ages nature has deposited here a volcanic ash running to a depth of 25 feet over great stretches and in many localities to a much greater depth, nowhere shallow in the area considered. It has remained untouched. It belongs to the Nation, in a sense, to pass along from generation to generation. This land must take the place of that soil which through neglect has been lost by erosion—washed into the sea.

The cost of bringing this under cultivation and providing power to lift the water from the reservoir into the canal system should be spread lightly over the years. The Federal Government should serve as banker. It is too big a job for private capital, even if it were a field for private capital. It is too much for the State to contemplate. It is up to the Nation.

Future generations should pay part of the cost of conserving the soil for their use. Not only the first settlers but later occupants, while in fact owners, must be custodians, introducing a requirement which unfortunately has been missing in our national agricultural life. Farm custodians should be held to some sort of soil accountability. This will further insure the investment.

There must be recognized the fact that the creation of new taxable wealth as a source of Federal revenue partly justifies the business venture. Besides, millions of dollars annually will be put into national commercial channels by way of normal expenditures of the people. The Yakima, Wenatchee, Ellensburg, and Alaska settlements have paid for themselves many times over and will continue to send a flow of money eastward for all time to come. It is fair that these aspects are considered in appraising the soundness of this contemplated Federal loan, if it so may be termed.

Once power is made cheap and rich lands available there will be no dearth of settlers of a high type. If the Federal Government will put this wonderfully fertile land to the care of thousands who have struggled, in many cases in vain, they will find American manhood on hand promptly to add the finishing touches in the transformation of the desert. In a well-balanced agricultural program this will not be at the expense of any other section of the United States because land that should be withdrawn, but which still is used with meager results, is a liability to any State.

Further, the people thereon are not enjoying the comforts and niceties of life that might be made available to them elsewhere under their own flag. To make these comforts available the Nation requires not only use of the right land but nonuse of land incapable of meeting advanced standards of living. The crudities and privations of much American farm life soon will be things of the past, let us hope. Better homes, a part of the national plan, must be the chief goal of the Columbia River development.

The conditions are ideal for establishment in the Columbia Basin of a great, model, rural community. In that empire the materials, while as nearly perfect as can be, are raw. So here is an opportunity to build from the ground up, applying from the very beginning the best knowledge that has been acquired in farmland adaptation and rural housing. Here may be avoided many of the difficulties naturally arising in making over an established order. There are no mistakes to correct, none of those inevitable wrenches incident to doing things in a different way. Here is the chance for leaders of vision to use knowledge and experience and create from what is now waste land a modern farm empire pattern, like which there is nothing in the whole world.

There is idle brawn and brain enough on the Pacific coast to people and reclaim this arid area, with Federal cooperation. But it should be thrown open to the people of the Nation. Distances are no longer great in the United States. Easterners who wended their ways westward 50 and 75 years ago endured many days, often weeks or months, of arduous travel. Modern transportation methods encourage men and women to transplant themselves more frequently now when there are inducements. Already the trek to the Northwest has started. The problem of finding places for these people grows serious.

Is not this movement to the Northwest in itself additional evidence that the proposed project has something more than a local value? In the light of other known conditions and lamentable recent experience, it is a reliable symptom of national pains that must be relieved. It is not a local boom project. It is a national necessity. As such it meets hard tests.

Once the President in his wisdom has given the order which will again advance the Columbia project, tens of thousands of willing hands will reach for the chance to help build the empire.

The people of the Northwest commend the President for his vision and prompt action in harnessing the Columbia River. Here is one of the many farsighted acts of his administration.

Trusting his judgment, the people now ask and respectfully urge that there be no delay in the issuance of an Executive order to proceed with the Columbia River high dam at Grand Coulee and the related irrigation of 1,200,000 acres extending southward therefrom. The foundation plans for the low dam should be changed to a foundation suitable for the high dam necessary for power and water for irrigation. Further, there should be allocated sufficient funds to warrant starting work on the irrigation phase of the project in the spring or early summer of 1935. Immediate change to a high-dam foundation will save money in the long run, but that is not the chief concern.

Since the low dam was authorized about a year ago the economic picture of the Nation has changed. A drought threw our tottering agricultural system entirely off balance. Other droughts may come. Are we to fold our hands and wait for them, suffering the consequences? Or shall we open up lands where droughts cannot occur? Every argument is in favor of the latter course. To proceed with Columbia Basin irrigation now would synchronize with the well-considered plan of limited agriculture control and restriction which the Federal Government has in the making. Lands dependent upon rainfall must take their chances on droughts. In the Columbia Basin moisture is guaranteed and, with other factors dependable, production certain. The headwaters of the Columbia River as nearly fit the adjective "eternal" as any waters known. They are to be relied upon in the Nation's long-range, well-ordered farming program. Here are found all the elements necessary for carrying out a large block of a better permanent America. Nature furnishes them. Is there elsewhere in the United States such a magnificent clean-cut opportunity for both rural electrification and extensive irrigation on a scale so pretentious?

Practically, building the canals and laterals for the irrigation system will furnish direct employment for thousands of men. Obviously a much larger number of women and children will be direct beneficiaries of the construction work itself. There is no other sound, self-liquidating Public Works project that will employ as many men promptly. The combined power and irrigation projects, with resultant activity in many lines of work, will solve Washington's unemployment problem. If started now the project will take thousands off the relief rolls.

The entire job can be completed in 7 or 8 years. This will be none too soon. If ready for occupancy today, this attractive land would be snapped up like ribbons at a bargain counter. Annually, about 400,000 young people come into the Nation's workaday world. They either wander about idle or force their elders out of their positions. The Columbia Basin, as a construction project, would take care of thousands of them now, hundreds of thousands 10 years hence when the new empire is a going concern.

The State of Washington offers its cooperation. It will facilitate in all ways at its command the successful conduct of the work. The views herein stated represent the thought of Washington and the Northwest generally.

The State of Washington through its executive, administrative, and legislative bodies will cooperate enthusiastically with the national administration. A united public sentiment assures fulfillment of this pledge. The State will cooperate in all ways possible in the conduct of construction. It will do its part in promotion of the sale of power, in settlement of the land, in the quest for new markets for power and the utilization of resources, in the amalgamation of power reserves and the coordination of the Grand Coulee and Bonneville systems, in the encouragement of wider use of electricity for heating and in the enactment of necessary legislative measures. There is pledged constant effort in obtaining such financial aid as the State justly may be expected to extend from time to time, and use on the Grand Coulee project of a substantial part of relief funds which it (the State) may receive from the Federal Government.

Any accurate gage of intelligent opinion in this section on the subject of Columbia River development shows that business men, editors, students, laborers—men and women in all walks who were at first apathetic—have joined with those long enthusiastic over this attempt to adapt nature to the needs and demands of life. The change in sentiment is but the process of education. The people of other parts of the Nation also, as they learn, are approving this component part of a national plan which, in the words of Secretary Harold F. Ickes, is the most worth-while effort at empire building the world has witnessed in ancient or modern times.

TOWNSEND OLD-AGE PENSIONS PRACTICAL

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members, I wish to thank the Membership for permitting me to discuss today the humanitarian Townsend pension plan. I hope that I may be permitted to proceed without interruption until I conclude my remarks, after which I shall be pleased to yield to any Member for questions on the various economic changes which I propose.

I readily recognize that in discussing the Townsend old-age revolving pension plan many of my colleagues may consider my judgment premature or unbalanced. I base this surmise on the fact that individuals high in Government, and several Members of Congress, have already declared the Townsend plan fantastic and idealistic, and that it is absolutely preposterous and absurd.

Answering such critics, who appear to be sincere in their statements, but whose judgment and understanding of this problem seem to me immature, may I request your attention to the fact that every important movement in history has been assailed by innumerable critics whose prejudices prevented them from readily accepting new ideas which did not conform to established custom and tradition.

Christianity fought for its very existence for 300 years before it was accorded recognition. The intrepid Columbus encountered more difficulties in promoting his plan of adventure than he did in accomplishing his objective. Gallileo was compelled publicly to renounce the currently accepted astronomical fact of the rotation of the earth about the sun, because tradition and teachings apparently demonstrated the impossibility of such a system. The first steamship was described as "Fulton's folly", just as the Townsend plan is described as fallacious by certain individuals who appear to be blind to the actual distressing realities which may soon overwhelm us unless corrected.

A few other instances of progress which met opposition are the steam engine, our public-school system, the ability of men to fly and to navigate under the surface of the sea. History is filled with such illustrations, and in nearly every instance the inventors or proponents of new ideas were forced to combat the orthodox thought of individuals whose minds were not attuned to liberal vision.

Under the plan which I propose, it will be possible to pay the enormous sum of $20,000,000,000 or more as pensions, without an increase in taxation; in fact, it is very probable that taxes may be reduced. The profit motive will be maintained, and with the exception of two or three industries, business will be entirely unhampered and left free to work out its own problems. Practically everything we have thus far proposed and experimented with in the new deal could be eliminated. It will be necessary, however, that we have a limited, controlled inflation, that the profits of all credit be absorbed by the Government, and in addition thereto, that two or three nonessential industries be declared national monopolies.

DISTRESSING CONDITIONS DEMAND CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

Congress is responsible for the present unfortunate plight of our people, and Congress alone can correct and remedy the injustices, under which we suffer, through the enactment of legislation of a permanent nature which will forever remove the specter of poverty enveloping our unfortunate worthy citizens today.

In order that Congress may recognize its responsibilities, let us consider briefly what exists today in our beloved America, where, under the Constitution, every man is entitled to the pursuit of happiness, the attainment of which, however, is impossible for many of our citizens under the existing economic order.

Picture, if you will, millions of our worthy aged citizens, bereft of their life's earnings through bank failures, deprived of their homes as a penalty for debts incurred in necessity, and steeped in the depths of misery, suffering, and beggary through absolutely no fault of their own. In addition to the millions of aged unfortunates, we have millions of unemployed who, in the opinion of Mr. Hopkins, the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, will continue to be unemployed. This is, indeed, a pathetic forecast if it were true—but, happily, it need not be so.

We have millions of young boys and girls, graduating from our schools and universities who have absolutely no chance in life under our present economic set-up. They are doomed to a low standard of living, bordering on abject poverty, and, in too many instances, to lives of moral degradation. These millions of aged and young citizens have been patriotically patient; but, in my opinion, they are rapidly approaching a crisis, as it is self-evident to all that patience is not a virtue in every contingency, especially under such inequality of conditions as now confronts them.

Our worthy Chaplain, in his prayer at the opening of today's session, seemed to sense what I have discussed and propose to discuss in the interest of alleviating the distress of our unfortunate citizenry. He appealed to the Supreme Being to be "not unto them an absentee God." Past and present actions of the Congress appear to me to indicate that God is absent from our hearts and our deliberations and that we worship at the altar of Mammon in the legislation which we have been and are enacting in the interest of the overprivileged and to the detriment of the underprivileged groups. Unless we restore God to our hearts, honor Him in our deliberations, and put human rights above vested property rights, I see no relief for us except, possibly, after a long period of travail.

THE TWOFOLD PURPOSE OF THE TOWNSEND PLAN

There has been a great deal of superficial newspaper comment on the Townsend plan, but there is a surprising lack of understanding as to its underlying purpose. It is not designed merely to grant benefits to one class of individuals, the aged, but to give increased opportunities to youth as well, and to assure economic recovery to our entire Nation. Many people over 60 years of age are forced, through financial exigencies, to cling to employment which they would gladly relinquish to younger persons if they were able to do so and maintain themselves in dignity and comfort. The Townsend old-age revolving pension would not only make their retirement possible but compulsory, if they wish to receive the $200 monthly pension. And so the Townsend plan is heralded by millions of our young people as the plan which will give them a better chance in the field of competitive employment, a chance to live normal lives, to establish homes, and to enjoy the security of financial independence.

The revolving feature of the Townsend plan, providing that the entire sum of the pension shall be expended within 30 days of its receipt for "goods, commodities, or services within the jurisdiction of the United States", is our insurance against selfish hoarding of the pension and our assurance that its stimulative effect will be felt throughout all branches of industry and in every section of our entire country.

Under the plan as developed by Dr. Townsend, a sales tax on all transactions within the United States would provide the necessary funds. Unfortunately, the opposition has centered its attack on this provision in a veritable storm of protest. By focusing attention on the method of obtaining funds for the payment of the pension, it would appear that those opposed to the plan seek to divert attention from its twofold purpose—namely, security and financial independence to youth and aged and economic recovery for the Nation. Surely this is not an impossible objective; surely this is not an impractical dream.

If the procedure outlined by Dr. Townsend to raise the necessary funds to pay $200 per month to every worthy citizen over 60 years of age comes before the House, I shall most emphatically vote for it, for by doing so I shall be performing a humanitarian service to our aged citizens, an economic service to the unemployed and to those burdened with debt, and at the same time I shall be demonstrating my sincerity in regard to my campaign promises by expressing the wishes of the majority of my constituents.

RADICAL READJUSTMENT NECESSARY

Admitting, as I think we must, that it is impossible for us to emerge from our present unfortunate dilemma by following the old paths of accepted economics, I am convinced that the Townsend old-age revolving pensions are practical and could be put into effect in the interest of our aged citizens and our millions of unemployed without destroying or seriously impeding our present capitalistic system, and, most noteworthy, with little or no increase in taxation. The profit motive in business will be maintained under the plan which I shall present.

On the principle that Americans might travel unmolested on belligerent vessels during the World War, our Nation engaged in that conflict and suffered a loss of 150,000 fine American lives, a direct loss to date of $30,000,000,000, an indirect loss of $30,000,000,000 more to date, and obligations which will total at least another $40,000,000,000 or $50,000,- 000,000 before the pension lists of the World War are discharged.

Surely no one here will deny that our millions of aged citizens, our millions of unemployed and their worthy families, and our millions of young men and women who do not have an opportunity to live normal lives are entitled to at least equal consideration with those few whose right to sail the seas unmolested in belligerent vessels we defended with such costly fervor!

Under my proposal it is possible that the Townsend pensions of $200 per month may be paid with no increase in taxation. This is, indeed, in the minds of many, a fantastic statement, but the facts which I shall present will forcibly support my contention.

I recognize that the Townsend plan is a radical innovation, and it will require a radical readjustment to meet this situation. I do not propose to take one cent of wealth now possessed from any individual, but I do propose one or several national monopolies.

SOCIALIZATION OF BANKING ESSENTIAL

We today have a monopoly in the postal business. I propose that our Government abolish the private banking monopoly and itself operate the banks in the interest of the people. Our Nation must take over banking, the issuing of money, and the control of the flow of money through consumers' markets, and restrict the use of money to one function—that is, to serve as a medium of exchange only and not as a medium of exploitation as it is being used today by the private banking monopoly.

Ants and bees do not starve to death in the midst of plenty. Able-bodied insects do not tax themselves to supply doles to able-bodied idle workers. Where such idle workers exist, as in the case of drones, they are eventually effaced. Under the private banking monopoly we permit the drones to become wealthier and wealthier, sapping the lifeblood of the Nation through interest exactions.

The distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] on January 7 delivered a speech to the Congress on what I would term "the socialization of banking for purely governmental credits." I am in thorough accord with his ideas, but I believe he does not go far enough. We should have socialization of banking to include not only governmental but all credits.

On the basis of our present national income we are paying practically 33 percent of every dollar as interest on our total public and private debts which approximate $225,000,000,000. On a fair average of 5½ percent we are thus paying to the financial interests over $12,000,000,000 annually as interest. If we socialize all banks and provide, under existing law or by constitutional amendment, that no private individual may charge interest on loans but that this right rests entirely with the Government—as it should—we would thus have a national income of more than $12,000,000,000 per annum from this source alone, which would in itself permit the payment of approximately 60 percent of the total amount required to pay the $200 per month, as stipulated in the Townsend plan.

DEBT STRUCTURE A PERMANENT BAR TO RECOVERY

Although it is a matter of official record that approximately 33 percent of all income today is required to pay interest on existing indebtedness, we continue to plunge the Nation farther into debt. Unless some radical and sensible means is taken to overcome this juggernaut of debt, we cannot avoid inflation, repudiation, confiscation, or communism.

The figures just quoted do not include an approximate 25 percent of our national income which is paid in taxes. We should remember that every time we issue tax-exempt securities, we are granting a special subsidy to what the President terms the "overprivileged class" and are adding to the tax burden of the underprivileged in equal proportion.

We know what occurs when a vessel is heavily encrusted with barnacles. Its progress is impeded. Our Nation is encrusted with barnacles of debt and, as a result, high interest and taxes impede our forward progress. While our Nation was developing its natural resources, indebtedness, and interest exactions did not vitally affect our welfare because of the continued increment and development of wealth. With no further frontiers or virgin land to conquer, our increased indebtedness, owing to the World War, has brought us to our present dilemma in which interest and taxes are eating the life sustenance of our Nation.

The burden of interest is crushing us and no individual who, because of inheritance or special privilege, has amassed wealth, should have the right to oppress his less fortunate fellows through interest exactions.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield for a question.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman mentioned barnacles. I presume he was referring to human barnacles. For instance, would the gentleman consider J. P. Morgan as a barnacle, Mr. Mellon as a barnacle, or Mr. Rockefeller as a barnacle? Does the gentleman consider those malefactors of great wealth human barnacles and would he favor a tax on their swollen fortunes, rather than any sales tax proposed by the sponsors of the Townsend plan?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Answering the liberal-minded and progressive gentleman from Ohio, I will state that in my opinion, the practices of Mr. Morgan, Mr. Mellon, and their ilk, like barnacles on a vessel have retarded the progress of our Ship of State. Under the plan which I propose the international bankers would be deprived of their special privileges and would no longer be permitted to advance themselves through parasitical activities which hinder the social and economic advancement of the whole people.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am sorry that on account of my limited time I must decline to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from California certainly will not deny his old friend one question?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Under these conditions, I will yield to my good friend from Texas, whom I recognize as a friend of the people but whose judgment, in this instance, I consider to be biased.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose we were to go along with the gentleman and by unanimous consent were to pass this bill at once and send it to the Senate and the Senate were to take it up by unanimous consent and pass it immediately and it were sent to the White House and the President signed it, and it became the law of the land; does not my friend from California know that he would be handing these aged men and women a "gold brick", because inevitably it would bankrupt the Government, which would not be able to pay them 10 cents under present, existing circumstances?

Mr. HOEPPEL. If the gentleman has absorbed what I have said and will follow me, he will recognize, I believe, that the plan which I am advancing will bring us out of our existing circumstances to which we have been brought by our careless acquiescence in the development of an economic system which permits an overprivileged class while millions of our people are denied even the necessities of life.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman know that the Government could not pay this $24,000,000,000 annually?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I reiterate that the plan I propose, if adopted, would not necessitate additional taxes to pay the Townsend pensions. I propose that we take the twelve to fifteen billions of dollars from the overprivileged bankers and the financial ring and use this amount for the payment of the Townsend old-age pensions.

TOWNSEND PENSIONS WOULD REDUCE CRIME COSTS

We are spending today approximately $13,000,000,000 annually on crime prevention and control. Authorities state that crime would be reduced at least 25 percent if the citizens were prosperous and employed. No one with reason would question this assertion. This would give us another $3,000,000,000 or more annually in savings with which to pay the Townsend pensions. In addition, the provision in the Townsend plan that pensions will not be paid to those with criminal records would also act as a deterrent to lawlessness, with a consequent saving in crime-control costs.

ABOLISH POORHOUSES! RELIEVE OVERBURDENED YOUTH!

While figures are not available, it is very probable that at least a half billion dollars per annum is required to maintain our aged individuals in institutions. Furthermore, millions of our aged citizens are being maintained at an unusual sacrifice by their children and other relatives. One may estimate that at least another half billion dollars is expended for this purpose. The Townsend pensions would relieve these citizens of this burden which they are today called upon to carry at a sacrifice and disadvantage to themselves.

PURCHASING POWER AT THE GRASS ROOTS OF POPULATION

If the $12,000,000,000 today paid as interest by the underprivileged to the overprivileged financiers were paid into the National Treasury and paid out as Townsend pensions, it would, in a sense, be returning this money to the source from which it was obtained. This $12,000,000,000 plus the $3,000,000,000 savings resulting from a reduction in our crime bill, plus the half billion dollars from taxes on bonds now tax exempt, plus the half billion dollars saved on institutional care, plus the half-billion-dollar savings to private persons maintaining aged indigents, would total approximately sixteen and a half billion dollars annually. Another quarter billion dollars or more is paid out as pensions to aged veterans. While it is true that much of this represents purchasing power today, nevertheless, the bulk of this huge amount is not utilized as purchasing power by the financial interests but is applied rotatively to purchase additional tax-exempt securities, including foreign issues. If the Government would take the profits in banking and pay such profits as old-age pensions, it would establish a purchasing power at the very grass roots of population, in contrast to the present system under which the profits of banking go back into the financial hopper to be ground out in the purchase of tax-exempt paper, here and abroad.

Our volume of spending is not of sufficient proportion to generate real purchasing power. What this Nation needs and must have is increased purchasing power, distributed throughout the length and breadth of our country, virtually into every hamlet. The Townsend plan proposes this very remedy through the large amount of money which will be placed in circulation through its operation. As soon as purchases commence, the shelves of the storekeeper will become vacant. Presently, the broker will have such heavy demands on his stock that his shelves will also become empty. Next the manufacturer will be called upon to replenish the stock of the broker. And so the stimulative effect of increased purchasing power will be felt throughout all industry and unemployment will cease. There will be no necessity for unemployment insurance of any kind as the Townsend plan will start the cycle of buying which, in turn, will react on the cycle of production; and within a reasonable time after the pension plan is initiated, we will have generated a purchasing power which will bring about real recovery.

Funds for the initial payment of the Townsend old-age pensions may be obtained through the issuance of Treasury notes backed by the credit of the United States. I mention the credit of the United States reservedly as I do not wish to disturb our present huge gold surplus, which I believe should be maintained in the Treasury for purposes of international exchange only.

TAX-EXEMPTION UNDEMOCRATIC

It should be borne in mind that, if we socialize our banks, as described, we will not be taking anything from any citizen whatsoever, except the monopoly and subsidy which the private financier now enjoys through the exaction of interest on loans. If we refund our present interest-bearing bonded indebtedness, now tax-exempt, the tax on this huge amount of wealth will add at least another half billion dollars for payment of the Townsend pensions.

NO RELIEF EXPENDITURES UNDER TOWNSEND PLAN

The payment of the Townsend pensions during the past 2 years would have obviated the expenditure of $9,000,000,000 during that period for relief, and the further expenditure of $4,000,000,000 this year for this purpose, which is another item to be considered in the adoption of the Townsend plan.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman is making a very fine presentation of his plan; but in view of the fact that the gentleman has an entirely different method of financing than the Townsend plan anticipates, it seems to me the gentleman is in error in calling this the "Townsend plan", because, as I understand it, the advocates of the Townsend plan insist that the money be raised in accordance with the provisions of that bill, and they want nothing else.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Answering the gentleman, I will say that to the millions who look to the Townsend plan for relief it means financial independence to our aged and our youth and economic recovery to the Nation. It is the embodiment of a broad, humanitarian principle. The mechanism of the plan is a necessary feature, of course; but so far as I am concerned, and so far as any individual who receives this pension is concerned, the equitable distribution of purchasing power among all the people, envisaged by Dr. Townsend, is our objective, and I believe any practical, effective means for obtaining the necessary funds will be acceptable.

SUDDEN, RAPID INFLATION DETRIMENTAL

It is self-evident to any monetary student that the injection of a large volume of money into immediate circulation will cause a rise in commodity values. This has been, and is yet, the principal objection that has been focused against the payment of pensions of $200 per month. Critics state that this large amount of money, thrown into the channels of trade monthly, would create a demand for goods which would cause the value of commodities to rise out of all proportion to the existing commodity level, with the result that the employed would find the cost of living far beyond their present incomes. In my opinion, this would be true. Therefore, it may be expedient that the Townsend pensions be authorized at $100 per month, with the stipulation, however, that the payments be progressively increased to $200 per month, so as not to violently disturb the commodity levels to the detriment of the individuals at present employed. Since wages always lag behind increases in commodity prices, I feel confident that it will be necessary, in order to prevent suffering and sacrifice on the part of the worker, that a modicum of pension payments be stipulated, predicated upon commodity price levels.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not desire to be critical of the gentleman's remarks, but the gentleman has suggested an entirely different method of financing from the one the Townsend plan provides, and now the gentleman is cutting the amount down from $200 to $100.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am advocating $200 per month pension. I admit that I am suggesting as a substitute for the sales tax a taxless plan for raising the necessary revenues which should effectively answer the vociferous objection of those who would discard the plan because of the sales-tax provision,

Mr. BLANTON. He is cutting the pension half in two.

Mr. HOEPPEL. No; I am not cutting it half in two.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman is advocating a different plan.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am advocating $200 per month.

Mr. BOILEAU. It is not the Townsend plan that the gentleman is discussing.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Many of the thousands of people who write to me say, "Let us have the legislation now, initiate the program, but, if necessary, begin the payments 2 or 3 or 5 months hence." As a compromise to this suggestion, I am suggesting the immediate granting of $100, to be increased to $200 per month in accordance with the rise in wage and commodity-price levels.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is the gentleman in position to say authoritatively that the Townsend plan advocates are willing to accept his method of financing?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I reiterate, the millions who are looking to the Townsend plan for relief are insistent upon increased purchasing power. That is what the Townsend plan means to them. It is the objective of the plan, not the mechanism for providing funds, upon which they will accept no compromise, no amendment. That is the attitude of the thousands who have written me on this subject.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I should like to suggest another means of obtaining funds. My time is getting short and I should like to discuss other features of my plan. However, if the gentleman will get me more time after I conclude, I will answer all questions, if I can.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield on the matter of time?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. I understood the gentleman was to talk for 30 minutes on the Townsend plan. I know the gentleman is probably better informed on the Townsend plan than almost any other Member of this House except the other gentleman from California, Mr. MCGROARTY, who introduced it. I think most of the Members who came over here today came with the idea that they were going to hear the gentleman discuss the Townsend plan. The gentleman has only 5 minutes more. I am interested, of course, in the speech he is making, but he is not speaking on the Townsend plan; and I want to inquire of the gentleman if I can get unanimous consent for him to proceed for 10 additional minutes, will he use those 10 minutes for a discussion of the Townsend plan, so that those of us who are interested in old-age-pension legislation may get some first-hand information about the particular plan of Dr. Townsend from a Member who, I know, knows a great deal about it.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman make that request?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be given 10 additional minutes at the expiration of his time for the purpose of discussing the Townsend plan as set forth in H. R. 3977, the Townsend old-age revolving pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended 10 minutes. The Chair will state that the gentleman from California has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLANTON and Mr. YOUNG reserved the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, because I object to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] taking the gentleman from California off his feet. The gentleman is discussing entirely extraneous matters here; and if you confine him to the Townsend plan, you will probably take him off the floor.

Mr. MOTT. Oh, no; that is not my intention. My intention is to give him the floor for 10 additional minutes for the specific purpose of having him discuss the Townsend plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon that the gentleman from California have 10 minutes more?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I want to observe that the gentleman from California is discussing a vital topic, namely, the redistribution of wealth. I disagree with the gentleman from Texas that that will be taking him off his feet.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object to state that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] ought to be put in double harness with the gentleman from California so that they may jointly discuss both of the "hooey" plans for redistribution of wealth.

Mr. YOUNG. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from California a moment ago in discussing the Townsend plan said he was interested in the youth of the country. I remember that a Washington newspaper the other day had a picture of a young man 23 who married an elderly lady of 64, and I was wondering about the gentleman's interest in the youth of the country. If the Townsend plan goes through, such marriages would not be news. The young men of the country would frequently marry the elderly ladies [laughter] and many girls would marry elderly gentlemen. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon that the gentleman from California have 10 minutes more?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, knowing the legislative mind of many of my colleagues, I felt certain that I would be ridiculed if I attempted to discuss the Townsend pension plan on the floor, but for the information of my good friend from Ohio and others who may scoff and ridicule the plan, I wish to say that he who laughs last, laughs best. The people who have it in their power to determine who shall sit here in this Hall are going to have the last laugh, and many of you now present will not be here in the future unless you see the light. As Representatives, we are sent here for one purpose, and that is to express the will of our constituency, and the will of the people in reference to the Townsend plan will be expressed, if not by us and in this Congress, then by others at a later date.

Now, getting back to the Townsend plan. The crux of the opposition is epitomized in one question: How are the funds to be obtained to pay the Townsend pensions? I am going to propose several other practical methods which might be utilized.

OTHER MEANS OF OBTAINING FUNDS

In Europe, the various nations have monopolies on certain products, such as salt, tobacco, and so forth. As a means of crime reduction, in the furtherance of law observance, and in the interest of increasing national revenues, I suggest that our Government monopolize the liquor business and the traffic in arms. Both of these industries are basically nonessential and contribute more to every selfish and criminal instinct in man than any other. It is safe to assume that if the Government took over the monopoly of these industries, an additional one or two billions of dollars per year would accrue to the National Government while, in equal ratio, the crooked politicians and operations of the whisky ring would be reduced.

While I do not consider it necessary, nevertheless, the Government could add to its revenues immeasurably if it would also monopolize the tobacco industry which might be considered, likewise, as nonessential.

To those who decry the socialization of banking and the nonessential industries, which I have just described, under the usual plea that the Government is not qualified to act in this regard, I would recall the recent private banking debacle, which robbed millions of Americans of their life's savings. In my opinion, it requires considerable temerity and flagrant disregard of obvious facts, to voice such a protest. Certainly our past experience does not warrant any great degree of confidence in the merit or efficiency of our private banking system!

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield? I asked unanimous consent that the gentleman have 10 more minutes in which to discuss the Townsend plan, and that was the understanding when the gentleman was granted the additional 10 minutes. I do not wish him to discuss crime reduction or governmental monopolies. I wish him to discuss the Townsend plan.

Mr. HOEPPEL. What does the gentleman mean by the Townsend plan?

Mr. MOTT. I mean H. R. 3977, the bill introduced on the 16th of January by the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY], and known as the "Townsend old-age revolving pension bill". I am anxious to hear the gentleman on that. Thousands of my own constituents are interested in that bill. The gentleman is an authority on it, and I want my constituents, as well as my colleagues, to have the benefit of his views and his argument. I hope the gentleman will confine himself to that bill for the remainder of his additional time.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am informing the House how the additional revenues required to pay the Townsend old-age pensions can be secured. The principal criticism directed at the Townsend plan is on its sales-tax feature, as no one dare controvert its recovery features, the positive relief it will afford to our aged citizens, and the increased opportunities to youth embraced in the plan.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question on the Townsend plan?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. What is the estimated annual cost for the Townsend plan according to the gentleman's computation? I assume that he has made one.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I would estimate it as between $18,000,000,000 and $20,000,000,000. There are many old people who have incomes and many others who will not give up their positions and so will not be eligible for the pension. Only those who give up their present means of livelihood, their gainful occupations, will get the pension.

Mr. SISSON. What proportion would that take of the annual income, that is, the total earnings of all of the American people?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am not speaking of income, I am speaking of revenue from the overprivileged class, which has been holding the American people in economic slavery. I am proposing to get the money from that class.

Mr. SISSON. Where does the gentleman propose to get the money, if not from income?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I propose that the necessary funds be obtained from the present interest-exacting and coupon-clipping class. I propose that the Government get the income from its own national credit instead of giving the bankers national credit and permitting the private financier himself to absorb the interest profits.

Mr. MOTT. Is that part of the Townsend plan, the McGroarty bill?

Mr. HOEPPEL. The principal and most vital feature of the McGroarty bill is that providing for the payment of $200 per month pensions. As there is concerted opposition to the sales-tax provision, I am showing how these funds can be obtained without an increase in taxation, by taking special privilege from the overprivileged.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman was granted 10 minutes extra time to speak on the Townsend plan of financing a $200-per-month pension and not on his own or some other plan.

Mr. HOEPPEL. In my request for time to speak, I did not state that I would speak on the Townsend method of financing, but on the Townsend plan of pensions.

Mr. MOTT. Did not the gentleman understand the purpose for which he was given the additional 10 minutes? I ask the gentleman to use the 10 minutes to talk about the Townsend plan and I hope he will do it.

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman from Oregon apparently wishes me to speak in reference to the sales tax. I will vote for a sales tax to pay the Townsend old-age pensions; but inasmuch as such violent opposition has developed in reference to this feature, I am suggesting means of obtaining the necessary revenues from the overprivileged and from entrenched and inherited wealth.

Mr. MOTT. I want the gentleman to speak for the Townsend plan. The sales tax, or transaction tax, is, of course, a part of that plan. It is the only tax proposed in the bill for financing the pension.

Mr. HOEPPEL. As I have stated, my objective is the enactment of the Townsend plan. I have not discussed the method of financing proposed by Dr. Townsend. As the opposition is using the sales-tax method as an entering wedge to defeat this humane pension, I am suggesting an alternative method of raising revenue, if necessary.

Mr. MOTT. Then the gentleman is speaking against the Townsend plan of financing the $200 per month pension?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am not. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 8½ minutes remaining.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am going to touch upon another subject which is important and vital to our recovery.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. May I request that the gentleman kindly permit me to proceed in the presentation of my plan?

BASIC ADVANTAGES IN THE SOCIALIZATION OF BANKING

Following the orthodox thought, I suggested that in the socialization of banking, the Government continue to exact the same interest on national credit as is exacted now by the private banker on bank credit. It appears, however, that the best interests of the citizen would be served if national credit were extended to the citizen at cost, thus augmenting the purchasing power of the citizen rather than restricting his purchasing power by exacting interest payments. After all, what we must have is purchasing power which would be more directly applied if we did not exact from our citizens the present $12,000,000,000 to $15,000,000,000 of interest payments per annum. The issuance of credit to the citizen at a fraction of 1 percent, or at cost, and the absolute prohibition of any interest exactions on loans by private financiers would relieve the underprivileged from carrying the load of accumulated and inherited wealth of the overprivileged. Present public and private debts would be discharged through actual Treasury credits in notes or negotiable bonds without any interest payments attached thereto and with no tax-exempt provisions.

Under this procedure, every individual with surplus money would be confronted with the following situation: He could either take his money or credits and spend them for any purpose or he could deposit them in the Government bank for safe-keeping, without interest. Regardless of the wealth created and the amount which might be in the possession of any individual, such individual could only utilize this money for the purpose of engaging service or purchasing commodities. Of what utility would be the wealth of a Ford or a a Rockefeller if these huge fortunes could only be utilized in spending and if interest exactions, which feed on the needs of the people and threaten their very life sustenance, were outlawed? No fair-minded individual would object to the accumulation of wealth by honest means through individual effort and ingenuity but at the same time no fair-minded individual should be content to permit the recipient of such wealth to use it to enslave his fellow men.

Of course, it is obvious that if the Government exacts no interest on national credit, it will be necessary to obtain funds for the payment of the Townsend pensions from another source which, in this instance, may be through increased inheritance and income taxes and, if necessary, a limited sales tax, predicated upon an assured national income of $150,000,000,000 to $200,000,000,000 annually.

IRREDEEMABLE CURRENCY AND GOLD CREDITS

While the nations of the world worship at the altar of gold and silver, such type of currency is unnecessary domestically and, in a sense, internationally. However, not to depart too suddenly from an established system, I would suggest in the socialization of banking that there may be two kinds of currency: the "irredeemable", which is acceptable for all debts, public and private, and for the payment of taxes and all obligations, except, perchance, the payment of imposts; and gold and silver to be used only for purposes of international exchange. We should not be concerned or disturbed as to how much of this currency might be lent to foreign nations, nor how much might be spent abroad, inasmuch as such money would be of absolutely no value to any foreigner, except in the purchase of American products or services. If the foreigner were offered this type of money, with the full knowledge that it could not pass through international exchange and be redeemed by gold or silver, he would either be forced to decline this money or to utilize it to purchase American service or commodities. We know he would not decline to receive this type of currency. Consequently, for every dollar spent abroad, we could rest assured that the foreigner would purchase a dollar's worth of American products which, to even the most skeptical, would indicate that our foreign markets would be reestablished.

In the socialization of banking, gold and silver would be of absolutely no utility in domestic commerce and transactions, as they are of no utility internationally, except through the value which foreign nations place upon them. Therefore, until an international agreement can be reached, our gold and silver stocks should be held in the Treasury for the sole purpose of making them the medium of exchange, wherever balances occur in our export or import trade. Our gold and silver should have an equal, if not a higher value than the value which the leading commercial nations put upon their own gold and silver stocks. In this way, we would have complete equality or stabilization in international trade, which is essential if we are to have world recovery.

Even though our imports should exceed our exports, nevertheless we could continue to maintain our present gold and silver stocks, since the United States produces approximately 25 percent of the gold of the world, and the Americas, including the United States, produce at least 75 percent of the silver. International trade would thus become, in a sense, more or less in the nature of barter, with periodical balances adjusted through gold and silver credits.

The adoption of this balance would prevent for all time the financial rape which was perpetrated on the American people by the international bankers preceding and following the World War, when gold credits approximating $40,000,000,000 were transferred by the international bankers of Wall Street to Europe and South America. It should be borne in mind that these credits are now all in default and virtually repudiated, thus becoming an absolute loss to the American people and reducing our national wealth. If the losses accruing from these huge loans were borne by the international Wall Street bankers alone, the average citizen could shed crocodile tears, but, unfortunately, the financial burden incident to the defaulting of our foreign debtors has been transferred through the international bankers to Mr. Average Citizen, who has lost billions in the failure of banks, foreclosure on homes, and shrinkage in property and other values.

FOREIGN INVESTMENTS SAP UNITED STATES WEALTH

Under the private-banking system, foreign business interests and foreign long-term investments take from the United States each year untold millions of American credit which the owners apply in building up the wealth of their own nations. Under the plan which I propose, these foreign individuals will not be in a position to sap the lifeblood of our financial system nor enrich their own nationals at the expense of the American citizen, as the credit which they will take abroad will be the irredeemable domestic paper currency which I explained a moment ago. This currency will be of no benefit to them unless they engage American service or purchase American commodities. This is indeed an easy application of the principle which I approve: "America for Americans, with justice to all nations and special privileges to none."

PROTECTION AGAINST CUTTHROAT FOREIGN COMPETITION

The adoption of the Townsend plan of old-age pensions of $200 per month and the consequent expansion of currency would increase all commodity prices in America and bring higher wage standards. Europe and the Orient would thus be in a position to undersell American-made products in our home markets and thus pervert to their own interests the advantages obtained through the socialization of banking and expansion of the currency. This situation, however, could be corrected by amending the provisions of the reciprocal-tariff legislation to authorize the President or the Tariff Commission to increase the tariff, from time to time, on foreign products which enter into competition with American manufactures, so that in every event the tariff, plus the cost of transportation and production or manufacture abroad, would be somewhat higher than the cost of production and distribution of the same commodity manufactured in our own country.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. How would the gentleman use silver to balance our international trade, when there are only three small countries on the silver standard at the present time?

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman perhaps misunderstood me. I said "gold and silver." When we are dealing with a silver country in trade, we will take their silver in trade.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. When the trade balance was in favor of the United States on those foreign transactions, would the gentleman suggest that American citizens, in whose favor this trade balance appeared on the books, would be paid in this same currency?

Mr. HOEPPEL. American citizens with a trade balance against France, for instance, would be credited with irredeemable currency which I have described, thus maintaining at all times, in our import and export bank, our gold balance for future barter or trade transactions. Under existing law, they do not receive gold but our irredeemable paper currency.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the gentleman not think that France would have something to say about that herself?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Answering the gentleman, I would say that whenever we have a balance to our credit due from any foreign nation, it is not the business of such nation to indicate to our Government what we may or may not do with the indebtedness due us.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the gentleman's plan is predicated upon the fact that we will enter into monetary agreements with foreign countries and that we will settle our trade balances on a bimetallic basis instead of on a gold basis, as at the present time?

Mr. HOEPPEL. It is not necessary to enter into trade agreements with any of those nations. They will accept our gold or silver in barter or exchange at the value which we place on it and we will accept their gold in the ratio which they themselves place on it. This condition exists today between the United States and France, where the gold value is not uniform.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There has not been any country in the world on a bimetallic basis for the last 70 years.

Mr. HOEPPEL. In the socialization of banking which I propose, the bimetallic standard is not necessary, but I merely mention it to satisfy the orthodox worshipers of the gold standard. We are transacting our domestic business today without the gold standard, and we can also transact our international business without either gold or silver.

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. MARSHALL. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he thinks that J. P. Morgan already has as much money as he should have?

Mr. HOEPPEL. As far as I am concerned, answering the gentleman's question, I do not care how much money J. P. Morgan has. It would be of no value to him under the plan which I propose unless he spends it for American goods or service. Unfortunately, today, through the issuance of tax-exempt bonds and interest exactions, we are giving Pierpont Morgan, Barney Baruch, and others the opportunity to enslave the borrower.

Mr. MARSHALL. I just wanted to know if the gentleman favored giving him $200 a month.

Mr. HOEPPEL. If he would get out of the banking and gambling business—that is, gambling with other people's investments—I would not object to his being given $200 per month.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand the gentleman, he is opposed to the sales tax, as proposed in the McGroarty bill, for the purpose of financing the Townsend plan.

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman misunderstood me. In my opening remarks I said I would support the Townsend plan as originally introduced, but if it were to be discarded because of the sales-tax provision, I suggested this.

Are there any other questions? I shall gladly answer any question to the best of my ability, along the lines of the economic changes which I have suggested.

Mr. DEEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. DEEN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman stated it would require about $20,000,000,000 annually to pay the Townsend old-age pensions. Is that correct?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Yes.

Mr. DEEN. Has the gentleman figured out how much assessment that would be on each person in the United States annually? Does the gentleman know it would require $166 per person on every person in the United States annually, or an average of $830 per family of five, to pay the Townsend old-age-pension plan?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I shall gladly answer the gentleman.

Mr. DEEN. I want to ask the gentleman one other question.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Answering the gentleman's question, I will state that in the field of mechanics, in the field of science, in the field of learning, in almost every field, we have progressed. We have built the most wonderful airships; in almost everything we are modern except in our finance and our monetary systems. The gentleman is basing his argument on the ancient and antiquated oxcart system of finance and private banking.

Mr. DEEN. One further question, if the gentleman will yield. Would the gentleman himself be willing to pay an assessment upon each member of his family of $166 every year? Will the gentleman answer "yes" or "no"?

Mr. HOEPPEL. It would not be necessary under the plan which I propose. The revenues for the payment of the Townsend plan would be obtained from the overprivileged, interest-exacting group.

Mr. MOTT. Would it be necessary under the Townsend plan?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Last year by taxing incomes, taxing inheritances, taxing liquor, taxing tobacco, an extra 2-cent tax on bank checks, extra postage, from every conceivable form of taxes, we were able to raise only $3,700,000,000 in total revenues. How would the gentleman propose to raise $20,000,000,000 extra? Just tell us how he would propose to raise that?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I believe I have already answered the gentleman's question. Twelve to fifteen billion dollars of the required amount would accrue to the National Treasury if the Government, in lieu of the private banker, extended credit, and if the Government exacted the same rate of interest as that now charged by the banking interests.

Mr. BLANTON. But who would pay it?

Mr. HOEPPEL. The same people would pay this twelve to fifteen billion dollars to the National Government, under a socialized banking system, as are today paying this amount to the private banker. In addition, limited, controlled inflation would add to our national income.

CONTROLLED INFLATION OUR SALVATION

Great Britain won the Napoleonic Wars through a controlled expansion of so-called "irredeemable" paper money. We can positively conquer our economic depression, solve our unemployment problem, and control the expansion of our irredeemable currency through the payments made to the aged and worthy citizens of our Nation through the medium of the Townsend old-age revolving pensions.

We should bear in mind that with the large expansion of credit and the slight expansion of actual money during the World War, we had an era of prosperity which permitted the humblest laborer to purchase luxuries. The price of wheat rose to $2.20 per bushel, wages were as high as $20 per day, there was virtually no unemployment, and not even the merest semblance of a bread line. Our national income increased to such proportions that the party in power advocated and actually reduced taxation. These facts clearly demonstrate that an expansion of credit and currency insures a high commodity-price level and at the same time increases the wages of the worker.

The payment of the Townsend old-age pensions would be a similar expansion of credit and currency in circulation and would increase our national income proportionately. With a present national income of approximately $41,000,000,000, the Federal income from all sources has been estimated at $3,711,650,688. Our national income, with the expansion of credit and currency through the Townsend plan, would be increased three- or fourfold and our Federal income would likewise be increased to approximately $15,000,000,000 per annum, thus giving another large source of income from which to pay the Townsend pensions.

In my opinion, income taxes would be unnecessary, although they could be applied whenever required in order to keep the Budget in balance. Inheritance taxes, however, should be radically increased.

The revolving, controlled, and limited inflation which would follow the enactment of the Townsend plan, in addition to other benefits I have described, would make it possible for all public and private debts, which today approximate $225,000,000,000, to be paid with the dollar of the same purchasing power as when the debts were incurred and would thus relieve the burden of the debtors in this proportion.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS A NATIONAL RESPONSIBILITY

Old-age pensions are, in my opinion, the sole responsibility of the National Government. The National Government alone has authority to take the youth of our land and send them to their death in war. By the eighteenth amendment the National Government virtually confiscated the property of the liquor interests, without indemnification.

What I have proposed in the socialization of banking is not confiscatory. It merely takes from the overprivileged few the right, through interest exactions, to pyramid their wealth on the backs of the less fortunate citizens. If, under the law, we have the right to stipulate what is a usurious rate of interest, we also have the right to stipulate that interest shall not be charged by any private citizen, but that this function is solely the prerogative of the Government.

In the presentation of these simple facts, I recognize that the departure suggested is indeed radical, but it is by no way inimical to the proper interests or rights of any individual, and is in accordance with the democratic principle that the common good of all should be our primary objective.

The religious leaders of America must interest themselves in the physical well-being of men in order to advance the spiritual issues in a more understanding and helpful manner. The hungry man, as well as the hungry animal with the God-given instinct of self-preservation, fears nothing—not even death itself. To interest a hungry man in matters of faith and the world beyond, while he is suffering the tortures of the damned through laws enacted in the interest of the overprivileged, is almost an impossibility.

The millions of sensible, outstanding citizens who have petitioned for the enactment of the Townsend plan and the additional millions who will rally to this principle, will be heard—if not in this session, then in the next.

The President, in his written pronouncements, has envisaged social security. We cannot afford to give a half loaf to our aged citizens by enacting inadequate old-age pensions.

While I do not suggest that the ideas I have advanced are perfect in themselves, or perhaps the only way out, nevertheless I do feel that I have suggested the vehicle by means of which economic recovery and humane and just consideration to our aged citizens may be secured. Can we consider ourselves humane and civilized if we permit the present suffering of our millions of aged citizens and the millions of our unemployed to continue, knowing as we do—without question—that the sole responsibility for their relief is that of the Congress of the United States and not that of the President or his appointed advisers?

The people elected us to represent them and we must express the will of the people or they will be justified in repudiating us. The Townsend old-age revolving pension movement is an irresistible force. It is gaining momentum by leaps and bounds. I hope that my colleagues will investigate the facts which I have presented, and that when the petition to discharge the committee from further hearings on the Townsend plan is presented, as I propose to present it, they will join me in signing this petition in order to bring the Townsend pension bill to the floor of the Congress for action.

TOWNSEND PENSIONS WILL MODERNIZE OUR ECONOMIC SYSTEM

We pity the backward Eastern peoples who, with their teams of camels and oxen, slovenly cultivate the soil with a wooden plow. We have made enormous progress in the field of invention, discovery, physical science, and mechanics, but in our economic thinking, we still linger in the Stone Age and fight over bones!

We must modernize our economic system, loose the tenacious grip of antiquated thought and enervating tradition which binds us to the past, and, in the light of reason and common sense, face the issue courageously! In their championship of the Townsend plan, the people are but claiming their heritage of financial security and independence. The star of destiny leads on, and millions are turning toward the light that shall make them free! [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] has again expired.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read by the Clerk:

The Honorable JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
The Speaker House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby submit my resignation as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives and request that the same take effect immediately.

Yours very sincerely,

JAMES M. FITZPATRICK.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 85

Resolved, That James M. Fitzpatrick, of New York, be, and he is hereby elected a member of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Appropriations.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 86

Resolved, That the following Delegate and Resident Commissioner be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives, to wit:

Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries: Anthony J. Dimond, of Alaska.
Rivers and Harbors: Anthony J. Dimond, of Alaska.
Insular Affairs: Santiago Iglesias.
Agriculture: Santiago Iglesias.
Labor: Santiago Iglesias.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 88. Joint resolution making additional appropriations for the Federal Communications Commission, the National Mediation Board, and the Securities and Exchange Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 118. Joint resolution to prohibit expenditure of any moneys for housing, feeding, or transporting conventions or meetings.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1175) to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes. Pending this motion, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute recommended by the House Committee on Banking and Currency be considered without the intervention of any point of order, and that the substitute may be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that it shall be in order in the consideration of the bill (S. 1175) to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes, to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency; and that such substitute, for the purpose of amendment, shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLISTER. With the permission of the Chair, before the motion is put, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama what arrangement he desires to make as to time for general debate?

Mr. STEAGALL. What arrangement as to time would be satisfactory to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HOLLISTER. We on this side should like an hour. We shall not want any more, and we may not use all of that.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1175) to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1175) to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes, with Mr. CALDWELL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act granted the powers of the Corporation for a period of 1 year with authority conferred upon the President to extend those powers an additional year. At the end of 2 years of operation an act was passed extending the powers of the Corporation an additional year, to the 1st of February 1935. The time for the expiration of the powers of the Corporation is immediately at hand. The bill before us grants an extension of those powers for a period of 2 years, unless, as provided in the original bill, sooner terminated by order of the President of the United States.

Authority is granted for extending the final date of maturity of loans made by the Corporation to 1945, an additional 5 years. The bill provides a liberalization of the basis for loans to industry. Under the general provisions of the original bill the Corporation is required to take full and adequate security for loans. Under the provisions of the act of 1934, authorizing loans for industrial purposes, the Corporation was authorized to make loans upon adequate security. Under the provisions of the bill now before the House loans to industry would be authorized upon such security as in the judgment of the Board would reasonably assure repayment of loans. Provision is made for loans to institutions financing electrical appliances, both for rural and urban uses. Another provision would liberalize aid to institutions loaning upon real-estate mortgages, which it is hoped will assist in reviving real-estate values and reviving construction activities.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield at this point for a question with regard to loans to industry?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Can the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency tell us what percentage of the money allocated to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been paid out and allocated?

Mr. STEAGALL. I cannot state in percentages the information the gentleman requests, but I may say that under the provisions of the act of 1934 the Corporation was authorized to use to a maximum amount of $300,000,000 funds for industrial loans. The amount of industrial loans that have been made is about $35,000,000.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. In other words, slightly over 10 percent.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; a little over 10 percent would be correct.

I have not time at the moment to discuss the figures disclosing loans to industry by the Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from Alabama, the amount of loans to January 1 was approximately $40,000,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. I was going to say that it was in the neighborhood of $40,000,000, or an amount slightly in excess of the loans extended by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. CELLER. Does that include both agencies?

Mr. STEAGALL. Just a moment, please. In this connection permit me to say that the provisions of the act of 1934 as applicable to Federal Reserve banks in the matter of securities to be required are more liberal than in the case of loans to be made to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and it is fair to say that the Treasury is obligated to supply the Federal Reserve banks an amount not in excess of $147,000,000 to be employed by the Federal Reserve banks in making loans to industry. The Federal Reserve banks were very desirous of legislation which would permit the banks to recapture the amount of $147,000,000 which they had subscribed to the capital stock of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the only way by which those funds could be taken back by the Federal Reserve banks was through the use of the fund in extending loans to industry as provided in the act of 1934.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The present law requires that loans to industry be adequately secured.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is quite correct.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The bill now before the House requires such security as will reasonably insure repayment of the loans. What distinction does the gentleman make between these two definitions? To what extent does the language of the pending bill broaden the discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. STEAGALL. It is my personal view, I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota, and I take it my view represents that of the Members of the House, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, while designed to accomplish a measure of general relief for the Nation, was intended to operate as a legitimate loaning agency; and under the original law the Corporation was required to take full and adequate security for loans, which language would seem to carry with it the suggestion that the Corporation should pursue a sound, conservative, careful policy in lending Government funds. Later, as to industrial loans and to meet the exigencies of the emergency resulting in unemployment of labor and distress in industrial activities of the Nation, that language was so liberalized as merely to provide that such loans should be made upon adequate security. It was intended by the use of that language to liberalize the act somewhat as compared to the original provision.

The language of the present bill, instead of stating "full and adequate security" or treating the word "adequate" as meaning the same, provides that the Corporation may make such loans upon any security which in the judgment of the Board will reasonably assure repayment.

Does the gentleman think we should authorize this loaning agency of the Government to make loans without the requirement of security that would reasonably protect the Government in the matter of repayment?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. May I say in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman that I recognize the difficulty the committee must have had in framing language which would definitely define its policy; nevertheless, I must say that I do not believe that by the use of this language the gentleman will succeed in causing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to liberalize its policies. Our experience in the Northwest has convinced us that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is even more hard-boiled than the bankers in passing on this class of loans.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not think that conclusion is justified, and I do not think there is any doubt that under the language of this bill the Board would consider their authority as having been liberalized in the matter of security to be required. May I say further that the committee has the assurance of all of the officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that the language employed in this act will be regarded by them in administering the law as a liberalization of their authority in taking security.

Mr. COX. The gentleman's committee has no intention of recommending anything to this House which if adopted would make the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a hazardous enterprise from the Government's standpoint?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to my friend, that there would be some hazard in any lending system that may be established now or that could have been established at the time or since the establishment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. But, I think I know what the gentleman has in mind. It is not our desire to have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation engage in extending favors to any without requiring at least such security as will reasonably assure repayment of the loans made.

Mr. COX. The committee does not anticipate that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will make loans to a man who is running his business in a way that will cause inevitably a loss to the Government.

Mr. STEAGALL. I quite agree with the view as expressed by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Then, are we of the Congress to take the statement of the distinguished chairman of our committee to mean that under the language change made in the bill loans will be liberalized as compared to the loans which have thus far been made under this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I have not the slightest hesitancy in answering the gentleman's question affirmatively. We have the assurance of officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Board that they will so administer the act, and may I also say in response to suggestions that have been made that I think certainly this agency of the Government has been administered with due regard to the directions and limitations imposed by the Congress in granting the powers of the Corporation. At every conference at which these gentlemen have been heard they have not hesitated to make suggestions to the committee handling the legislation involving the activities of the Corporation, but they have always assured us that they regarded themselves as servants of the Congress and of the country; that it was their duty to carry out in good faith the enactments of the Congress and to observe to the best of their judgment the limitations imposed upon them by the laws under which they were acting.

I have no doubt the Corporation has made mistakes. I have no doubt that more mistakes will be made. I do not know of any business institution, or any lending agency, private or public, in the United States that has not made mistakes in recent years and that may not be expected to make more mistakes. I want to commend here and now the administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the management now in control.

May I say another thing in this connection. The President has surrounded himself with many able, patriotic public servants. I accord my tribute to all of them, but he has such a towering personality that many, if not most of those who surround him, are invisible to the public eye; however, Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Board, is one man who fully measures up to the requirements of his office and he is visible to the people of the United States.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. May I ask the gentleman whether under his interpretation of this new act the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would have any latitude to take into consideration character and reputation in the matter of loans? Some of the best loans that were made in our section of the country in the old days were based on character. Was the applicant honest? Was he truthful? Was his reputation for faithful performance good? If the answers to these questions were favorable, the applicant got his loan, even if he was a little shy on collateral. Under the new language contained in this bill could the Reconstruction Finance Corporation take the character of the applicant into consideration?

Mr. STEAGALL. I fully sympathize with the view expressed by the gentleman from Indiana. If there is one man in this House who deplores the passing of the time when human character commanded value at the windows of banks and other business institutions in the United States, I am that man. May I also say to the gentleman that the language employed in this bill contemplates the very thing that he and I have in mind when it authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, instead of being governed solely by full and adequate security to protect a loan, to regard all factors in determining whether or not repayment of the loan is reasonably assured. That is the language which will permit consideration of the character of individuals responsible for the management of borrowing institutions.

Mr. LUDLOW. Is it not the gentleman's understanding from his observation in the administration of this matter that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been just as rigid in its requirements as the banks of the country?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not think so, but the Corporation is in the nature of a bank and has been operating under a mandate of the Congress which you and I gave them to demand full and adequate security for loans. The remedy lies here in this House and at the other end of the Capitol if the administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has not been satisfactory. I think that is a fair statement of the situation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What limitation is there in the legislation as to the maximum loan that may be made to any one industry and as to the aggregate of all the loans made to all industries?

Mr. STEAGALL. In the former act there was a limitation fixing the maximum loan at $500,000. It was found in administering the law that at least some institutions large enough to need greater loans than the amount fixed in the limits of the act were denied the opportunity to obtain loans and to bring about desirable reemployment of labor because of this restriction. The limitation is not carried in the present bill.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I take it that the amendment which was offered relative to the reasonable assurance of repayment of loans was put into the bill because the committee felt that the amount, namely $4,000,000, thus far loaned to private industry was insufficient, and in order to put the country on its feet again more loans should be made to private industry and this was in the nature of an encouragement?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, that is the purpose and the hope of the committee.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Last year we appropriated at least $147,000,000 to be given to the Federal Reserve banks to make loans. What will become of that money that is not extended in the form of loans to industry? I understand they have only loaned about $40,000,000, and if I understand the matter correctly, if they lend this money and collect it back, it becomes theirs, and suppose they do not extend loans amounting to $147,000,000, what will become of the difference?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, it goes back to the Federal Reserve banks, and if my information is correct, and I have not recently consulted the officials of the Federal Reserve Board, but in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury soon after the law was passed, I received the impression, and I think it has been confirmed by subsequent information, that sums advanced to the Federal Reserve banks for loans would be furnished only to supplement on a 50-50 basis loans made out of the funds provided in the act to be made by Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York and then I must conclude, because I want to yield time to other members of the committee, and I shall not be able to discuss this bill in all its features.

Mr. FISH. I call the gentleman's attention to page 15, line 12, which reads:

> The amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other obligations which the Reconstruction is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this section.

I want to know whether there is any limitation.

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no limitation as to loans that may be made for the specific purposes of that section.

Mr. FISH. Could they issue $10,000,000,000 or $45,000,000,000?

Mr. STEAGALL. The original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act placed a limitation on the issue of obligations by the Corporation and, of course, they would be governed by that.

Mr. FISH. But is there any limitation under this section?

Mr. STEAGALL. This section does not carry any limitation, for the reason it was thought this work was of such transcendent importance, to try to relieve the real-estate market, to try to revive construction and the reemployment of labor, that we should leave the Reconstruction Finance Corporation unhampered in the matter of loans of this type.

But let me say to the gentleman from New York that there is an automatic limitation upon the powers of this corporation. There are only now available funds amounting to something like $375,000,000. Of course, there will be collections from time to time, and while these collections have been in substantial amounts heretofore, we are approaching the time when collections will be far less than they have been in the past and under the bill before the House these loans or purchases can only be made with the approval of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, and the President is authorized to terminate these activities at any time he sees fit, and if we were to defeat this bill the President, under other legislation, would still have the power to do substantially all the things that are provided for in this measure.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas and then I must conclude.

Mr. PATMAN. What is being done for the small, independent business institutions? I believe there is more to be done for the small, independent merchant and private industries than any other group or class in America today and I am wondering if there is a substantial step in the right direction in this bill to help the small, independent business man.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to the gentleman that we have provided for the use of every known kind of security by the banks of the country and we have made any and all kinds of securities eligible for loans and for rediscount at Federal Reserve banks. We have granted authority to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to supply relief. We have gone about as far as we know how in authorizing such loans. The gentleman knows what business conditions are, the uncertainty as to values, and the destruction of values that has occurred during recent years in the United States. Of course, all intelligently conducted lending institutions must pay regard to the matter of repayment of loans. Those things rest in the realm of administration.

Mr. PATMAN. Does this bill contain a liberalization for the small business man in comparison with existing law?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not know that this particular bill accomplishes anything more than existing law, except that we are liberalizing the provision regarding security for loans.

Mr. LUDLOW. May I ask the gentleman if his great committee contemplates in the future bringing out any further legislation replenishing or enlarging the amount that may be loaned to industries? I think that is very vital to the welfare of this country. My personal opinion is that some wise, well-considered, and liberal plan of extending credit to industry is the way to solid and permanent recovery. I should like to know whether we are to have adequate legislation to develop this vital plan to the full extent of its possibilities.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is unfair for the chairman to be interrupted. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] asked a question and I should like to hear the answer.

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman from Indiana that we cannot anticipate developments of the next 6 months, but I think that the Congress and the administration are fully and unreservedly committed to the use of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the support of business and the relief of the unhappy conditions that have existed in the United States during recent years and which still confront us. All will be done that can reasonably be done.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that I cannot more fully discuss the details of the bill. I must now conclude for the reason that I desire to be in position to yield time to other Members.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

The chairman of the committee has handled in his usual efficient way the more controversial aspects of this bill. I should like to take a little time to run through the different sections of the bill so that Members who may not have a chance to study it may have it explained in a few words. Questions may then be put after I get through, if Members so wish.

The first section, of course, extends the life of the Corporation for 2 additional years. Section 2 provides that commitments shall not be outstanding indefinitely, that when the commitment is once made the disbursement shall be made within a year, except with respect to two particular classes of loans where it has been found that through no fault of the borrower disbursement within 1 year from the date of commitment is either impossible or inconvenient. It would manifestly be wrong for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make a commitment and have to hold it up indefinitely for several years because the borrower did not need the money at the time. Such funds would be desirable for other borrowers, but if tied up would not be available for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make other loans.

Section 3 is the provision which gives the right to make loans with 10 years maturity instead of 5 years maturity as at present.

It is thought by the Corporation that there are many worthy borrowers who would not be in a position to pay off a loan within 5 years.

Section 4 broadens the power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to assist railroads. At the present time the most the Corporation can do is to make loans. Under this provision they may acquire securities of railroads and may guarantee such securities to aid in financing, reorganizing, and consolidating of railroads.

This section also includes a provision not in the original act but which was inserted later by a special proviso. It permitted Reconstruction Finance Corporation assistance to the trustee of a railroad in process of reorganization under the Bankruptcy Act. In section 4 (b), page 13, you will notice that the proviso is stricken out as no longer necessary, since now included in the general provisions of section 4 (a).

Section 5 permits the Corporation to subscribe for or make loans on the stock of companies engaged in the mortgage business, or where nonassessable stock may not be issued, it permits the Corporation to acquire the capital notes and debentures of such institutions. The Corporation is desirous of this in order that it may help the general mortgage market. They feel that if they have the funds available to lend to mortgage institutions it might help the general mortgage situation throughout the country. There is, in addition, a provision that the Corporation may make loans to corporations, associations, or persons which are organized for the purpose of reorganizing real-estate properties. This is a special provision which is not found in the Senate bill, the wisdom of which, in my opinion, is somewhat doubtful, and certainly, if incorporated at all, I feel should include a limitation such as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] attempted to point out a few minutes ago. Such a provision should not be included in the bill without some limitation as to the amount which could be expended for such purpose.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Is it not a fact that the bill was unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman is certainly correct. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me. I am very much in favor of the bill. I think it is an excellent bill, but I think it is perfectly proper in discussing the matter, when there are a few minor provisions which do not seem to be perfect, to indicate my disapproval of them. I expect to support the bill. I have been in favor of the bill from the beginning.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I did not understand the nature of the questions of the gentleman from New York. They seemed to be inappropriate coming from a member of the committee.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I understood the gentleman was asking whether I thought the bill should be adopted without a limitation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I do not see any reason why any member of the committee should ask questions about factual matters in the bill. It occurred to me members of the committee ought to know what is in the bill.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am not endorsing the gentleman's questions. I am indicating that, in my opinion, a provision in any bill authorizing expenditure should never be adopted without limitation.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. In the news dispatches which went out when this legislation was introduced, there was a paragraph which called attention to the provisions in the bill relating to the authority given to the R. F. C. to buy the bonds of railroads.

I had a communication from an investment banker rather approving that provision. I looked over the discussion in the Senate when the bill was under consideration there with that in mind, and I now ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] just how far and to what extent it is expected the R. F. C. will purchase bonds of railroad companies after this legislation is enacted.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is a question, of course, that would be impossible for me to answer. Discretion is placed in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as it is with respect to any loans made. Members frequently have an idea that there is some way in which Congress, by passing legislation, may compel the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take certain action in making loans. The most that Congress can do is to give authority to take action under general provisions of this kind.

Mr. MAPES. I got the impression from reading the debate in the Senate that it was expected that that provision would apply only to two or three railroad companies which are now in the process of reorganization.

Mr. HOLLISTER. If that is so, it was not mentioned in the House committee hearings.

Mr. MAPES. Did the gentleman have occasion to look over the debate in the Senate?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I did not.

Mr. MAPES. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the R. F. C., under the provision in the House bill, may go out and buy the bonds of the railroad companies in the open market, if it sees fit to do so?

Mr. HOLLISTER. In the open market?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I doubt very much whether they have such authority under this bill. I do not understand that it is so intended.

Mr. MAPES. I got the impression from reading the debate in the Senate that it was not so intended.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The provisions are:

May, to aid in the financing, reorganization, consolidation, maintenance, or construction thereof, purchase for itself, or for account of a railroad obligated thereon, the obligations of railroads engaged in interstate commerce—

And so forth.

I should doubt very much if that language could in any way be interpreted to permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to go into the open market and buy railroad securities.

Mr. MAPES. The last clause seems to be a little broader than that—

Or, when in the opinion of the Corporation, funds are not available on reasonable terms through private channels—

And so forth.

Mr. HOLLISTER. To make loans. That has nothing to do with the purchase of securities.

Mr. MAPES. Can the gentleman say in a word whether this section in the House bill is the same as the corresponding section in the Senate bill?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I cannot offhand. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. In order to keep the record straight in reference to the inquiry made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the gentleman understands, and I know he will state to the House, that this increased power applies only to the amount that could be loaned under the particular section.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Absolutely.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. And not to the general power of the Corporation?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Only to this particular section. I simply raised the question whether there should be any section adopted which had no limitation whatsoever, because this increases the general borrowing power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation over and above the six and three-fifths times its capital stock which it now may issue in notes or debentures, but it would still have to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I want to get the record clear. It may not be apropos to what the gentleman is now discussing, but I tried to get the answer from the chairman of the committee and could not do so. I want to be sure to get, as near as possible, the amount of money that has actually been disbursed to private industry.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Does the gentleman mean by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or by Federal Reserve banks?

Mr. CELLER. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The statement of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation through December 31, 1934, shows actual disbursements of $6,767,000.

Mr. CELLER. And what was authorized?

Mr. HOLLISTER. And commitments of $34,000,000. Of course, the commitments are similar to disbursements, because they are available to business. These amounts have been approved.

Mr. CELLER. Well, that is not necessarily so, because conditions may change; so that we can say today there is only a little over $6,000,000 actually disbursed to private industry?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Up to December 31, 1934.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. I think the Members are heartily in favor of this bill, as was the Committee on Banking and Currency. There seems to be only two provisions that are causing confusion. The law of 1934 called for "full and adequate security." Now that is amended to read "reasonable and adequate security." In my interpretation, it must be "reasonable" if it is "adequate." I cannot see how the present rules and regulations, as adopted and enforced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, particularly in their application to small industry, are going to be thus liberalized. The rank and file of the people, who are intended to benefit by this legislation, ought to have some definite assurance that these rules and regulations will be liberalized.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not want to stop the gentleman, but my time is limited, and I will ask the gentleman to limit himself to a question.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. I would like to know in what way we can liberalize these rules and regulations of the R. F. C. to help small industries?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I will answer the gentleman in this way: No one here wants to pass a law which compels the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make bad loans.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. No; it is not an eleemosynary institution. I appreciate that.

Mr. HOLLISTER. A great many Members who have discussed this subject, both with members of the committee and others, seem to think there is some way by which there can be wording placed in the act which will compel the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to industry.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Can that not be done by some form of definition of the word "reasonable"?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The most that can be done is to liberalize the wording so as to give full latitude to the Corporation. Then it is a question of judgment and discretion in that organization as to how far they shall go in following out the authorization which Congress has given them. I know of no other way by which Congress can do it.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. One other question. On page 19, lines 1 to 4, what was the reason which actuated the committee in limiting the language to the sale of "electrical, plumbing, and air-conditioning appliances"?

Mr. HOLLISTER. It was stated by Mr. Jones that there was a general feeling that there could be developed very easily throughout the country buying power in the public generally—and the gentleman will notice it reads "both urban and rural"—to fix up their homes in better shape; a part of the housing campaign, by buying electrical appliances, plumbing appliances, and air-conditioning appliances; and if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was in a position to loan money to concerns which were financing purchases of this kind, then it would pump out a certain amount of money in that kind of business.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. If it is true that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is given the power of discretion on the question of "reasonable and adequate" security, why limit it by particular language when other industries might be benefited by giving the board the power of similar discretion?

Mr. HOLLISTER. What the gentleman probably does not realize is that this kind of an organization would not be able to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under existing law, because these are financing institutions and probably do not come under the heading of "industrial or commercial business" as set out in the act. If it were not for that, of course, there would be no point in putting that language in.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I think there should be a statement placed in the RECORD made by the general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Would the gentleman please take some of his own time to put that in? I have one or two other things that I would like to develop in the short time I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] has expired.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes. I just want to finish, in the short time I have remaining, my description of the various sections, in order that there may be some explanation before the House.

Section 6 is merely to relieve against the strict interpretation which has been placed in the past on that part of the act where power was given to buy or to loan on the assets of closed banks, counsel having ruled that this did not give the right to buy or lend on a portion of the assets. Now the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may acquire or loan on a portion of the assets.

Section 7 extends the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation for 2 years.

Section 8 increases from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 the amount of Reconstruction Finance Corporation money which can be used in the subscription of stock to insurance companies.

Section 9 extends the life of the Export-Import Bank for an additional 2 years and, in addition, gives it the right of discount. It also takes off the 10-percent limitation which the laws of the District of Columbia would otherwise impose on its power to loan to a single individual.

This bank may desire to lend on several large transactions, perhaps, and it was felt that the limitation of 10 percent of capital on loans to a single individual was not broad enough.

Section 10 has been discussed adequately, and I shall make no further comment on it now.

Section 11 permits the substitution of collateral back of loans.

Section 12 changes the present provisions relative to making loans to the mining industry. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DUFFEY], I desire to read the interpretation put upon the new language in the bill by the General Counsel for the R. F. C., Mr. Reed. In his testimony before the committee Mr. Reed said in commenting on the language in the bill, which reads as follows:

> Such loans shall, in the opinion of the board, be so secured as to reasonably assure the repayment of the loans.
> We feel that it is much more liberal language than to say it shall be "adequately secured." We feel that it is much more liberal language that would permit us to lend more liberally on more liberal terms than if we said they should be "adequately secured", as the present law provides.

The General Counsel was, of course, referring to the new language contained in section 10 of the pending bill and was assuring the committee that the R. F. C., with this new language, respecting security would not construe it with the same strictness as the language contained in the original act, but would be more liberal in granting loans.

Mr. CELLER. I believe it would be very much in place to say that is the statement of Mr. Stanley Reed, a very distinguished lawyer, who has done a very fine piece of work.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has proven itself to be one of the most useful agencies of the Federal Government in helping to bring about a permanent recovery. Under the present able management of that Corporation its efficiency in extending credit where such credit is needed to save financial, commercial, and industrial corporations in which the money of a large number of our citizens is invested and upon which great numbers of our people are dependent, directly or indirectly, for the continuance of business—and thereby the continuance of employment—has been greatly increased.

In pleasing contrast to the earlier days of the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, financial aid and credit has been, through this agency, extended to a greater number of small businesses and industries rather than to the larger banks alone, and also in pleasing contrast to the operations of the R. F. C. during the first year of its existence, 1932, its operations have, so far as can be at present determined, resulted in a profit to the Government, and thereby a saving to our taxpayers rather than a loss.

For many years we Democrats were accustomed to hear, during each political campaign, that the Democratic Party did not have men of sufficient business ability to manage and conduct the larger operations of the National Government and that for the efficient conduct of the business of the Government the people of this country must rely upon the Republican Party and should therefore continue that party in power. Now, I do not wish to taunt our colleagues on the other side of the House with any of the mistakes that were perpetrated under the last Republican administration. Our friends on the other side of the House, many of them have given us able assistance, for example, in the preparation of this bill containing important amendments to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, and I am sure most of such mistakes were not the fault of the present membership of the House, but probably were due to the fact that they did not have the example now afforded by a Democratic majority in this body.

I am very pleased, however, to note that the operations of the R. F. C. under its present management not only show no loss, but bid fair to result in a profit to the Government which will largely offset, and perhaps entirely wipe out the enormous loss which the Government sustained through the operation of the R. F. C. during the last year of the Republican administration. I recall that in the campaign of 1932 one of the achievements of the Republican administration as told to us by Republican orators and representatives of the Republican Party in that campaign was the saving of a great bank out in Chicago. This bank, some of you may recall, was headed by a former Republican Vice President of the United States, and the loan in question was made shortly after that gentleman had terminated his connection with the board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The attorneys for the Chicago agency of the R. F. C. have recently brought suit against the officers, directors, and stockholders of that bank upon that loan of upwards of $90,000,000 because of default in the payment of interest. However, we are all likely to make mistakes and I am speaking of this only that the people may know that the R. F. C. is now being just as efficiently managed as it could have been under the most businesslike Republican administration, and also in the hope that when we make mistakes—as we are likely to do—our Republican friends may be a little more lenient with us.

Most of the provisions of this bill, setting forth the various amendments to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, have been or will be sufficiently covered by the chairman and other members of the Banking and Currency Committee.

I wish briefly to call your attention to two or three which, from my point of view, are of special importance:

In the bill which this House passed during the second session of the Seventy-third Congress, authorizing the R. F. C. to make direct loans to industry and thereby making easier the granting of credit to industries, large and small, and to businesses, large and small, the House first fixed the limit upon the amount which was thereby authorized to be loaned to any one borrower of $100,000. The other body of the Congress contended for a limit of $1,000,000. There were many here who honestly believed that too much of the money would be used in helping big business alone unless the lower limit were fixed. They lost sight of the fact that the $300,000,000 available to the R. F. C. for this purpose was a revolving fund and that it would be difficult—if not impossible—for the R. F. C. to loan the money, after making the proper investigation, faster than it was paid back. I take some personal pride in the fact that at that time I contended that the R. F. C. should be authorized to loan up to at least $500,000 to one borrower, and so stated to the House in the debate upon that bill at that time. In the conference the conferees finally did agree upon $500,000. The able Chairman of the R. F. C. Board, in the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee recently held, stated that there had been some instances where loans of a million dollars each could have been very profitably made, with the result that both those particular industries and other smaller industries would have been benefited and employment continued and increased; and that the R. F. C. Board was unnecessarily hampered in exercising its discretion in that respect. In the present bill our committee, profiting by the experience of the past few months of operation of this act, has taken off the limit and placed the matter entirely within the discretion of the R. F. C.

In answer to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], I would call attention to the fact that, although out of a total fund of $300,000,000 but $7,000,000 has actually been loaned, $35,000,000 has been authorized, which is equivalent to being loaned, and is in line with the purpose of this section of the act. I think we should bear in mind the fact that this undoubtedly is operating in most sections of the country to loosen up credit in banks, and that the banks themselves have loaned more money for industrial purposes than they otherwise would, had it not been for this authorization extended to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I may say also that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation presents a very pleasing contrast to the Federal Reserve bank in this respect, because the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, in my own section, has lent very little money—I think less than $1,000,000—under the authorization it received in this part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for information?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Does that include the entire State of New York or just the banks in the city of New York?

Mr. SISSON. I am speaking of the Federal Reserve Bank of the city of New York.

Mr. FISH. Have they made loans from any other source up-State?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; money has been loaned from several sources up-State.

Mr. FISH. But for the bank in the city of New York it is only $1,000,000?

Mr. SISSON. I am speaking of the Federal Reserve bank under this authorization. So we must give some attention to this section of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Only $1,000,000 up to the 31st of December 1934?

Mr. SISSON. Only $1,000,000.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Does not the gentleman believe that had the original bill contained an amendment requiring reasonable security, that much more than $6,000,000, $7,000,000, or $8,000,000 in loans would be outstanding?

Mr. SISSON. I can very honestly and positively answer the gentleman in the affirmative. We cured that in this bill, and I intended to speak on that as the second feature in the bill which I regarded very important.

Mr. CELLER. That is, the suggestion that the R. F. C. be more liberal in connection with its loans?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. That was the suggestion from the chairman of the board of the R. F. C. and its counsel.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped we could progress through this bill devoid of all politics, and I regret very much that the gentleman from New York has seen fit to inject politics into this bill. Surely the members of the Banking and Currency Committee did not have politics in mind when they reported this bill, and the members on the Republican side of the committee did not have politics in mind when they offered suggestions which liberalized the terms of this bill in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the committee. I hold no brief whatsoever for the Chicago bank which borrowed $90,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I do say, as I have said before in this House, that if the loan of $90,000,000 prevented a debacle in Chicago such as we had in Michigan, I think it was a pretty good investment on the part of the Government, even though they lose the whole $45,000,000 they are suing for. I assume the loan was made in accordance with the law, and that behind the loan there is "full and adequate security", together with the right of assessment against the stock of the corporation which will eventuate in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation collecting the full amount of the loan.

I may say in this connection that this act has been liberalized to overcome the results of the bank closings in Michigan, which resulted, in one of my counties where there were 21 banks, in only 2 of them remaining open and in operation. There was no more need of the Michigan bank closing in the first place than there is of one groceryman going out of business because the other one across the street goes into bankruptcy. However, this is incidental to what I wanted to say.

This bill broadens the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in two very important ways. In section 10, which amends section 5 (d) of the act, we do four things: First, we remove the limitation as to time. At the present time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can make no loans to industries which were organized later than January 1, 1934. I may say in this connection that many new enterprises are coming into existence, and if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can help capitalize these new industries, it may take up the welfare load of many of our localities. We felt that was a very desirable provision.

Second, we have removed the limitation as to amount. In the original act we placed a limitation of $500,000 on the amount that the Corporation could loan to any single enterprise. We have removed this limitation so that a loan may be made up to any amount within the discretion of the R. F. C. Board.

Third. There has been some discussion here with respect to the change in the security which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may take. The present act does not say that a loan shall be fully and adequately secured; it merely says,

"It shall be adequately secured." The bill which we have before us provides in lieu of that provision that the Board shall have reasonable assurance that the loan will be repaid. Now, I assume if that does anything in addition to the present powers it allows the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take into consideration more than it ever has before the character of the individual, the corporation, or the concern to which the loan is made. In banking we call them "character loans." A man of good character and who has a reputation for paying his bills and meeting his notes when they are due, may get a loan sometimes when a man with security cannot get it because of the question of character. I assume that this change will give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the right to take into consideration the character of the concern to which it makes the loan in addition to the physical security which is provided.

Fourth. We have another provision in this act which is important to all of us outside of the scope of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We provide that loans may be made for the sale of electrical, plumbing, or air-conditioning appliances, or equipment, both urban and rural. I can see in this provision an advantage to my section, and all of us outside of the scope of the Tennessee Valley Authority should be pleased to accept this provision, because it gives all of us, as I understand, some of the benefits which are now given under the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. As a member of the committee I should like to get some information. I should like to know if the provisions relating to industrial loans have been liberalized to any extent in this bill as compared with what they were under the old bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. I classified four advantages under this bill which did not exist under the other; namely, the limitation as to time has been removed; the limitation as to amount has been removed; certain limitations surrounding security have been removed, and we allow financing for the sale of electrical, plumbing, or air-conditioning appliances, both urban and rural.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERGUSON. May I ask a question in connection with the matter just referred to. It is stated "through institutions hereafter established, financing principally the sale of electrical" and so forth. Could that not be just a rediscount agency for the sale of paper that is given to finance the purchase of electrical refrigerators, irons, or anything else?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That would be within the limitation established within the discretion of the board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to make a speech, but as a member of the committee and one of the members who has devoted considerable time during the past 2 weeks to this measure, I felt that perhaps I have some information which would be of help and interest to the Members of the House. I shall spend 2 or 3 minutes making a very brief statement, and then will be glad to devote the remainder of my time to answering such questions as any Member cares to ask.

The committee has reported this bill unanimously. We believe it is a good measure. We believe it is an improvement on the present acts. Members of both parties have worked shoulder to shoulder in order to bring out the best sound measure we could to meet the present situation.

I think if the Membership of the House will refer to the report filed in January by Chairman Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, they will there see disclosed the genius of constructive management and the accomplishment in a sound and effective way of the purposes of the act. I think that detailed report is a more eloquent tribute to the work that has been done by the Corporation than any statement which I, or any other Member, could make.

The members of the committee have so far adequately covered many sections of this bill, but for one reason or another there has been no mention whatever made of section 5 (c), which to my mind is, perhaps, the most important section in the bill, in that it attacks or undertakes to attack the serious mortgage situation in America.

It is hoped that, through the powers conferred under section 5 (c), the Corporation will be able to promote and revive a normal mortgage market for real-estate mortgages. We know that one of the biggest problems facing our country today in its effort to regain its equilibrium and bring about recovery is the question of real-estate mortgages. There are, perhaps, $30,000,000,000 of unliquidated mortgages today in the urban field alone, a large portion of which are in distress. Under this section the Corporation will have the power to purchase nonassessable stock in mortgage companies, trust companies, and savings-and-loan institutions. This is a departure from the present act in that you are authorizing the Corporation to subscribe to common stock in order to provide capital with which to finance these mortgages.

Under title III of the Federal Housing Act, a plan was outlined to permit the setting up of national mortgage associations. Seven months have elapsed and not a single one of those corporations has been set up. Even if they had been set up under the provisions of that act, those corporations would have had authority to buy and sell mortgages and not to lend on mortgages.

We think there is great need for this particular provision, and, in my judgment, it has more far-reaching, beneficial potentialities than any other section in the bill. Few people seem to realize the desperate situation aimed to be rectified by this provision.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Does my distinguished colleague from North Carolina know of any agency that has been established by the Seventy-second or Seventy-third Congress or any agency in the civilized world that has done more to rehabilitate our country than the magnificent work of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is certainly a true statement. In addition to this particular section, there is one other section which, I think, holds wonderful potentialities for good.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield before going on to another section?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman is speaking of section 5 (c). I admit that I have not had a chance to study the bill and, of course, not being a member of the committee, I am not familiar with all the phases of the measure, but I notice in line 24, of page 14, a provision to the effect that these loans may be made to corporations, associations, or persons organized for the reorganization of real-estate properties, only upon the recommendation of the Securities and Exchange Commission and approval of the plan of reorganization proposed by such Corporation.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is an additional power conferred upon the Corporation and has no reference whatever to the language preceding it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not referring to the additional power, but I am asking the gentleman if he thinks it is necessary, and does the committee think it necessary, to bring the Securities and Exchange Commission into this picture at all.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I will state frankly to the gentleman that some members of the committee doubted the wisdom of doing it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And may I make this observation—and I think I am correct—the Securities and Exchange Commission is charged with the duty, under the law passed by the last Congress, to look into the eligibility for listing of the stocks and other securities of corporations now in existence or to be formed in the future and give its permission for the listing of them on the stock exchanges of the country. I assume that none of these corporations or associations or persons organized for the reorganization of real-estate properties, or scarcely any of them, will be corporations seeking to list their securities on stock exchanges.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And you are bringing the Securities and Exchange Commission into a field of investigation which I think it was not intended to fill, and I am afraid you will delay and add a lot of red tape.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I am afraid I could not offer any intelligence to the statement just made by the gentleman, but I will say that this particular amendment was the result of the work which has been done by the committee of the House investigating the real-estate bond situation in America. It is in need of vigorous governmental attention and investigation, in my opinion.

It was thought by the committee that if the R. F. C. should first be required to receive the approval of the plan it would, in a measure, protect not only the bondholders but the equity owners, and that the funds so disbursed through the R. F. C. would not be absorbed alone in taxes, attorney and receiver expenses, and other court costs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, I can see the necessity of going into the matter in each case very, very thoroughly, but I am willing to trust the R. F. C. to do this, and not bring another agency of the Government into the field, which I am afraid will result in delay and more red tape.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that I am perfectly willing to leave the final authority with respect to making any loan to the officials of the R. F. C., though I confess that it has not been as liberal in its lending to small industries and businesses as I thought it ought to be. I think the amendment which I offered in the committee liberalizing section 58 will produce the results desired.

The other important section is the one referred to by my good friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], section 10, which broadens the lending scope and powers of the R. F. C. so as to permit loans to companies engaged in financing electrical appliances.

If I am able to see down the road a little bit, that section is put in there as a companion measure to the administration's great national rural electrification program. It will enable the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in addition to the capital it is loaning to the Electric Home and Farm Authority, to make loans to other companies engaged in the sale of these appliances, with the idea and with the hope that the grip that a few companies in America have had in the sale of these appliances will be broken and that the people throughout the United States will be able to buy at a fair price those things that relieve the family of drudgery and toil and are conducive to a better life.

The ends accomplished as a result of the set-up of the Electric Home and Farm Authority has been wonderful, and it is the hope and belief of our committee that with the additional power the people throughout every section of America will get the benefit of not only cheaper power rates but the appliances absolutely essential to receive the energy. [Applause.] One without the other would mean nothing.

I want to digress a moment, if I may, because I think in considering the purpose of this new section it is appropriate to pay a tribute to a North Carolinian who has had as much to do with shaping the effective policy of the Federal Power Commission in determining an honest price for electricity as perhaps any other individual in this country, and whose splendid efforts and constructive ability will eventually result in making power an article of standard use in America. [Applause.] I refer to the Honorable Frank R. McNinth, a trusted adviser of President Roosevelt. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 1 minute in order to make an announcement.

The CHAIRMAN. We are in general debate, and that is not in order at the present time.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Does the lady from Indiana wish to make an announcement?

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. I do.

Mr. FISH. I yield the lady 1 minute.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take the floor at this time and make a vigorous protest against the autocratic and bureaucratic attitude which the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Joseph B. Eastman, and the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. George B. McGinty, have taken in connection with the release of the Eastman report on transportation.

As transportation, both rail and water, is a subject of great importance to my district, I learned of the existence of this report which was to be made to the President and to the Congress. I made a formal request for an advance copy of this report, under the seal of congressional secrecy. Several of my colleagues also made such a request. I was advised that the report was not in existence, notwithstanding the fact that I know positively that it is in existence.

I was advised today that the newspapers have been given copies of this Eastman report of 412 pages. I have been refused an advance copy of this Eastman report by Mr. Eastman personally, notwithstanding the fact that I had already filed for an advance release of this publication.

I protest against this autocratic and bureaucratic manner of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Members of Congress are the elected representatives of the people. If we are not to have the reports under the seal of confidence from the heads of bureaus or various departments of the Government, then we are hampered in the performance of obligations to the people.

I hereby demand an explanation from the Interstate Commerce Commission as to why Members of Congress have been refused advance copies of this report, while newspapers have been given the report. I approve of giving the newspapers these reports, but I also believe that Members of Congress, the elected representatives of the people, should also receive them, especially when they are directly interested and have made repeated requests for same.

This should be a subject of investigation, as to the extent that bureaucracy controls the affairs of the people.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, my good friend and colleague from New York, an able and distinguished Member of the House, saw fit to inject some political views into the discussion of this bill which was reported unanimously by the committee. I would remind the Democratic side that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act was recommended by President Hoover as the means to preserve the credit of the country, to stabilize our industry, and to encourage private industry so that it might provide jobs for American wage earners. I submit that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by making loans to the banks, railroads, insurance companies, and financial institutions on security, has accomplished more than all the experiments, panaceas, and unsound measures of the "brain trust" combined to stabilize industry as far as it was possible in this depression.

This Republican recommendation to the Congress at that time, when the banks were failing, preserved the credit of the United States and saved the railroads, the insurance companies, the private banks, and industry generally from failure. It preserved the credit of the Nation, and all other credit, which would have been paralyzed. That was a Republican recommendation based on loans to industry on adequate security, and 51 percent of the loans have already been repaid.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield in the short time I have.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. I yield to my colleague [Mr. SISSON]. I was paying the gentleman a high compliment and I hope the gentleman heard me.

Mr. SISSON. And I want to pay my colleague from New York a high compliment, if possible, in return and say that I should have said, if I did not say, that I regard the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as perhaps the greatest constructive act of the Hoover administration.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I should like to yield, but my time is limited. I yield to the chairman of my committee.

Mr. STEAGALL. In order to keep the record straight, there was not a word about loans to industry in the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act.

Mr. FISH. I shall take that up, and I am glad the gentleman raised that issue. Also, for the sake of the record, I want to point out that Mr. Jesse Jones, of Texas, was appointed to the R. F. C. Board by a Republican President. I also want to join in the tributes paid to Mr. Jones as a man of high character and ability. He has carried out the intent and purpose of the law and has efficiently administered the R. F. C., except possibly in one instance, and that is the instance raised by the chairman of the committee. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN] and myself introduced on the same day an identical bill, after working on it for months, to provide loans for industry. We did everything in our power to bring about meetings of the Committee on Banking and Currency in order to enact legislation that would provide loans for private industry. I believe most Members of the House agree that the most desirable act at the present time is to encourage private industry and make loans available for private industry that can give reasonable assurance of paying the loans back, in order to turn the factory wheels and employ American labor. That is the biggest issue before the country. If I were to continue my political reflections and observations further, I would call attention to the fact that there are a million and a half more unemployed today than there were a year ago, and one of the reasons for that is that the Congress has done nothing to help private industry by making loans available or at least if the Congress has, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has failed to carry out the wishes and purpose and intent of the Congress. We appropriated $300,000,000, which was allotted to the R. F. C., for the purpose of making loans to private industry on adequate security. These loans would be paid back, and the funds would be used again. What happened? I think it is a justifiable criticism of the R. F. C. to say that only $7,000,000 out of the $300,000,000 was actually loaned, and that only $37,000,000 was authorized to be loaned. The R. F. C. will possibly come back and claim that the provision about loans was too drastic. The R. F. C. knew the purpose and intent of Congress. It knew that we wanted these loans made and this capital to go into private industry, and the reasons back of it, and it failed to help in accomplishing that purpose. Therefore, the Banking and Currency Committee has to amend the law and change "adequate security" into "reasonable security" and liberalize it to that extent which we all favor. I do not see that the Congress has accomplished very much by the action it took last year. All that has been done is to loan $7,000,000 to private industry. If I had my way, I would say that $300,000,000 is not sufficient. I should like to see a billion dollars, if reasonable assurance of repayment could be made, loaned to private industry in order to help private industry to get on its feet and employ American wage earners.

The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] has amended the bill to include the authorization for loans to gold and silver mining operations and development. I suggest an amendment to include tin. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has been, under authorization of Congress, investigating the tin situation for the last 6 months. There is a foreign tin monopoly, and we in this country are the greatest consumers of tin. It appears that there are certain tin deposits in North and South Carolina and Alabama and I am told in some of the Western States. The purpose of my proposed amendment to include tin with gold and silver, would make it possible to conduct a proper investigation and find the facts by an adequate development of the tin deposits in the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is with a great deal of unanimity on the part of the whole House that we approve almost entirely what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has done. However, we know that there is much for that organization further to do. We knew it last year, and we authorized $300,000,000 to be loaned to private industry. I understand $35,000,000 has been allocated, but only $7,000,000 loaned. I was responsible on the floor last year for having a very little word put into the bill we passed wherein the people could go either to the Federal Reserve "or" to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Many of us would like to know how many of our people have been subjected to first going to their own bank, then to the Federal Reserve bank, and then finally to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, only to be told when they finally arrived there that it must appear to be rather a poor loan. We tried our best to rescue our people from that sort of treatment.

In the hearings, I questioned regarding this matter and I learned that generally they were subjected to such procedure, although not always the case.

Now, we have done something in this bill that we hope will make it a little easier to obtain loans to industry. The two key words in section 5 (d) last year were that the loan should be adequately secured and the company should be solvent. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has done very well, indeed, in interpreting the word "solvent" to mean solvent even after the money was loaned, but the term "adequate security" seems to have been the stumbling block. I ask you to read those words that we have carefully injected into this bill, and which the officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation say will help. We still use the word "security." They still must take security that will reasonably assure repayment.

Now, we all know that we have a bank in our own community which understands the problems of that community and is in sympathy with local conditions. There are 12 Federal Reserve districts and those Reserve banks look carefully after those districts. We should stand rather a better chance, do we not, of getting a loan from one of those local or district banks than if we have to come to some central authority here? This would usually be the case under ordinary conditions. What I fear and what so many other people fear today is that if we must go to a central bank located in Washington, where the rules and regulations are made, that the control of that institution may be prejudiced toward a certain locality or a certain industry. I pay high tribute to the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, although I did not know him personally until very recently. He may have been a little annoyed at my questioning in the committee, although I meant to be friendly. But there is no word in this law that would prevent the rules and regulations made by the head of that institution discriminating against a certain locality or a certain industry. I am speaking plainly, because we must speak plainly, and I am accustomed to, as you well know. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is one instrumentality that can save the textile industry of the United States, in all probability. We wish to be sure that they are sympathetic, not only with the textile industry of the South but with the textile industry of New England. We are not really suspicious, but too many people in this House have said to me, "Is not the New England textile industry a declining industry; and can we really save that industry in that locality?"; thereby showing the thought which may exist in the minds of some people. When we can go to banks in our own community, we feel sure of relief if it can be granted. If we must come to Washington, we want to know that the R. F. C. officials are sympathetic with the entire country and entirely unprejudiced. May I say I believe they are unprejudiced, and I will try to continue to believe it.

However, under this language in this bill, they still must have security. Formerly they had to have adequate security, "adequate" supposedly meaning "equal thereto." They must take something from you equal in value to what they loan. As bankers, however, they scan the management who carry on the industry, and then might say, "If those are the kind of men who are going to run it, we will not loan any money." Just so long as that word "security" remains in this act they do not have even the authority of a Federal Reserve bank. A Federal Reserve bank can take a corporate note, and here we demand more, even though we want them to be more liberal. The R. F. C. must continue to demand security. They cannot, under this language, take a corporate note. They have allocated a billion dollars to buy cotton and tobacco and it bothers me to know that they have only used $322,000,000 and still obligated for so great an allocation. Their assets disclose they have only about $4,000,000 in cash on hand. They have a borrowing capacity of $800,000,000, and we took $500,000,000 the other day away from that. Here we want $300,000,000 for industry alone. Now, the probable amounts available ought to be fully explained during the debate. Will repayments come in fast enough to take care of their commitments and authorize them to do what we want them to do under this act? It would seem to be an emphatic "no." Their investment in capital issues, amounting to more than a billion dollars, in banks, will be slow in repayment; that the really quick assets or repayments have largely come in; that they have collected 51 percent of what they loaned. It looks to me as though there will be a great shortage of funds. I gathered this opinion from the officers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation who came before our committee. They claimed they wanted to do only what Congress wanted them to do. They did not like to ask for more power; they did not like to ask for more money; but in their report they suggest that their borrowing power would not be enough if we took that $500,000,000 away as we did last week. Under the industrial paragraph in which we are interested more than any other, we still have the limitation of $300,000,000. If industry today should get what it wanted, if plants worth a million or two million dollars need to borrow $500,000, or more, how far will $300,000,000 go to lift the country out of its present condition?

I felt, Mr. Chairman, in the committee that perhaps I would appear too liberal. It is not pleasant to read a scorching editorial such as appeared in the Washington Post that our committee wanted the R. F. C. to embark upon a wasteful spending or lending program.

I have a list of the assets and liabilities of the R. F. C. Read it. What are they? Among them we have given to Harry Hopkins over $1,000,000,000. It is carried on their books as an asset. How has that money been spent? Much has been given away to hundreds of municipalities amply able to have taken care of their own relief. We expect the R. F. C. to be careful but reasonable and carry out the intent of the Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said with regard to the small amount of money the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned to industry. The actual amount disbursed, we are told, is $6,000,000, and the amount allocated is about $34,000,000. I wonder how many of the Members who have been complaining about this have had an experience similar to the experience I had with regard to the R. F. C. branch in Los Angeles. Many applications for loans were brought to them. After they looked them over they made suggestions to the borrowers of such a helpful character as to enable them to get the money from their local banks. To that extent they relieved their financial necessity and got private money back into the regular channels of trade.

Another provision which interests me mightily is the provision liberalizing loans to the mining industry. This is Nation-wide in its scope. It applies equally to the West, East, and South. There are mining properties in the Carolinas, Virginia, Georgia, and all through the South. We in the West have the most of them, it is true; 12 of our Western States are interested. By thus liberalizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act you will probably put to work in the western and southern areas anywhere from 12,000 to 25,000 men within the next year. To date $3,000,000 has been loaned on mining security, and this $3,000,000 has put to work over 2,500 men; and the money has been only partially paid out. As it is paid out and as these mining properties are developed, more men are going to work every day; so in adopting this provision you will provide for an industry that will actually put thousands of men to work at a very early date.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point, section 14, pages 20 and 21, of the bill?

Mr. FORD of California. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I am somewhat interested in this section. It seems to be confined in its language to the mining of ores, having reference particularly to gold and silver.

Mr. FORD of California. Yes.

Mr. MAY. That would leave out of consideration entirely persons or corporations engaged in the mining of coal or the transportation and mining of gas and oil?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes; it does.

Mr. MAY. I think it ought to be enlarged and extended so as to include minerals and oils. I think an amendment to meet this objection should be inserted immediately after the word "smelting", appearing in line 24, on page 20.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further.

Mr. Chairman, another factor in this measure that appeals to me very strongly is the taking off of the date we had in the old law, a provision to the effect that unless an organization had been going since 1934 it could not get a loan. The liberalizing of this feature is going to do a great deal in the industrial field; and particularly am I thinking of one industry which at the present time affects the South especially, the slash pine of the South. They have apparently found a process by which slash pine, of which there are immense stands and for which but little use has been found heretofore, can be used for the manufacture of paper and rayon. It is proposed to start these operations through a loan of this character if it can be obtained; and this, I presume, would, in addition to creating employment, add literally hundreds of millions of dollars to wealth of the United States and to that particular section.

It is constructive steps of this character that we have been able to achieve through the liberalization of the lending process of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and I personally have so much confidence in Chairman Jones and in his Board that I am willing to liberalize the act to any extent and give them almost any amount of latitude in the handling of industrial and other loans that tend to develop industry and put men to work in the United States, for I believe that is what they want to do, and I know it is what Congress wants to do.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am for the legislation included in this bill. Coming as I do from one of the largest industrial districts in the United States, I am naturally keenly interested in the provision for industrial loans. I hope the liberalization which the committee says is in the bill will prove to be a fact and it will be of some benefit to the industries of this country. My past experience has been the loans to industry have been a mirage which has lured many of the small business men of the country to destruction. Elaborate and detailed reports are required of those who seek loans, which are expensive and take a long time to assemble. When they are completed, invariably the applicant is informed, if he succeeds in proving the merit of his request, that if other claims against the industry are subordinated to that of the Government he may have his loan. The Members of this House appreciate in only few instances can this be brought about, and this is one of the reasons why you find so few loans made and so few applications. I believe we are now discussing one of the most vital problems in connection with recovery. We may give the people relief, and, of course, it is necessary in order to tide over the period of depression, but there can be no recovery in this country until we stimulate industry and put people to work at real wages. I hope this will be materially aided in this present bill, and the long delays in considering applications will be overcome.

I want to point out one instance in my own district where a great contribution could be made to recovery, and I believe would eventually result in saving the country some money. A few weeks ago one of the greatest textile establishments in Massachusetts—in fact, in New England and the country—employing some 3,200 people closed its doors. It was an industry that had been for many years operated profitably, but in the last 3 or 4 years lost considerable money.

I believe if the Government would make a substantial loan to a concern of this character it would resume operations and provide employment for hundreds of people, and take them off the relief rolls. We would do more good for these people in putting them to work than in giving a relief contribution. When we lend money to industry there is a reasonable expectation the money will be returned. In my section of the country at least, you will find there is always considerable security back of the loan. It may be the collateral is slow moving just now, but it is nevertheless real, substantial collateral.

I recall another instance of a man who had a small enterprise. He bought a building, probably worth $25,000, and due to the depression secured it for $10,000. He had a $4,000 mortgage upon the place, and applied to the Government for a two- or three-thousand-dollar loan so the business might continue. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation said they would probably make the loan if the applicant could get the man who held the mortgage to subordinate his claim to the Government. Of course, that was impossible. You would not do it if you held the mortgage. The result is the concern was refused the money and the little enterprise, employing a number of people, is in peril.

We are spending billions of dollars for relief, and I repeat it is necessary to spend this money. I am unqualifiedly for all the necessary relief, but let us take a reasonable risk, a reasonable chance to make these various industries again prosperous, so that our relief bill can be reduced. In my opinion, we can make no greater contribution to recovery than to make it possible for men and women to get jobs in mills and factories at wages which will make it possible for the workers to buy the products of the southern and western farms. I believe it is good business sense to try and get the people to work in their normal occupations; and that even if we lost some of the loans, that would be a saving to the Treasury by reducing relief demands.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that they have broadened the powers in reference to lending money?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am afraid not, but I hope they have, because we are never going to get out of this depression as long as the industrial enterprises of the country are permitted to languish. The quicker we make up our minds to that fact the quicker we will get back to prosperity.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

THE R. F. C.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the best bills that the Banking and Currency Committee has brought out. If it is administered as well as we believe its provisions are, it will bring great relief. When the R. F. C. Act was originally enacted in 1932 it only applied to banks, railroads, and insurance companies. There was an effort made to help the country by pouring money in at the top. The little man was entirely ignored. In the last 2 years an effort has been made to convert the Reconstruction Finance Corporation into an institution that will help the people generally all over the Nation, and one of the best steps in this direction was the provision permitting direct loans to industry.

DIRECT LOANS TO INDUSTRY

Under the amendment permitting direct loans there was the requirement of "full and adequate security." For this reason many people who really had good, going business institutions could not qualify. I want to commend this committee for bringing in a bill that qualifies the provision which will enable other considerations than just Government bonds and just cold securities of different kinds to be acceptable. In this case any security will be acceptable where there is reasonable assurance that there will be repayment of the loan.

JANUARY 1, 1934, PROVISION ELIMINATED

Another provision of the bill I am interested in is the one permitting loans to be made to industries commencing operation after January 1, 1934. Under the existing law an industry could not get its application considered if it had commenced business after January 1, 1934. This takes off the limit.

TEN-YEAR LOANS INSTEAD OF FIVE

There is another provision which is very helpful and constructive, and that is the one which permits 10-year loans instead of 5-year loans. There is another one involving rural electrification, which is also important.

CONSOLIDATION OF R. F. C. AND FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Mr. Chairman, I am preparing, and I hope to introduce in the House in a few days, a bill which I know we cannot get adopted in a few weeks or a few months, but I think eventually we will get it or something similar adopted. This bill provides that the Government take over the Federal Reserve Banking System by paying the $140,000,000 invested by the banks in the System to those banks, the Government taking over the Federal Reserve System, and then, after the Government has taken over the entire System of 12 banks, the R. F. C. and Federal Reserve Banking System to be consolidated and coordinated so as to abolish the present Federal Reserve Board and substitute therefor the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There will be no member banks. Loans will be permitted to all banks and to industry. The profits will go to the Government instead of to a few bankers. The Government's credit will be used in the interest of the people. It will break the grip of the Money Trust and be a long step in the right direction.

LOANS FOR ONE-EIGHTH OF 1 PERCENT INTEREST

In addition to this, I expect that a provision will be inserted to permit the Government's credit to be used for the benefit of cities, counties, and States for public improvements and educational purposes for an interest rate as low as one-eighth of 1 percent, which will be practically at cost. I see no reason why the Government should pay interest on its own obligations; neither do I see any reason why our Government should require cities, counties, and States to pay interest on obligations that are intended solely for public improvements and educational purposes. If this can be done without detriment to a sound monetary system—and it can—I believe the country will adopt it. If we succeed in making it plain that it can be done, I believe we have a chance of getting it adopted.

Again I want to commend the committee for this very fine piece of legislation and I hope it will pass unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, what I had intended saying in regard to this bill has already been said several times, and for once I am pleased to know that the American Congress seems to be practically unanimous in its praise and general approval of the work that has been done by Mr. Jones and his organization in the R. F. C. I have been interested in this work from the very beginning, and I am especially interested at this time in that provision of the bill that is supposed to liberalize and broaden the powers of the Corporation with respect to loans to industry.

As I read the pending provision, it says "reasonable security." I do not see how you could go very much further, so far as enacting a law or expressing yourself is concerned, than to ask this Corporation to get "reasonable security." Nevertheless, we are faced with a condition here, and as I have listened to the various Members express themselves here today, I think the feeling of the Congress is that the R. F. C. should be very liberal in construing "reasonable security."

We all know that industry today cannot borrow money from the banks. I feel it would be a great deal better for this Government to lend $10,000 to a small industry in a community over here in Maryland, for instance, that would keep 10 or 15 or 20 or 25 men employed for a year, and keep them off the relief roll with reasonable expectation of getting part or all of it back, than to apply that same amount of money to some of these other experiments that are being carried on by the Government at the present time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest that in voting for this bill, and for that particular provision, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will also have in mind the past record of the applicant in paying loans previously incurred by him in connection with what is reasonable security? In other words, the applicant's record with his bank or with any other business connection he may have had in the past in respect of obtaining loans and the payment thereof should be considered by the R. F. C.

Mr. SNELL. I am in entire accord with the statement of my friend from Massachusetts, and I wish to emphasize the fact that they must be liberal in making these loans.

The administration itself says that in the final analysis we must depend upon industry to take up the slack in unemployment. If this is the crux of the whole situation, we had better take longer chances in encouraging industry to go ahead and do this work and aid in the relief of the unemployed than to go to some of the other experiments we are trying at the present time. To me, this is very important, and I think there is an opportunity here to do some very good work, and I expect, under the expressed will of Congress, the R. F. C. will do it.

Personally, I should prefer to have $500,000,000 or $1,000,000,000 for private industry rather than $300,000,000, as carried in the bill, because this would be definite and would encourage the men who are doing business and who think there is a possibility of getting a loan. If you start up an industry in your community, it revives hope, and it is a great deal better to have 10 men continually employed at a reasonable wage than to have 50 men on the relief rolls.

I feel there is opportunity here to do some good work, and I hope the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will administer the law from the point of view of the Congress along this line. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I think it is rather axiomatic that there are two sources of employment. The one is the pay roll of a political subdivision, and the other is private industry. If one is fortunate enough to be elected a Member of Congress or to secure a position as a mail carrier or a city clerk of some city or find some lucrative position with any other political subdivision, that is one source of employment. All the other, and the largest majority, is private employment.

It seems to me that the only hope of solving unemployment is to encourage the absorption of men into private industry.

That is the reason why there was so much interest in the bill passed by the Seventy-third Congress expanding the functions of the R. F. C., providing $300,000,000 for loans to industry, and $280,000,000 for the same purpose through the Federal Reserve banks.

We went back home with high hopes that it would revive industry in the entire country.

The various branches of this Reconstruction Finance Corporation began to entertain applications. I tried to steer three or four through the office in Chicago, and I fell down in each one. We asked for an investigation. The Treasury sent credit agents out to the seventh Reserve district, which has its center in the city of Chicago. That district comprises the entire States of Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and is the largest Federal Reserve district in the United States. They sent 66 field agents into the district to make exhaustive investigations.

Here are some of the things in Dr. Viner's report, representing the findings of that committee. He says that there exists a genuine unsatisfied demand for credit on the part of solvent borrowers, many of whom could make economically sound use of working capital, but they do not get it either from the banks or from the Federal Reserve or the R. F. C.

Here is what the report says with respect to small business, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]:

> That, so far as small business is concerned, the difficulty in getting bank credit has increased more as compared with a few years ago than is the difficulty in getting trade credit.

And finally the report says that, so far as both the Reserve banks and the R. F. C. are concerned, their activities, insofar as the administration of industrial loans goes, has had a negligible effect upon the general subject of credit.

Dr. Viner, of the Treasury Department, has given us that report. There is the summary of the findings of fact, and then there is a long list of recommendations as to what ought to be done. Having had some experience with some of these applications, I can readily sympathize with the gentleman from Wisconsin who apparently stated to an investigator that one of the reasons they had so much difficulty was because it cost an interminable sum to prepare the report, which is the same for both the Federal Reserve and the R. F. C.

One Wisconsin firm alleged it spent $10,000 in connection with its application. There is page after page of detailed information required, and whether it is furnished to the fiscal agent of the Federal Reserve or to the R. F. C. makes no difference. There is entirely too much detail. Take the firms to whom applications have been sent and most of them throw the applications into the wastebasket. Why? They said it was too formidable to fill out, and after having helped to fill out three of them, I can readily sympathize with those who filled out those applications. Therefore it seems to me that there are many other things that we can liberalize, not only the terminology of the bill that deals with adequacy or reasonability of security but we can go further and strip away some of the prolixity and red tape in the hope of actually getting this money out to industry. Everyone admits it has been a flat failure thus far—$300,000,000 provided, of which $37,000,000 are committed, and only six and one-half million dollars actually paid out; and, after all, it is the money on the line that counts and not the number of commitments or applications.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> That until February 1, 1937, or such earlier date as the President may fix by proclamation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform under law, and the liquidation and winding up of its affairs as provided for by section 13 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, are hereby postponed during the period that the functions of the Corporation are continued pursuant to this act.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: Page 10, line 14, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. Subsection (a) of paragraph 605b, title 15, United States Code, Supplement VI, otherwise known as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act and Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, be and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

"6. To make loans to colleges, universities, and institutions of learning, with interest thereon at not more than 3 percent per annum, to aid in the financing of buildings, structures, and other self-liquidating projects."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will accept this amendment. It will be observed that it is not mandatory on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It merely broadens their power and authority to make loans. I believe it is readily agreed by all of us that when you can erect a building or dig a ditch, you are thereby striking at the very fundamentals of putting people to work. There are 500 standard colleges in America as well as a great many more of preparatory educational institutions, non-State owned, that are solvent, that are badly in need of repairs and of additional buildings or expansion, and the insertion of this language in the bill merely makes it optional or gives the authority to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to those insolvent institutions for self-liquidating projects. If we want to put people to work, I cannot see why that is not a sound and logical amendment to the bill, and I hope the Committee, on consideration, will not object to it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. Does the gentleman limit the amendment to educational institutions?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is the way I have drawn it.

Mr. MEAD. I understand that a great many hospitals, privately owned, are in the same situation.

Mr. WOODRUM. I have no objection to that addition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend my amendment by inserting after the word "to make loans to", the word "hospitals."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WOODRUM: Page 10, line 14, insert a new section:

"SEC. 2. Subsection (a) of paragraph 605b, title 15, United States Code, Supplement VI, otherwise known as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act and Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

"6. To make loans to hospitals, colleges, universities, and institutions of learning, with interest thereon of not more than 3 percent per annum, to aid in the financing of buildings, structures, and other self-liquidating projects."

Mr. WOODRUM. Legislation similar to this has been offered many times before, but usually it has provided authority to make loans for the refinancing of already existing indebtedness. I want to direct attention to the fact that this amendment calls for new construction, and thereby is a direct aid to the President's recovery program; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has authority to do it or not to do it. We do not compel them to do it, but they have the right to do it.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Since the gentleman discussed with me his amendment this morning, I wonder if he has given any thought to the fact that these institutions are eligible under the big work-relief bill which the gentleman ably aided in steering through this House the other day?

Mr. WOODRUM. They might be eligible under that, but the gentleman knows——

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. If the gentleman will pardon me, I also think if he will examine closely section 5 (c) of the present bill, he will see that these institutions could be taken care of through a mortgage company, the common stock of which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will have authority to subscribe.

Mr. WOODRUM. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I am afraid, would not so construe it. I will say that this makes it perfectly plain. It clarifies it and leaves no room for doubt about it. There cannot be any objection to putting it in.

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will yield, there cannot be the slightest doubt about the eligibility of loaning institutions obtaining funds from the Corporation, secured by and to cover loans made for the very purpose contemplated.

Mr. WOODRUM. They have never been able to get one up to the present time.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say that the bill now before us liberalizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act in that regard and gives them much larger loaning power.

Mr. WOODRUM. I will say to the distinguished chairman, whose judgment I rely upon usually in these matters, that I should like to see the House of Representatives put language in here to let the Reconstruction Finance Corporation know that it would like to see these loans made where they are sound, solvent, and self-liquidating. There certainly cannot be any harm in doing it.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. It does not mean only for new construction, but reconstruction as well?

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I am generally in accord with the gentleman's ideas, but is not the gentleman limiting unduly the character of structures that could be erected when he uses the word "self-liquidating", because obviously there are very few buildings that a college would erect that would be self-liquidating.

Mr. WOODRUM. It limits it to dormitories, athletic stadiums, and things of that nature.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does the gentleman think the language should be so limited?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think perhaps there should be some limitation. I think they should be self-liquidating loans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has expired.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. We have had cases in my State in which, for instance, our University of Florida and the Florida State College for Women, I understand, have been trying for many months, in fact, a couple of years, to obtain loans to enlarge their buildings and their educational plant generally. It is obvious that any loan that is made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to a State or a subdivision thereof is a valid loan and will be repaid. I know of no better purpose for which Federal loans could be offered than to institutions of higher learning and to hospitals, as was mentioned by the gentleman from New York, Dr. SIROVICH. A number of our counties and States that are now not able to establish and maintain hospitals would be able, under this amendment, to establish such institutions. I know of a number of counties which are now trying to obtain funds to establish hospitals, as well as cities, which would like to enlarge their hospital facilities. To what more laudable purpose could Government funds be applied than to the relief of the sick of our Nation? After all, many of our local units are not now in a position to finance hospital construction and reconstruction. In my section of the country, at least, practically the only source of credit is the Federal Government. Loaning institutions are not able to offer adequate loans.

I should also like to have the attention of some member of the Banking Committee as to whether or not under the language of the bill loans can be made, upon the passage of this bill, to small industries, small printing and newspaper plants, small business establishments of various kinds? Can they obtain loans under the language of this bill?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes; they can.

Mr. GREEN. I am also deeply interested in whether or not municipalities can obtain loans for waterworks and sewage systems and enlarging electrical plants. I have in mind a town in my district, a small town which was required to vote at public election a bond issue, validate through the courts those bonds, and offer same to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. And, in fact, I do not believe they ever did obtain the loan. There was more redtape, or an equal amount of redtape, than would be required by most prudent bond purchasers of our country. I want to know if this security requirement is liberalized in this bill and if the promissory note of a municipality may be accepted as security for a loan. Is there any member of the Banking and Currency Committee who can give me this information? I think that is very important. Will the R. F. C. be authorized to loan on the promissory note of a municipality for the enlargement or construction of a public utility, such as a municipally owned water plant, sewage plant, or electric-light plant, or will the municipality have to go through the regular bond issuing and validating processes, as has been required heretofore?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Under the language of the bill they can do it.

Mr. GREEN. Then I want to congratulate the Banking and Currency Committee for this liberalization, because when you augment the source of credit for the small-business institutions, for the small enterprises and subdivisions of the Government, then you are hitting at the very heart of recovery.

It is impossible for us to bring about recovery in this country by offering the facilities of recovery to the large institutions only. When you offer them to the small institutions, to the small municipality, to the small voting precincts and districts, whereby bonds are issued for various public improvements—when you carry this source of credit to the local units, then you are offering effective credit and your program will be successful. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it would seem that the Members of the House, at the outset of the debate on amendments which will now follow, shall know something about what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is.

If I remember correctly, the gentleman from Virginia who proposed this amendment is the same gentleman who played a large part in carrying through the House the recent public-works bill which provides almost $5,000,000,000 to be spent ostensibly for public relief. We were told that that was a relief bill. I shall not at the present time go further into the discussion of that highly controversial question, but the point we want to remember is that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not a relief agency in the sense that it is supposed to be in a position to give funds out freely to any group or to any individual who may need the money. That is the purpose of a relief bill, I understand. When people are suffering, when people are starving, they should have some place to which to turn; but that is not the purpose for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized. As I understand it, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized at a time when credit generally in the country had fallen down, and it was the outgrowth of an effort to help the financial institutions of the country and to bolster up the economic structure. It does seem to me that we should not get too far away from the original purpose, and we should not go too far in contributing to this, that, or the other demand or request, high-minded though they may be. We should keep the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose for which it was originally constituted.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Virginia a question. Does the gentleman's amendment provide only for new construction?

Mr. WOODRUM. It provides for the construction of hospitals, educational-institution buildings—self-liquidating projects.

Mr. COCHRAN. New projects?

Mr. WOODRUM. And for reconstruction. I believe it would be broad enough to include remodeling and reconstruction of existing facilities which are self-liquidating.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the word "reconstruction" in the amendment?

Mr. COCHRAN. The word "reconstruction" is not in the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. As I understand it, reconstruction is not provided for.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further.

At the proper place I intend to offer an amendment which is germane to the bill, an amendment which will authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation not to provide additional funds for the construction of more hospitals, institutions of learning, and churches; but to provide funds only for the purpose of saving the hospitals, the churches, and the institutions of learning in this country that need refinancing.

I offered such a bill in the last Congress, and I offered it again in this Congress. The bill is pending before the committee in charge of this bill.

Hospitals and churches in this country, Mr. Chairman, have their backs against the wall. Hospitals are taking in sick people whether they have the money or not. Hospitals are letting the people owe the hospital, hoping when they get well again and get the money they will pay the bill. I would rather loan money to a hospital or to a church than to a lot of railroads that are never going to pay it back. [Applause.] In my city there are a half dozen hospitals far superior to any hospital in the city of Washington. Some of the hospitals were constructed when costs were excessive and are in need of help. They need refinancing with a lower rate of interest. That is what the amendment will do. If this corporation may loan money that it is doubtful whether it will ever be returned to the Government, I say it should loan money to the hospitals and churches of this country in need, with adequate security, who will some day pay back the Government. I hope when the time comes, my amendment will receive the support of the House.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman's amendment provide for the refinancing of churches that are in distress?

Mr. COCHRAN. It does, if they have proper security. It provides that the real estate owned by churches is adequate security for the loan.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman understands that under the provisions of the bill as now drafted, the institutions to which he refers may be financed through a mortgage company. The amount of money that may be loaned for this purpose is unlimited in the present act. In addition to that, under section 5 (c) the Congress is now authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to subscribe to the nonassessable stock of trust companies, mortgage companies, and saving-and-loan associations, the principal business of which is financing real-estate mortgages. If this were not so, I would favor the amendment, I want these worthy institutions taken care of, but it should be done by the present method. The interest rate is the same.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I have had my experience with mortgage associations as well as building and loan associations. They refinance absolutely nothing. Are they refinancing mortgaged homes at the present time?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. There are only a very few mortgage companies that are solvent today, and the purpose of this bill is to help them to solvency.

Mr. COCHRAN. We cannot get banks to lend money. Why wait until mortgage companies become solvent? No one knows when that will be. What I want is the right to refinance at a low rate of interest.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I should like to know if the chairman of the committee is going to allow this amendment to be passed on without opposition.

Mr. STEAGALL. I intend to oppose it.

Mr. GIFFORD. If I had known that was the case, I would not have taken the floor at this moment. But may I call attention to the fact that we could load this bill down with a great many amendments. When we voted $4,000,000,000 for the public-works program, which is a construction program, I am sure we provided unlimited latitude for non-Federal and semi-quasi-public works. If we put this amendment on, it implies that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation ought to do this work. This is a refinancing corporation. It is not a new construction corporation. The whole bill tends to refinancing and recovery. If you begin to add amendments, we shall find that some very embarrassing amendments will be offered, and I yield at this time to see if the chairman would oppose this amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will not adopt this amendment. I am sure every Member of the House is solicitous for the successful operation of all schools and hospitals throughout the country. We are willing to extend relief to these institutions just as far as we can through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

We have had called to our attention the provision of this bill which takes off the limit as to the amount of loans to be made available and which permits the Corporation not alone to lend such institutions, but to replenish the capital stock of institutions engaged in financing real-estate mortgages on real estate. It was thought when we had authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans and subscribe for capital stock of corporations doing this kind of business that we had gone as far as it was practical to go in relieving situations of this kind.

There is a limit to what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can do, unless we are to open up the Treasury without limit and establish an enormous personnel organization in the effort to administer this act. Surely the House is willing to trust the use of the funds voted a few days ago for general-relief purposes and a building program for the purpose of reemployment without at this time opening up the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for loans to schools, hospitals, and churches. If we do that, we might as well pull the bridles off and remove all limitations.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

A division was demanded.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 2.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 40, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I am sure will be acceptable to the Committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: On page 10, line 13, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no officer or employee of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall receive salary at a rate in excess of $10,000 per annum, except that in the case of any position, the salary of which at the date of the enactment of this act is at the rate of $12,500 per annum, such salary may continue at such rate."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is acceptable to the Committee and only clarifies what is generally understood to be existing law and which we thought was the law, but the matter has been called to our attention by the Appropriations Committee and the administration desired that it be made definite.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take much time, but I could not sit here and permit this bill to be passed without expressing my opinion. If I had my way, I would abolish the R. F. C. on February 1, 1935. [Applause.] I know this opinion will not prevail, but I know something about the operation of the R. F. C. It was designed by the bankers to lend money to the railroads, insurance companies, and banking institutions, and for no other purpose.

If you men and women sitting here expect that you are going to get any loans to private industry, I want to say to you now that you are not going to get them, and I should be willing to bet you are not going to get them. The bankers who are in charge of this institution are not going to lend money to private industry because they do not want to lend money to private industry. I am willing to stake my reputation as a prophet upon this statement.

They have offered a little bait in this amendment, whereby they are going to permit you fellows from the West to mine gold and silver, and they are going to lend you $10,000 to go out and do a little prospecting. I think that is about the silliest thing I have ever heard, and do you know why they are doing this? They were not so sure you were going to pass this bill and extend the life of the R. F. C. They thought by a little bait, telling you how they were going to let you mine gold and silver out West, you might support the proposition.

I simply want to call your attention to the fact that you are not going to accomplish what we want to do, which is to extend credit to industry. Why do they not tell you that the Department of Commerce has made a survey of the credit situation in this country and the recommendations say that the R. F. C. ought to be abolished and that we ought to establish another credit institution? Why do they not tell you this? No; they do not want you to know it. This institution ought to be abolished, and I simply wanted to call your attention to the facts and to express my own opinion.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I agree with the gentleman to the extent that when the R. F. C. had control of housing loans they did nothing. I also believe the R. F. C. has no sympathy whatsoever with making loans to industry. I believe the people at the head of the R. F. C. have no intention of making loans to industry. It is not a question of the principle; it is a question of the people who are now administering the R. F. C.

Mr. LAMNECK. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Let me give you a little personal experience. I went down there with the application of a firm. It had been presented for a long time. Their assets were $1,800,000. They had a statement that could have secured a loan in any bank in the universe if the banks had been lending money. They went there and said, "We want a loan", and Jones said, "Why do you not get the loan from your bank?" The answer was, "The banks will not lend any money." Then Mr. Jones said, "I will tell you what we will do. We will lend you $300,000 provided all the stockholders in the company sign a note and provided you assign your accounts receivable to us and provided you give us a mortgage on your plant and equipment for $600,000." I should hate to tell you what the president told him, but he told him plenty, and then said, "If I cannot get a loan under any other circumstances than that, you can keep your money."

Let me warn you that you are not going to get loans for industry under this bill, and do not forget it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. You folks are in power; why do you not abolish the personnel of the R. F. C.? If you recognize the soundness of the principle of the institution, why do you not get new personnel to direct its operations?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman from Ohio know that with all of their boasted lending they have lent to only 10,589 separate borrowers, aggregating over $5,000,000,000? This is service to only a few of the people and to a few of the special-privilege class of this country.

Mr. LAMNECK. I know that we provided in the bill $300,000,000 of capital, and I know they only loaned $6,000,000; and if that is lending to industry, then I do not know anything about the matter.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman understands that the R. F. C. has aided more than 25,000,000 depositors of closed banks, does he not?

Mr. LAMNECK. That may be; I am not disputing that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I want to tell the distinguished gentleman from Ohio that my experiences with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have uniformly been the very reverse. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation members have been very amiable, gracious, courteous, and hospitable to me and have helped in every conceivable way those that have come before them from the congressional district that I represent. I desire at this time to pay the tribute of my homage and respect for their magnificent cooperation with the merchants and business men of the Fourteenth Congressional District that sought their cooperation and secured their deserving financial assistance.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

I want to say that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation does not deserve the disparagement offered by the gentleman from Ohio. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH]. My experience has been contrary to that of the gentleman from Ohio. I have had favorable consideration given applicants who applied to the R. F. C. for loans. I have received most courteous treatment from the R. F. C. and its officials. Numerous of the applications I was interested in were denied, notwithstanding.

You must remember that Congress put the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in a strait-jacket and did not give it the liberality in making loans that was really required. Now we have changed and instead of requiring adequate security in providing loans, loans can be made with a "reasonable assurance" for the repayment within the time specified. With that liberality it will be able to make more liberal loans and to that extent satisfy the caustic critics here this afternoon.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is the gentleman in favor of making loans on inadequate security?

Mr. CELLER. I am not, but I believe with this amendment in this language "reasonable assurance" you will have a different story to tell, and I am quite sure your constituents entitled to loans will get their loans under this new language.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. I just want to call attention to the fact that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has authorized loans of $1,045,000,000 for the relief of depositors in closed banks. In the last 6 months they have loaned $252,000,000 and distributed $241,000,000 for relief of depositors in closed banks.

Mr. CELLER. I say that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has done a fine job. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does not the gentleman think it is fair in his splendid statement to let the House know that a billion dollars has been transferred for the relief of borrowers, and more than half a billion to aid the marketing of products like cotton, corn, and other articles?

Mr. CELLER. I agree with the gentleman. I say also that the Chairman of the R. F. C. has done a splendid work as Chairman, and so have the other members of that Corporation. They are entitled to great praise.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman; and may I call attention to the fact that they must administer the law in accordance with the law which Congress provided—a full and adequate security? If they did not take full and adequate security, then they would be subject to investigation.

Mr. CELLER. And those gentlemen who are criticizing would be the first to complain if losses would result that they made loans without proper security.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Many instances have come to my attention where, in the enforcement of securities which are adequate, where there has been no fault, suit has been threatened to the injury of the debtor. Will these liberalized rules permit some liberality in that regard?

Mr. CELLER. I am quite sure they will, and if the gentleman goes to Mr. Stanley Reed, the General Counsel, or to Mr. James Alley, his able assistant, or to Mr. Jones or his colleague, I am sure that he will get the redress that he is entitled to. Mr. Reed as General Counsel is a splendid gentleman, a wise and sagacious lawyer, and a hard worker. He never lends a deaf ear to any reasonable plea.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Has the gentleman had any instance of any industry in his own district, as I have had, going to the R. F. C. with decent and proper security and being stalled around for a couple of months and then had said to them, "We regret we cannot do it, because your bank will do it for you"?

Mr. CELLER. I have had no such experience as that.

Mr. CONNERY. I have. They have not done a thing for the textiles or for shoes or leather or anybody else that was looking for aid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. The New York agency offered to loan a concern in my district $50,000, a shoe-manufacturing concern, which very likely buys leather from the gentleman's constituents. The loan came down to Washington, and the R. F. C. said that the company was entitled, not to $50,000, but to $100,000, on one condition, that the New York banks would loan 40 percent of that amount, namely, that the New York banks would put up $40,000 of the $100,000 and the R. F. C. would take $60,000 and subordinate the $60,000 to the $40,000, and the banks refused to cooperate.

Mr. CONNERY. In other words, if they play with the right bank they would get it.

Mr. CELLER. But in this instance they did not get it, because the banks refused to go into the loan at all. But the R. F. C. did not forsake the company. It finally reapproved the original loan for $50,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have been talking particularly about loans to industry. Although we pressed for 2 years to put through that provision and we passed the law last June, only a comparatively few dollars have been loaned. Does the gentleman know of any case of a loan to industry that went through in less than 6 months?

Mr. CELLER. Yes; I have one in my own district that went through in 2 months, and I say to the gentleman it is not fair to say that only $7,000,000 have been loaned. Forty million dollars has been authorized, and the money is there for the borrowers when they want it, although to date the companies may have only drawn 7 million or so on their credit of 40 million.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Forty million dollars out of what—the hundreds of millions of dollars that we authorized?

Mr. CELLER. I admit that if we had been more liberal in the wording of the original bill, or in the amendment last year, there would have been more money loaned, and I am sure that more money will be loaned under this amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is a question of administration.

Mr. CELLER. I disagree with the gentleman. The R. F. C. administers as best it can under the rules we lay down for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Except as provided in section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended by section 10 hereof, and in section 9 of "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes", approved June 19, 1934, no funds shall be disbursed on any commitment or agreement hereafter made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make a loan or advance, subscribe for stock, or purchase capital notes or debentures, after the expiration of 1 year from the date of such commitment or agreement; but within the period of such 1-year limitation no provision of law terminating any of the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall be construed to prohibit disbursement of funds on commitments or agreements to make loans or advances, subscribe for preferred stock, or purchase capital notes or debentures.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, disbursement may be made at any time prior to January 31, 1936, on any commitment or agreement heretofore made by the Corporation to make a loan or advance, subscribe for preferred stock, or purchase capital notes or debentures.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope the chairman of the committee will give the fullest latitude to the discussion of this important question of loans to private industry. I believe every Member on both sides is interested personally in his own district and in the welfare of the whole country. That the R. F. C. has failed must be evident to everyone—failed lamentably to carry out the purpose and intent of Congress to make loans available to private industry, but we cannot shirk our own responsibility. We wrote into the law a provision that was too harsh, demanding adequate security. The trouble is, however, as my colleague from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] says, that the personnel in the R. F. C. lean over backward. They look at these loans with a glassy eye or with two glassy eyes. Perhaps the gentleman from New York may be right, that they do not even want to make the loans. But we have the responsibility as well, because we wrote that provision into the law—adequate security, and these legalistic minds in the R. F. C. lean over backward to find out whether there is full and adequate security. Of course, when they insist on carrying out the limitation to the fullest extent, they made practically no loans. What we tried to do has been an utter failure. We are now trying to remedy that situation by amending the law to read "reasonable assurances of repayment." That was the idea all the time—to liberalize the law. I believe this will liberalize the law. I believe these legalistic experts who have not been doing anything will wake up to the fact and understand in plain language that we want $300,000,000 to go into private industry on a reasonable basis to promote employment. If any Member does not think that that is enough, if that provision is not liberalized enough, this is the time to act and liberalize it further. I, however, believe it is sufficient; but let us have ample time to discuss this issue now and not just railroad it through and then afterward blame the R. F. C. or somebody else for failure to make loans to industry.

It is up to Congress to amend the law or change the law so that it will mean exactly what you want it to mean.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COX. The gentleman, I am sure, would not be willing to be more liberal in the loaning of his Government's money than in the loaning of his own money. Does he not think that the language in the original act properly safeguarded against loss?

Mr. FISH. I can only answer this way, that I believe in the amendment, "reasonable assurances of repayment." I think that is sufficient. I think that will carry out the desire of Congress. I can give no guaranty, but that is my opinion. It is certainly the desire and wish of the Congress, and the employees in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation ought to know it. But let us not confine our criticism to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We authorized the Federal Reserve banks to make the same kind of loans, identically the same kind of loans, and we provided $137,000,000 for that purpose. They were to take $137,000,000 in addition out of their reserves. They, too, have failed. They have only made loans up to $14,000,000. They have done exactly what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation did. They insisted on the fullest kind of collateral with the result that practically no loans are being made.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Now what about the adequacy of the security of General Dawes? What is the condition of that loan today? Can the gentleman tell me that?

Mr. FISH. That has already been discussed, and I think the gentleman also wants to have these loans made to private industry, and I do not want to have a red herring brought in here to change the issue. The issue is: "Are we going to legislate so that private industry will get these loans or not?" The gentleman is not helping the situation at all.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment. I will say for the benefit of the record that in my State——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expired.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. In the State of Texas we have received very little benefit from these direct loans to industry. In fact, the monthly statements of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which I have in my office, show that very few loans of this kind have been made in our section. To my knowledge, numerous applications have been made, and not one single cent has gone into my district. I am for stopping the whole thing.

Mr. FISH. Well, that is the reason, because the law said "adequate security." Now, we make it read "reasonable assurances of repayment." Let us serve notice upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve banks that we want action and not excuses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I am pleased that I am able to agree on one proposition with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], namely, that the Federal Reserve is just as guilty as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in refusing to aid industry. But the fault is not ours. If President Hoover had not vetoed the bill which we originally passed, I feel that all these amendments that have been adopted in the last 2 years would have been unnecessary. The original bill that I introduced, and as it has been amended and as the bill passed, did provide for direct loans to industry, to individuals, to States, and to municipalities; but at that time, in the last hours of the Seventy-second Congress, President Hoover vetoed that bill, and we, hastily, in a desire to bring forth some legislation that would be helpful, were obliged to pass a bill eliminating the most beneficial provisions of that bill. We were obliged to accept provisions such as only for self-liquidating projects, and other limitations on the loans. I am satisfied—and I think the chairman of the committee and the Members will agree with me—that if the original bill had been signed by President Hoover, a great deal could have been accomplished; industries could have been aided and relieved, and it would not have been necessary for us, every few months, to come in with additional amendments granting additional power to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I believe that the organization has accomplished a great deal. I hope that it will accomplish much more.

I will shortly offer an amendment that will still further relieve the people of America who, above any other, need some relief from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I am, of course, thankful to the committee for adopting an amendment to this bill as originally drawn, which is in the right direction, but I am hopeful they will agree to accept the other amendment that I intend to offer, which I believe will strengthen the bill and will aid millions of our people and safeguard the action of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we might as well be fair with ourselves as well as with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If there is any limitation upon the activity of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it is in the act creating that organization. We passed that act. I believe they have done a remarkably good job, under the circumstances. When you take into consideration that the Federal Reserve banks at the present time have in excess of $1,800,000,000 in excess reserves for which there is no demand by private industry; when you take into consideration that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I am informed, have had applications aggregating only a little more than a hundred million of the $300,000,000 fund, I think they have done a pretty good job to loan even forty million of it. Fundamentally and basically, the reason why this credit is not being pumped out into industry is because there is no demand from industry for this credit. You remove the obstacles which are standing in the way of normal and natural business progress today and you will find business in here anxious to take advantage of these credit measures which we have passed within the past 3 years.

The reason there is not this demand for credit, the reason there is not a demand for industrial loans from the excess reserves in the Federal Reserve banks today, is because business lacks the confidence to branch out, to expand, to put men back to work; and that is why we on this side of the aisle advocate that you establish a sound and definite monetary policy, that you establish a sound and definite economic policy. Then you will see business borrow this money, expand, and put men to work. Then there would be no need for this Congress to authorize $4,800,000,000 work relief, or any other kind of relief. Business is just "rarin' to go", yet we are sitting on the lid; we will not let off that steam that business needs today to get back on its feet. While we are talking here about the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its giving of this credit, let us take into consideration the fact that we have made no strong demands upon the President of the United States to put his feet on the ground and stay there long enough for business to know where he is going. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman says business is raring to go and there is no demand for credit. I ask the gentleman if availability of credit is not a great factor in the situation?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Velocity of credit has more to do with it than anything else.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Notwithstanding any other provision of law limiting the maturity of obligations taken by it to shorter periods, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make loans or advances or renewals or extensions thereof to authorized borrowers or by other suitable agreement permit them to run so as to mature at such time or times as the Corporation may determine, not later than January 31, 1945: Provided, That in respect of loans or renewals or extensions of loans or purchase of obligations under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as heretofore and herein amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), to or of railroads, the Corporation may require as a condition of making any such loan or renewal or extension for a period longer than 5 years, or purchasing any such obligation maturing later than 5 years from the date of purchase by the Corporation, that such arrangements be made for the reduction or amortization of the indebtedness of the railroad, either in whole or in part, as may be approved by the Corporation after the prior approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for this time to thank the Committee on Banking and Currency for liberalizing section 5 (d) of the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act by striking out the time limitation which related to industries organized prior to January 1, 1934. This liberalization will make it possible for the establishment of a new industry in which the South is interested at this time.

I want also to thank the Committee on Banking and Currency for doing me the kindness of listening for a few minutes the other day while I presented the possibilities of a great industry for the South. I am very grateful to the chairman and to all the members of that committee, especially to my colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], who was very considerate of this matter and who has rendered a great service on the committee in behalf of this legislation.

For the information of my colleagues I have here samples of the newest product of an industry of the South; and I am sure that all of them, whether they live in the South or not, will be interested in these samples of the product of the slash pine, an abundance of which we have in the South. I hold in my hand here samples of paper pulp made from slash pine; and I hold in my hand also a sample of rayon made from that pulp. Both pulp and rayon were made in the laboratory of Dr. Charles H. Herty, of Savannah, Ga. Here are other samples of pulp Dr. Herty made from slash pine, from loblolly pine, and from spruce pine grown in Georgia; also various samples of newsprint which were made in the same laboratory.

I present to the Members of the House a copy of the Savannah Morning News, one of the leading daily newspapers of my State, printed November 20, 1933, on newsprint paper made from Georgia pine trees in the laboratory of Dr. Herty, of Savannah. I also hold in my hand various samples of paper made by Dr. Herty, samples of book paper on which the Saturday Evening Post or any other magazine or book could be printed, together with a sample of bond paper similar to Hammermill bond, or other bond paper; and I have here various other samples of paper which Dr. Herty made in his laboratory in Savannah.

What I am interested in, Mr. Chairman, and what the Georgia delegation and other Members of the House are interested in is the development of an industry which will put men to work and which will bring about sound recovery. The South, particularly Georgia and neighboring States, has an abundance of pine trees from which we can manufacture paper pulp, and from this pulp, rayon. Within the next 12 months I believe the people of the South, or, as far as that is concerned, people all over the country, will be wearing clothes—the ladies at least—made from Georgia pine trees.

This new industry might be somewhat in opposition to our cotton production. We have, however, an oversupply of cotton; we are curtailing the production of cotton. We, therefore, are very much interested in the possibility of this new industry for the South.

Mr. Chairman, a paper mill will cost from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000. Our people cannot finance a paper mill; we have not the money. On January 16 I introduced an amendment to liberalize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, making it possible to secure loans to assist private investors in establishing paper pulp mills. The distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and his committee have reported out the bill with this provision of my amendment, liberalizing the act so that new industries, including paper mills, can be established in this country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia gave me the information I have been trying to secure for the last few days. I received communications from certain paper-mill interests in Wisconsin, to the effect that an effort was being made to make funds available for the erection of new paper mills in some of the Southern States. I have been going through this bill and have prepared an amendment which I intend to offer to section 10 which would prohibit the lending of money to business institutions not now in existence, which would compete with those industries that are now having enough trouble trying to get along.

Mr. Chairman, we have passed the N. R. A. Act for the purpose of trying to give relief to industries who found it impossible to get along under the methods of competition which have been in existence for the last few years. If the N. R. A. is economically justified from the standpoint of protecting industry from unfair competition, it would be unfair competition, and unjustifiable for the United States Government to make funds available for southern interests to expand the paper-mill business in competition with our northern mills who are finding it difficult to get along.

May I say that during the last few years the South, in my opinion, has fared exceptionally well in this recovery program. I do not believe there is any other section of the country as well off as the cotton- and tobacco-growing sections of the South. They have had benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act which have been far greater than other sections of the country. I find no fault with that situation. I am perfectly willing to go along and try to protect southern interests, but I do not believe the United States Government should make funds available for you to go into competition with our industries.

Until such time as we are able to produce our paper and sell it at a profit, there does not seem to be justification for the South going into this business any further than they have in the past. May I also say that there have been certain interests in the Northern States and some interests in Canada that have in recent years poured millions of dollars into the paper industry of the South, and because of their cutthroat tactics they have utterly ruined the paper industry of the North. The paper industry is just now getting back on its feet, and there is no justification, in my opinion, for lending this money for the purpose of expanding the paper industry. When we come to section 10, I propose to offer an amendment prohibiting the lending of this money to any business institutions or to any industry not now in existence. I believe that it is an amendment that should appeal to the fair judgment of the Membership of this House.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. (a) Section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp VII, title 15, ch. 14), is further amended by striking out all of the third sentence of the third paragraph thereof through the first colon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Within the foregoing limitations of this section, the Corporation, notwithstanding any limitation of law as to maturity, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, including approval of the price to be paid, may, to aid in the financing, reorganization, consolidation, maintenance, or construction thereof, purchase for itself, or for account of a railroad obligated thereon, the obligations of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, including equipment trust certificates, or guarantee the payment of the principal of, and/or interest on, such obligations, including equipment trust certificates, or, when, in the opinion of the Corporation, funds are not available on reasonable terms through private channels, make loans, upon full and adequate security, to such railroads or to receivers or trustees thereof for the purposes aforesaid: Provided, That in the case of loans to or the purchase or guaranty of obligations, including equipment trust certificates, of railroads not in receivership or trusteeship, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, in connection with its approval thereof, also certify that such railroad, on the basis of present and prospective earnings, may reasonably be expected to meet its fixed charges, without a reduction thereof through judicial reorganization, except that such certificate shall not be required in case of such loans made for the maintenance of, or purchase of equipment for, such railroads: Provided further, That for the purpose of determining the general funds of the Corporation available for further loans or commitments, such guaranties shall, to the extent of the principal amount of the obligations guaranteed, be interpreted as loans or commitments for loans:".

(b) Section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is further amended by striking out at the end of the third paragraph thereof the colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Corporation may make said loans to trustees of railroads which proceed to reorganize under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act of March 3, 1933", and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to advise the Members that the pulp and paper industry is not an industry new to the South. It is well established in my State. There is one large mill in operation in the western part of my State, in district ably represented by my colleague [Mr. CALDWELL], who is now in the chair. This plant is making a superior product, shipping it not only to points in this country but to foreign countries. We are now making an effort to obtain trade agreement whereby certain foreign countries may take more of this kraft paper manufactured in the South. So this is not a new industry in the South. It is not a sectional industry at all, because we have for years had paper-pulp mills in my section and other sections of the South, and it would be a waste of natural resources if the pine trees of the South were not converted into this product. I cannot believe that any Member of the House would desire to see the profitable utilization of a natural product neglected or would like to see the natural resources, regardless of where they may be, not fully developed and the best possible results realized therefrom.

This industry is growing rapidly. We have made application for Federal assistance, and Federal assistance will be furnished from Public Works funds and/or R. F. C. funds. Private capital has already gone into this field. I understand in the last few days arrangements have been made by private capital to establish another paper-pulp mill in Florida. Private capital must be encouraged and protected.

Mr. DEEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. DEEN. May I ask the gentleman a question for the benefit of the gentleman from Wisconsin, who seriously objected to my statement. Does the gentleman know that we import into the United States now, according to the figures obtained from the newsprint industry, 70 percent of all the newsprint consumed in the United States?

Mr. GREEN. Yes. It is brought from Norway and other foreign countries, including Russia, by the way. Are there any of my colleagues who want to throttle an American industry in order that the Soviet Union may continue to send its products to America to take the place of those which we can produce?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Did I understand the gentleman to tell the Committee and to give us assurance that this industry in Florida does not need assistance at the present time?

Mr. GREEN. Not at all.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That it had already received sufficient support?

Mr. GREEN. Private capital has already gone into the field. It is also true that the natural resources there are so great and the possibilities so great that it is a field where additional capital lent by the Government would be a safe loan and one which would be repaid with interest. It will give employment to now idle people and will utilize a raw product which is in the South in abundance.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Considering the fact that the production of cotton is one of the oldest industries in the country and that the manufacture of paper is in direct competition therewith, does not the gentleman think that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] takes a rather narrow view of the matter when he insists that the paper mills of his State should be given a monopoly, supported by the Government, in the manufacture of paper?

Mr. GREEN. Precisely. I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin really knew that the industry existed in the South or he would not have used the terms he did.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I am sorry, I have so little time. I am sure the genteman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] had no intention for leaving the impression that this is a pioneer industry and we were trying to bring in a new industry to compete with his beloved State with Government money. I know he does not, because the domains of our great Nation are broad and there is room for the development of all of our industries for the benefit of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I wish to say to my distinguished friend from Florida that I am well aware of the fact that the paper-mill industry has been growing in recent years in the South. I wish also to say I am well aware of the fact that there has been a good deal of private financing in the paper industry. I am very certain that in the last few years there have been paper mills established in the South when there was no justification for more mills being established in this country, and that these new mills depressed the paper-mill industry of the entire country until just recently, and before the N. R. A. was put into effect many of the mills that had been in operation in all of the Northern States for many years were put into a position where they could not continue to operate at a profit. This was because of the fact that they were having cutthroat competition from the southern mills that were also operating at a loss.

Since the N. R. A. has come into existence the paper industry has been materially benefited.

I am not claiming, as the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] inferred, that we are entitled to a monopoly for Wisconsin or any other State.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. In just a moment. I want to reply first to the gentleman's statement.

No one State has a monopoly in this industry. New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, and several other States of the North have been engaged in the paper industry, as well as have many Southern States. My only opposition to this proposition is that I do not believe it is economically justified for the Government to lend money to put more mills in operation when there are mills now that are not working to capacity; when there are efficient mills that are not able to keep their crews working; when there is plenty of equipment and plenty of mills ready to take all the orders they can possibly get. I do not believe, in view of this situation, the Federal Government should lend itself to the ridiculous proposition of making money available for putting more mills in operation.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I must first yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Would the gentleman make the concession that after domestic demand had increased to the point of taking the entire output of the mills in existence, it would then be wise that a loan be made for the construction of paper mills in the South where the raw materials are present in great abundance.

Mr. BOILEAU. If there is economic demand or need for the construction of more mills and private capital cannot be found to construct such mills, then I say there is some justification for the Government to loan this money.

Mr. COX. Suppose there is the demand but there is lack of capital for the development of such mills in the South, would the gentleman then be in favor of Federal aid?

Mr. BOILEAU. I may say to the gentleman that there is no demand for more mills at the present time.

Mr. COX. I understand that, but if there were the demand——

Mr. BOILEAU. If there were demand for more mills and the funds were not available——

Mr. COX. Would the gentleman then insist upon the right to increase the capacity of his plants in order to satisfy the demand?

Mr. BOILEAU. I would not make any demand for my section that I would not be perfectly willing to accept with respect to yours, but I do say that the money of the Federal Government should not be used to compete in a presently depressed industry.

I now yield to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Is it not true that in the South at the present time nearly all the paper mills are operating part time, and at Moss Point, Miss., a $5,000,000 plant has now been closed down for 3 years, as well as a number of other plants in the South including, for instance, plants in Texas. I think the Members from Texas can testify that in that State there is a large paper mill shut down because of lack of orders to operate, and there is no newsprint paper being made in the South at the present time.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman know there are a number of such plants in New York State where the investment was made prior to the R. F. C. that are not running at all?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is absolutely correct and I hope the gentleman will support my amendment to prevent these loans being made to institutions that are not now in existence.

Mr. CULKIN. And it is hardly fair for the South to ask the development of this industry at this time.

Mr. BOILEAU. I agree with the gentleman and thank him for his contribution.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. If the gentleman will permit, I may say, further, that there is no newsprint paper or any other paper, now or since the establishment of the Soviet Government, being shipped into the United States, although there is certain raw materials, such as wood, being shipped into this country, but not any paper.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Two years ago, when we tried to get a 30-hour-week law, I had a provision in that bill that provided that whenever the total-landed cost of any article coming to the United States was less than the cost of production of similar articles in the United States the shipment should be barred. If that provision were enacted into law, you would not have any trouble in Wisconsin or in Florida, because you would have plenty of demand. It is the admission into this country of foreign imports that is doing away with your business, both in Wisconsin and in Florida.

Mr. BOILEAU. I agree with the gentleman. The gentleman from Massachusetts and I entertain the same views with reference to foreign competition, but, unfortunately, the Democratic majority does not take that view.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is further amended by inserting after section 5b thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5c. To assist in the reestablishment of a normal mortgage market, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may, upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, subscribe for or make loans upon the nonassessable stock of any class of any mortgage-loan company, trust company, savings-and-loan association, or other similar financial institution, now or hereafter incorporated under the laws of the United States, or of any State, or of the District of Columbia, the principal business of which institution is that of making loans upon mortgages, deeds of trust, or other instruments conveying, or constituting a lien upon, real estate or any interest therein. In any case in which, under the laws of its incorporation, such financial institution is not permitted to issue nonassessable stock, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized, for the purposes of this section, to purchase the legally issued capital notes or debentures of such financial institutions: Provided further, That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in addition to the foregoing powers, is authorized and empowered to make loans to corporations, associations, or persons organized for the reorganization of real-estate properties, upon the recommendation of the Securities and Exchange Commission and its approval of the plan of reorganization proposed by such corporations, associations, or persons in connection with which such loan is sought. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may, with approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe (which regulations shall include at least 60 days' notice of any proposed sale to the issuer or maker), sell, at public or private sale, the whole or any part of the stock, capital notes, or debentures acquired by the Corporation pursuant to this section, and the preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures acquired pursuant to any other provision of law. The amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this section."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided, That any assistance given to or for any financial institution by the Corporation shall be conditioned upon the agreement of the financial institution so aided that it will not use, directly or indirectly, the funds so obtained in the reorganization of any real-estate enterprise with outstanding debts of $50,000 or more, unless the plan of such reorganization and the fees and expenses to be paid in connection therewith shall be approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission, such approval to have regard not only to the fairness of the plan as among existing creditors and/or stockholders, but also to have regard to the initial investment of such creditors and/or stockholders."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, this to me is a very important amendment. I want to say to the Banking and Currency Committee that I am indeed grateful and appreciative for the courtesy they have extended to me and also for the time they have given me.

I have devoted 6 long months to investigating the bond situation, the so-called "protective bond committees" throughout the United States, and I have filed the report this morning.

What I am to accomplish by this amendment—and I know if the chairman of the committee and the splendid members of the committee had all of the facts before them they would have gladly adopted this amendment of mine. I assure you gentlemen I do not wish anything for myself, but I have the interest of 4,000,000 bondholders at heart.

What this amendment will provide for is this: In the last few years hundreds of thousands of bondholders were obliged to dispose of their bonds for 8, 12, and 15 cents on the dollar. There are many of the mortgage companies and institutions that we are going to aid in this bill that have purchased these bonds for that low price after they have sent out statements that brought about the reduction in the price of the bonds and caused the selling of them.

What my amendment seeks to do is this: That the reorganization, where the Government advances the money for the purpose of reorganization, the actual price paid for the bonds should be taken into consideration, and those people who acquired by questionable methods these bonds for 10, 12, and 15 cents on the dollar shall not receive in reorganization the same price as you and you who have paid, namely, 100 cents on the dollar for your bonds. Therefore I believe this amendment is of tremendous importance, and I hope that the Committee will accept it. Had the Committee all of the facts before it I feel that they would have adopted it before this.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I have just read the gentleman's amendment, and I am in entire sympathy with the idea of protecting the bondholders. Why does the gentleman confine this simply to real estate?

Mr. SABATH. Because I have information on that point. As the Chairman of the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations, appointed in the last Congress, I devoted, as I said, about 6 months of time to investigate these frauds perpetrated on 4,000,000 people in the United States. I am trying to protect them to the best of my ability. I do not know enough about the other securities, and that is the reason I do not offer an amendment on other matters. I am not as well informed upon them as I am on this question.

Mr. CONNERY. And as to organizations that have outstanding indebtedness of more than $50,000, the gentleman would not permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan to banks or permit banks to loan to them?

Mr. SABATH. No; all I desire is where the loan is above $50,000 that the Securities and Exchange Commission be given the same power and authority as is given in this bill to the Interstate Commerce Commission in passing upon railroad securities. It has been investigating some phases of bondholders' reorganizations and it is my opinion that its powers should be extended so that it may pass upon a loan application to determine whether it is equitable, fair, and just, and also that the amounts that should be allowed on reorganization are in accordance with the actual payments made for those bonds, which is justice and equity.

The Banking and Currency Committee approved an amendment which will permit direct loans and relief to the real-estate bondholders. It reads as follows:

Provided further, That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in addition to the foregoing powers, is authorized and empowered to make loans to corporations, associations, or persons organized for the reorganization of real-estate properties, upon the recommendation of the Securities and Exchange Commission and its approval of the plan of reorganization proposed by such corporations, associations, or persons in connection with which such loan is sought.

The proposed bill permits the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase or acquire the capital stock or notes of mortgage companies who then would be enabled, with such Government financial aid, to make loans which would subject the borrower to unnecessary costs, fees, and expenditures that would be charged them by these mortgage companies.

The amendment will eliminate the necessity of going through this procedure and will in addition place the stamp of approval upon such real-estate reorganizations by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Since July 1933 the staff of the Securities and Exchange Commission has been engaged in the examination and analysis of reorganizations which were required to be filed under the Securities Act. Since the enactment of the Securities Act of 1934 the Commission has been devoting considerable time to the investigation of reorganizations and is thoroughly familiar with the ramifications and activities of bondholders' protective committees, voting trusts, and reorganization plans. The utilization of the staff and facilities of the Commission to either approve or disapprove such reorganizations, based upon the fairness and equity to all parties concerned in any reorganization, will tend not only to safeguard the interests of these parties, particularly the bondholders, but will assure the efficient and expedient supervision and administration of the provisions of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, by the terms of House Resolution 412, adopted in the second session of the Seventy-third Congress, a special committee was authorized to investigate bondholders' protective committees. That committee found, after holding hearings in New York, Detroit, Milwaukee, and Chicago, that there had been issued in the lush, abundant days from 1920 to 1930, approximately ten billion or eleven billion dollars of real-estate securities on large apartment buildings, hotels, and commercial structures. The committee found also that about $8,000,000,000 of those bonds are now in default. So long as the rate of occupancy was high, so long as rentals were reasonably high, so long as conditions were sound, the houses of issue, and the trustees, managed to pay the interest and retire these serial bonds year after year. Then came the depression and they could not pay the interest, and the bonds went into default. It became necessary to reorganize these various properties, and in the process of reorganization there were set up hundreds of so-called "bondholders' protective committees", in all the large centers of the country. They even operate in chains. There is one committee in New York that is handling I believe over 214 pieces of property scattered in 21 States. There is a chain committee in Chicago that is operating in 18 States and handling over 400 pieces of property.

Here is what this special investigating committee found. They found that the receivers' fees, the trustees' fees, and fees for the management corporations, and fees for bondholders' protective committees were pyramided to such an extent that it would take the aggregate of all the rentals of a great many of these large and beautiful apartment buildings and business buildings for over 10 years, just to pay for the fees and for high-powered attorneys who have been trying to bilk the bondholders. We sought a remedy.

We thought that money could be advanced to these bondholders to help to re-create more purchasing power and make a decided contribution to the resumption of prosperity, but how to get the money to them was the question. From the R. F. C.? That was a problem. Look at the first of section 5 (c) in this bill, and you will see that the R. F. C. is empowered to subscribe to the nonassessable stock of any class of any mortgage-loan company, trust company, savings-and-loan association, and in any case in which under the laws of its incorporation such financial institution is not permitted to issue nonassessable stock, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to purchase the legally issued capital notes or debentures of such financial institutions. Now, here is the difficulty you run into. The same people who are reorganizing these properties and grabbing all the fruits are the same fellows who will organize these mortgage institutions, so that the money advanced from the R. F. C. may go only so far to pay taxes and fees and not put a dime into the hands of the bondholders.

The language in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], plus the terminology in the bill now, is designed only to give to the Federal Security Commission such recommendatory and supervisory power in the event that these reorganizations of real-estate properties are not definitely in the interest of the parties in interest; namely, the original holder of the paper, then to refuse its approval and thereby not hand out that money. That was the only purpose, and to implement this argument I am going to be very personal about it.

There is a gentleman associated with the R. F. C. who had promoted $3,000,000 worth of such property on which the bonds were in default. This property was finally reorganized, so that the properties were sold for $450,000, out of which they offered to the holder of every $1,000 bond only $148. Under the language in the first section of this bill, in 5 (c), it will be possible for the very people who have been reorganizing these properties, and who are getting all the fruits of these properties, to set up their own mortgage institutions, to gather fees and pay off the taxes and probably to hand back to the bondholder a piece of property that might not be encumbered, but not to give him a dime. That is the thing we object to. As an instance of these manipulations in New York City, for instance, there were three trustees who were going to get a fee of $100,000 each for 18 months' work and one law firm was going to get $425,000. Who pays the freight? It has to come out of the property, and so ultimately the bondholder pays it either in having his earnings deferred for more than 10 years or otherwise in reducing his original investment and vitiating his security.

So I say to the gentleman from New York, who raised the question a while ago, that while I appreciate the fact that it enlarges somewhat the provisions of the Securities Commission——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I quite appreciate that we are projecting the Securities Commission into an enlarged field, yet I do not see how you can give any protection to the 4,000,000 distressed holders of real-estate paper in this country today without placing supervisory and recommendatory power in some agency other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because, frankly, I have no faith in some of those who are going to administer this. I am afraid that through the instrumentality of some of these mortgage associations we are not going to get to the heart of the problem.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Why did not the chairman of the special committee, or the gentleman, who is a member of that committee, submit some remedial legislation, if they thought it was necessary, rather than to bring it in in connection with this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me say that the special committee has in mind submitting new, substantive legislation, but we are confronted now with the reorganization of many properties, a great deal of which will slide away from the bondholders, unless there is some legislation right now. It is time for action and for cash.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Does the gentleman recognize that this bill must be perfected by the 31st of January?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; and we also recognize that if we bring in a new bill it will be April or May or June before it could pass, and then when we set up the necessary agencies with which to administer its provisions, the gentleman will find that bondholders will have lost over $100,000,000 in that period. That is the reason for putting it in this bill. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] because it sets up these additional safeguards.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. In view of the gentleman's statement that certain members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation group are not to be trusted——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let us not throw any aspersions upon members of the R. F. C. I only want to say that recognizing human nature for what it is, we do not want to take that chance and let this matter be deferred or have the benefits of this legislation get hung up in some mortgage institution and never get to the bondholder.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has again expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the committee considered this amendment. I dare say the membership of the House is not sufficiently informed to vote on a provision so far-reaching and so extensive without a better understanding of it than is possible to be had at this time. The legislation really should go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and be passed upon on its own merits and dealt with in the regular way. The Committee on Banking and Currency did not think that we could properly undertake to include it in the legislation now before the House. I hope the House will not agree to the amendment. I ask that we have a vote on the amendment for the reason that we must finish this bill today. If we do not, it will be impossible to get it to conference and get it enacted into law before the 1st day of February, at which time the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will terminate under existing law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me observe that the substance of this amendment is already incorporated in this bill, on page 14, beginning with line 20, but the additional language offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] only tends to clarify it and probably add a few additional safeguards.

Mr. STEAGALL. We went as far as we could when we provided for loans to organizations or institutions, upon the approval of the Exchange Commission, organized for the purpose of reorganizing real-estate loan agencies.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. When the gentleman agreed to provide loans for real-estate reorganization, then he clearly can have no objection to this amendment, which is a companion amendment, to the effect that when these loans are made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation these safeguards shall be thrown around them. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] suggests that this amendment be in the form of a bill, brought out by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I cannot understand what possible connection there is. This amendment properly belongs in this bill and should be voted into the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. But let me say if this additional amendment is put in the pending measure, it simply leads to confusion and intermingling of administration by two agencies of the Government, which we think would be unfortunate and impractical. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised to hear any worry at all about what might be added as amendments to this bill. The way we have been going lately, they take an omnibus bill and stick everything into it and send it to the Ways and Means Committee. So I do not think we need worry about what amendments should go on to a bill if they are good amendments. If it is a good amendment to protect the American people, to protect bondholders from unjust loss, it should be passed, as was rightly said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. I do not like to see anything like this rushed. I would like to have this matter discussed a little. If it is going to protect people who have put their money into these bonds and is going to allow the Securities Commission to look over the situation and protect these people, it seems to me that these few words put in by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] ought to be passed on, and passed on favorably, to protect these bondholders. So I intend to vote for the Sabath amendment.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman know that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and his committee have been over this entire field and this amendment is the result of their investigation?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] is a member of that committee?

Mr. CONNERY. I did not know that the distinguished Chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. O'CONNOR] was a member of it.

Mr. CULKIN. He is a member of this special committee, which is headed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]; so the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] speak as technicians in this field.

Mr. CONNERY. And I am with them. I am not a technician, but I am glad to support that amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, does not the gentleman also understand that the committee has not submitted any report whatever to the House on the subject?

Mr. CONNERY. I understand that; and I understand also that the gentleman said they were going to bring in a special bill a little later. But, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] said, for the thing to drag along until June and people to lose hundreds of millions of dollars should not be allowed. I think this amendment ought to be adopted now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWEENEY: Page 14, line 7, after the word "class" insert "of any national mortgage association organized under title III of the National Housing Act, and."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, there will be no objection to the amendment, I think.

Mr. SWEENEY. I understand the committee has agreed to accept the amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. It was only through oversight that this language was not included in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6a. Section 5e (a) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VIII, title 15, ch. 14), is amended (1) by inserting in the first sentence thereof, after the words "the assets" and before the words "of any bank", the following: ", or any portion thereof"; and (2) by inserting in the second sentence thereof, after the words "such assets" and before the words "held for the benefit", the following: ", or any portion thereof."

(b) Section 5e of such act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, sec. 606a), is hereby amended by adding a new subsection:

"(d) The Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans secured by the assets of any corporation the capital stock in which is wholly owned by any bank that is closed or in process of liquidation to aid in the reorganization or liquidation of such bank upon application of such wholly owned corporation or the receiver or liquidating agent thereof in the event such corporation is also in receivership or liquidation."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike from the bill all the language on page 16 from line 1 down to the period in line 11. This language was included in the bill by clerical error. It was not adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Strike out all of the subsection beginning with line 1, page 16, and ending with the quotation mark at the end of line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: On page 15 after line 25, add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 7. The Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to any public or private hospital and/or to any corporation, trust, foundation, congregation, organization, or association organized (not for profit) under the laws of any State or Territory and operated for religious purposes, to aid in financing the operation and maintenance of institutions for religious instruction and worship. The interest on any such loan shall not be at a rate in excess of 4 percent per annum. Such loans may be made for a period of 5 years during which period no amortization or reduction of the principal shall be required, and real estate owned by any institution authorized to borrow under this section shall be deemed adequate security for a loan to such institution."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is easily understood. It provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make loans to hospitals, churches, and institutions of learning not organized for profit, the real estate they own being the security. I do not think there is a Member of this House who has not been appealed to by hospitals, churches, and institutions of learning to be recognized under this law. I cannot conceive any reason why they should not be.

My amendment does not provide for any new construction. It provides for refinancing the hospitals, churches, and institutions that come within the purview of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I know the situation that affects the hospitals of this country, and I know the situation that affects some churches. If we are not going to have faith in our religious institutions and permit them to borrow money from the Government, then I think we should stop this lending of money entirely. Can you conceive of better security than that which these good Christian people of all denominations can offer to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in support of a loan that will help them refinance their financial obligations?

Every month the hospitals in my city aid people by the score, people who do not have a dime. They extend credit. If these people are ever able to pay, they will pay, but many of them never leave the hospital alive, and the hospital gets no money for the care the sick received.

Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment is sound. It has been before this committee for 2 years. Hearings were held by the subcommittee in the last Congress, a subcommittee presided over by Mr. Prall, of New York. People came here from all over the country and appeared before the subcommittee in support of this amendment. It was introduced rather late in the last session, however, and was never reached.

This is the proper place for the amendment. There is no use of me proceeding further, for I have explained it fully. You understand it; I repeat it simply gives the right to hospitals, churches, and institutions of learning not organized for profit to borrow if they can offer adequate security.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I am very sympathetic with my colleague so far as his purpose is concerned; but the gentleman does not advocate having the church and state one institution, does he? Does not the gentleman think it would be wise to keep the church and state separate as they always have been in this country in the past?

Mr. COCHRAN. There is no such thought in my mind. This will not in any way bring about the condition the gentleman mentions. I think it would be wise to adopt the amendment and help congregations and associations not organized for profit. In other words, help the people of this country retain their place of worship and help them to maintain their hospitals, and get well by enabling them to refinance their outstanding obligations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the gentleman from Missouri realize that if the United States Government starts in financing religion in this country, we depart from our age-old policy of keeping the church and the state utterly separate?

Mr. COCHRAN. Is there anything in the amendment that brings the United States Government into control of religion. I want the church and the state separate as does the gentleman from New York. This simply provides for the lending of money to churches in distress.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It brings the church and the state into a relationship one with the other, which spells danger to both.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am unable to agree with the gentleman's view.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The church becomes the debtor and the Government becomes the creditor. There must always be a relationship existing between debtor and creditor, which if applied to religion and the Government, is a dangerous, dangerous thing. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. May I say to the gentleman from New York that I do not want this country in any manner, shape, or form, any more than he does, to interfere with the church; but if it is necessary to save the church because of financial difficulties, then I say, if we are going to save the railroads and the other corporations, I think it would be a mighty good idea to save the churches also.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SWEENEY. Is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri now before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is before the House, and the gentleman from Michigan has offered a perfecting amendment.

The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCLEOD: On page 15, after line 25, insert the following:

"Section 5e (a) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is further amended by striking out in the first sentence thereof the word 'empowered' and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'directed'; (2) by striking out in the first sentence thereof the words 'make loans upon or'; (3) by striking out in the first sentence thereof the words 'on or after December 31, 1929, and'; (4) by striking out in the second sentence thereof the words 'or make loans on'; (5) by striking out in the fourth sentence thereof the words 'or loan on'; (6) by striking out in the fifth sentence thereof the words 'as security for loans.'"

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SWEENEY. Is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], or is it a separate amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is a perfecting amendment to section 6.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk reads as follows:

SEC. 8. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to subscribe for preferred stock and purchase the capital notes of insurance companies, and for other purposes", approved June 10, 1933, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14, sec. 605e), is amended by striking from the last sentence thereof "$50,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$75,000,000".

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KOPPLEMANN: Page 17, line 4, strike out all of section 8, lines 4 to 11, inclusive.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, a year ago during the great emergency that was upon certain weak insurance companies I supported a measure aiding insurance companies to the extent of $50,000,000. As I understand it, aid was given to the extent of $35,000,000. The insurance companies that were in difficulty and in trouble were taken care of. The crisis was met and passed. The other day when Mr. Reed appeared before our committee I asked him the reason for increasing the amount from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 in this bill now under consideration. Our committee records show he was unable to answer the question. I then asked him to prepare an answer to the question and let me have it. He sent to the chairman of the committee a statement containing a great many figures showing that $35,000,000 had been lent to insurance companies, but there was nothing in answer to my query as to the reason for the continuance of these loans or the need for the increase from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know something about insurance companies. I know that the old-line companies were opposed to this aid to the smaller, weaker companies, but I took the position that because legislation was being passed to help those in distress these insurance companies should also receive aid; but I do not know of any reason why this aid should be increased now. The amendment which I have just offered simply leaves $50,000,000 to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to continue their work, but cuts out the extra $25,000,000. In view of the fact that no statements have been made which would justify even a continuance of the $50,000,000 and no answer made as to the reason for the increase, I urge the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Certainly.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. In order to keep the record straight, is it not a fact that the general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation fulfilled his promise made to the gentleman and had the information before the committee and the chairman sought the gentleman, but could not find him?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I have that information.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. And every bit of the information has been delivered to the gentleman.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. No; that is not correct. The information that was given to me was given through the chairman of the committee. I have that information, but the information only gives the figures as to the amounts that have been loaned up to now, $35,000,000. This is all the information that was contained in that answer.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I may say to the gentleman that I have in my possession, which I will be delighted to turn over to him, information which fully substantiates the recommendation made by the general counsel that the Corporation would need additional funds for this purpose.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman take time in opposition to my amendment in order to give us that information?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I shall be delighted to furnish the gentleman with a copy of it and let him use it himself.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I think the Members of the House ought to have it. I asked for it, but I have not had it. All I received were some figures as to money that was loaned since this bill was enacted at the last session of the Congress. If the gentleman has any further information, I should be glad to have it, and I am sure the Members of the House ought to have it.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

I dislike to take issue with my good friend the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN], one of the able members of our committee, but I happen to have been present at the meeting of the committee when the chairman sent a special messenger to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN] in order to hand him the memorandum containing the data which had been prepared by the general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

In the act which we passed last year an appropriation of $50,000,000 was earmarked and set apart to be used in the purchase of preferred stock or loans on preferred or capital notes of these casualty companies. My understanding is that up to date $100,000 has been subscribed in preferred stock and $35,000,000 has been loaned on preferred stock or debentures to eight or ten different companies. The schedule showing full details of loans was presented to the committee and is available to anyone wishing to see it.

My understanding is that much good has been accomplished through these loans.

Personally, when this amendment was first offered on the floor of the House, some of the Members will probably recall that I opposed vigorously the idea of the Government matching capital with these insurance companies unless the insurance companies furnished new cash capital.

The House approved the amendment which I offered, inserting the word "cash." When the bill went to conference it came back without the word "cash." The conferees probably had good reasons for deciding that it ought to go out, as they do in respect to many matters placed in bills by the House.

The fact is these institutions are in the process of reorganization and rehabilitation. They are not only engaged in writing indemnity and contract insurance of all kinds but they are obligated for many million dollars in real-estate obligations. I understand if we continue the R. F. C. they can extend life to these institutions and bring about a great saving to the bondholders and equity holders of this mortgage property. My chief interest is in seeing that these funds of the taxpayers are used to aid the mortgagor in adjusting his obligations, a large percentage of which are usurious. This is certainly true in North Carolina.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Since some aspersions might inadvertently have been cast by the previous speaker against the character of the general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Hon. Stanley Reed, will the gentleman concede with me that he is, in my humble opinion, one of the most brilliant and gifted attorneys in this or any other department?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I will; and I will also add that I know that my friend from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN] did not intend to cast any reflection or aspersion upon his ability or character.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, my friend the gentleman from North Carolina has given information exactly as I gave it to you before he started his remarks. I had that information, and that information was given to me and given to the committee and to the Congress and the country, but it does not substantiate in the least one reason for the increased financing of these insurance companies.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Does not the gentleman think that after the assistance that the Hartford companies have received that he ought not to make this criticism?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. That is an insinuation not based on the facts. No Hartford insurance company has received any of this money from the Finance Corporation. That remark has nothing to do with the situation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That may be so. I am not questioning what has been done.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Thereby enabling an orderly liquidation of much distressed property throughout America.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Yes; but the gentleman will agree with me that that is beside the question.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. No; I agree that that is inside the question.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I am satisfied that we should continue the work that was started, that those companies which had received money should continue to receive it until they are well out of the woods, but $50,000,000 is more than is necessary. There is no reason for the increase, and my amendment simply calls for continuing the fifty-million basis instead of increasing it to $75,000,000.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman know whether there are any applications pending in the office of the R. F. C. from insurance companies?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. All those questions were asked, and I was not able to get an answer and I waited a sufficient time for them to give me an answer. The answer was not given.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will not the gentleman refresh his recollection and admit that the general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation told the committee that applications on hand and prospective applications would require a considerable amount?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. The gentleman has a copy of the hearings, and I should like to see that. I cannot remember any such statement. That is why I asked him to prepare a statement, because he said he could not give us the information and we have not had it up to the present time. I am simply trying by this method to save the Nation from allocating $25,000,000 more, which amount is something which no one has any reason for voting for at this time.

Mr. CELLER. I assume that the gentleman has faith and confidence in the officials of the R. F. C.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I am not questioning that.

Mr. CELLER. And that he knows that those officials would not ask for these funds if they were not needed.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Let me say for the information of the gentleman that we were told in committee hearings that certain features of this bill were put in at the request of other departments, not the R. F. C., so we are not impugning the R. F. C., or anyone else. There are things in this bill not in there because the R. F. C. asked for them, or that any of the officials of the R. F. C. asked for. That is an unfair question to ask, and so, Mr. Chairman, I think it is good policy for this Congress to be careful in the appropriation of large sums of money, especially when apparently no one is asking for them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I suggest this merely raises the authorization which the R. F. C. can use for this purpose, and it in nowise increases the amount which the R. F. C. can use, and is not a charge against the Treasury of the United States. We are making no new appropriation. It merely increases the amount which the R. F. C. can use out of the funds available for this purpose.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. All of that may be true, but the gentleman knows that if you allocate $75,000,000 the insurance companies will come in and try to get it.

Mr. STEAGALL. They did not get all of the other.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. They got $35,000,000 out of the $50,000,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. Section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is amended (1) by striking out all of the first sentence thereof after the word "industry" and the remainder of the first paragraph, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

", and to any institution, now or hereafter established, financing principally the sale of electrical, plumbing, or air-conditioning applicances or equipment, both urban and rural. Such loans shall, in the opinion of the board of directors of the Corporation, be so secured as to reasonably assure repayment of the loans, may be made directly, or in cooperation with banks or other lending institutions, or by the purchase of participations, shall mature not later than January 31, 1945, shall be made only when deemed to offer reasonable assurance of continued or increased employment of labor, shall be made only when, in the opinion of the board of directors of the Corporation the borrower is solvent, shall not exceed $300,000,000 in aggregate amount at any one time outstanding, and shall be subject to such terms, conditions, and restrictions as the board of directors of the Corporation may determine.";

And (2) by striking out from the second paragraph thereof the figures "1935" wherever they appear herein and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "1937."

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio: Strike out on page 19 all of lines 1, 2, 3, and that part of line 4 to the period after the word "rural."

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I recognize that this is not the first time that the Membership of the House is called upon to stay late in the consideration of emergency legislation. It is not my disposition or intent to delay the matter longer than necessary. I cannot find anything in the lines on page 19 I seek to strike out that is either necessary or proper in the pending legislation. I find on page 12 in the report submitted by the Committee on Banking and Currency the original language of existing section 5 (d) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. That language as it exists is broad enough to take care of this particular purpose. I am at a loss to understand what is meant by the word "institution" as it appears in line 1, on page 19. I know that reasonable minds may differ in the interpretation of that word. I do not know any reason why a particular industry, whether it directly or indirectly benefits the people through public utilities, should be specially favored, or why these favors should not be extended to other institutions. If it is now covered by existing law, then the striking out of these words would not do any harm and might disabuse the minds of many people in our Nation who sometimes feel there has been some favoritism shown or that something has been done by the R. F. C. not entirely to the general benefit.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The members of the committee will recall the passage by the last Congress of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act. When the bill creating the Tennessee Valley Authority was in the Committee on Military Affairs, I introduced and the committee adopted the following amendments:

This policy (the power policy of the Authority) is further declared to be that the projects herein provided for shall be considered primarily as for the benefit of the people of the section as a whole and particularly the domestic and rural consumers to whom the power can economically be made available, and accordingly that sale to and use by industry shall be a secondary purpose, to be utilized principally to secure a sufficiently high load factor and revenue returns which will permit domestic and rural use at the lowest possible rates and in such manner as to encourage increased domestic and rural use of electricity.

The T. V. A. carrying out this policy has greatly reduced the cost of power to farmers and to domestic consumers in the towns and cities in the valley of the Tennessee and has made possible the use of much more power by the people of the valley. For instance a farmer in the T. V. A. territory can buy 200 kilowatt-hours of electricity per month for $4.50. This is sufficient power to light his home, pump his water, and operate his refrigerator, radio, electric iron, electric churn, washing machine, and electric stove. The same power in the great agricultural State of Iowa would cost the farmer $14.50, while just across the river here in Virginia it would cost the farmer $12.50. A farmer today in the T. V. A. territory can purchase about 42 percent more power at about 66 percent less cost than he could in the old days from the private companies, and here let us note that the T. V. A. yardstick in working for the T. V. A. rates has brought about a reduction in the rates of the private companies and has saved the consumers of the country millions of dollars.

Before the T. V. A. could distribute and sell its power, the consumers had to secure the necessary electrical equipment and appliances such as electric pumps, stoves, refrigerators, and the like. With the depression and the economic condition as they were, most of the people of the Tennessee Valley did not have the money with which to buy the necessary equipment and appliances, so the T. V. A. proceeded to organize as a subsidiary corporation the Electric Home and Farm Authority, and the R. F. C. made available $10,000,000 to this Authority to aid in financing the purchase of the necessary electrical equipment and appliances. Through the aid of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, the consumers have not only secured the necessary equipment and appliances but have also secured them at fair and reasonable prices.

We hear much today in protest of the Government's going into business. We are told that the Government should not sell and distribute power. The work-relief bill which we passed the other day will make available funds for loans to utility companies for the generation and distribution of power. This section in the bill, which the gentleman's amendment would strike from the bill, would provide funds for the purchase of the necessary electrical equipment and appliances. In other words, this section, together with the provisions of the work-relief bill, would give to private industry the opportunity to secure the necessary funds to go ahead and finance the sale and distribution of power along the lines of the T. V. A. Today nearly all the dams, power houses, generating facilities, high-tension lines, and distribution systems are owned and operated by private industry.

Under the program of President Roosevelt, we are going forward with plans for cheaper power, better homes, and rural electrification; and unless private industry is willing to come forward and do its part in the attainment of that program, the Government will go forward and attain the program itself. I repeat that this section in the bill gives to private industry its opportunity to come forward and at least do its part in the program.

Mr. MAY. Is not the sole purpose of this section to enable loans to be made to the Tennessee Home and Farm Authority?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Not necessarily. It would open the door to the institutions that might be in the business of financing or selling electrical equipment and appliances.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Would this include the automobile business?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No; it would not include the automobile business. It only includes electrical equipment and appliances.

Mr. Chairman, my time has expired and I must close, but I wish to urge as strongly as I can the defeat of the amendment. We must and we shall have cheaper power, better homes, and rural electrification.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not care at this late hour to discuss the merits of this proposition, but I do wish to have a clear understanding as to the technical significance of the language which it has been proposed to strike from the bill. The existing law provides for loans to industrial and commercial institutions. The language of the bill before us, which it is proposed to strike out, authorizes loans to entirely different agencies, namely, financial institutions engaged in the specific business of financing the sale of the various electrical appliances and equipment outlined in the act. I wish it clearly understood that there can be no serious contention that the original act accomplishes the results that are designed and will be accomplished by the language of the act before us. I simply wish to make clear what we are attempting to do by the provision under consideration. I leave discussion of the merits to the gentlemen who wish to be heard, but I am in full accord with all that has been so well said regarding the purpose of the section.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. If I am familiar with any phase of legislation that comes before this House, it is legislation of this kind.

Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DUFFEY] that I regard this as probably the most valuable provision of this bill. This is not for the benefit of the people in the Tennessee Valley altogether; it is not for the benefit of the people in the Tennessee Valley area. I do not live in the valley. I live in the valley area. But this is for the benefit of all the American people.

Now, we use, on an average, 50 kilowatt-hours per month in the United States, while the Canadian uses seven times that amount, or more than 350 kilowatt-hours per month. I mean in that area that is being served from Niagara Falls. Strange to say, we pay as much for our 50 kilowatt-hours as they pay for their 350. But I will go into that at another time.

One thing that has prevented our people from using electricity is the high price of appliances, and the impossibility of securing appliances at reasonable prices. The producers of electricity have held their rates so high that people could not afford to buy the equipment, because they could not pay the power rates.

The people sold equipment at high prices, prices so high that people could not afford to buy the electricity to run them, because they could not afford to pay for the equipment. They, therefore, strangled each other. The Electric Home and Farm Authority has more or less broken that strangle hold and it is enabling people to buy electric equipment, from radios to washing machines, from cooking stoves to water pumps, until the American people everywhere are clamoring for cheap power and lower-priced electrical equipment. This is not confined to the people who buy electricity from the Tennessee Valley Authority or to those who use electricity generated by the Tennessee Valley Authority. But people everywhere are demanding, and I hope they will continue to demand, that electricity be furnished at reasonable rates. The T. V. A. demands it before the purchase of these appliances will be financed through the Electric Home and Farm Authority.

We are entering an electric age. We want to put cheap electricity into the home of every American. That is what we are striving for. We want to put cheap electricity into every nook and corner of the United States. We have a sufficient amount of electric energy. Enough power is going to waste in our navigable streams today to supply every home in America; and if we can get the prices of electrical equipment down and also get these developments made and get this power to the people at reduced rates based upon the cost of production, transmission, and distribution, you will see the greatest progress made in America in the next few years that has ever been made in any country in all the history of mankind. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes so I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I admire the gentleman from Mississippi in his serious fight against public utilities and against the Power Trust; but I am a little concerned about the language in this bill. The phrase "electrical equipment" is a pretty broad term. If it be construed to mean merely small household appliances, washing machines, radios, and so forth, my objection would not be so serious; but suppose the construction were placed upon this term that it meant a turbo-electric generator, or a Diesel generator, or a Diesel engine, and some corporation sets itself up to sell and finance such heavy generating equipment, and along comes my city or some other subdivision of government and wants to expand its municipal light plant. We would have to pay an enormous price and high interest rates to the corporation, which, in turn, would get money from the R. F. C. at low interest rates.

Mr. RANKIN. My friend is unduly exercised on that point.

Mr. SWEENEY. I wish the gentleman would tell me about it.

Mr. RANKIN. The phrase "electrical equipment" is well understood by people engaged in the industry, both those who manufacture and those who sell it. It does not mean turbines and large machinery such as the gentleman mentioned.

Mr. SWEENEY. What would the gentleman call a turbo-generator, if not electrical equipment?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. When people want such machinery as that, they specify turbines, and so forth.

Mr. SWEENEY. But the phrase "electrical equipment" in the bill might include an engine.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no; it cannot.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, while he has the floor I wish he would interpret the meaning of the word "institution."

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I do not know that I am prepared to give a definition of the word "institution"; but I would say the term, as used here, means a corporation, partnership, or firm organized to engage in business.

I hope this amendment will be voted down.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to get some information from both the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Alabama. I am entirely in sympathy with their idea of getting electricity into every home, but I do not want to help concerns, such as the New England Power Trust, to be able to borrow money from the R. F. C. when they are charging exorbitant rates, sometimes as much as 600-percent profit. I do not want to give them an opportunity to come to the R. F. C. and get more money to finance equipment they will sell to the people of Massachusetts and New England. What I want to know is whether under the provisions of this bill they can do that.

Mr. RANKIN. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts. Because of belief in this principle, when the Electric Home and Farm Authority was created and put into operation it was provided that before those power companies could get the benefit of its aid they must bring their rates down.

Mr. CONNERY. I agree with the gentleman there.

Mr. SWEENEY. That is not provided in the pending bill, though.

Mr. CONNERY. I understand thoroughly how you are bringing rates down, and I hope when the President gets this wonderful program going all over the United States that the power rates will be materially reduced; and there is every evidence that the President's sincere effort to help the people of the United States in this regard will be productive of great good; but what about the equipment; what is to prevent them from soaking the people on this equipment?

Mr. RANKIN. As I say, that will be under regulation.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to get directly to those who, for instance, will sell washing machines, electric refrigerators, and electric irons to the people in Tennessee.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman that this kind of an arrangement was made. The directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority called in the large manufacturers of equipment and said to them, "We are going to assist you as much as possible, but you must bring the prices of your equipments down so that the people can afford to pay for them." An electric stove, for instance, that formerly cost $135, today sells for about $57.50. They are making more money because they are selling more of them.

Mr. CONNERY. Here is what I mean. In my home city of Lynn, the Lynn Gas & Electric Co. are the ones that sell refrigerators, irons, and everything else that goes into the home, and I do not want them to get anything from the United States Government. They put in a lot of time and expended considerable money trying to defeat me for reelection to Congress because I was against them.

Mr. RANKIN. I presume this will or should have some safeguards thrown around it that before they can secure these loans they must at least bring their equipments down to a reasonable basis, and before they can be supplied through any power company or their subsidiaries they must bring power rates down to a reasonable basis.

Mr. CONNERY. Does the gentleman think then that the language now in the bill will help the people of the United States get cheaper electricity and cheaper equipment and will enable them to have electricity in their homes?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I think it will.

Mr. CONNERY. Then I am for it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Mr. BOILEAU moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the gentleman from Alabama would not permit me to offer my amendment in the ordinary way and have 5 minutes time as every Member is entitled to under the rules of the House. I consider this amendment very important, especially in view of the fact that in the debate this afternoon I stated I intended to offer the amendment. I do not believe it is going to facilitate the passage of the bill tonight any quicker.

I am offering the amendment in all seriousness. It is in conformity almost with the present law now in effect. Referring to the amendment I propose to offer and which will be offered, although I will not have an opportunity to address my remarks to the particular amendment, it will provide that the words "now established" be inserted on page 19, line 1, before the quotation marks. The law at the present time provides that the R. F. C. may make loans to industrial and commercial businesses that were established on January 1, 1934. My amendment allows just 1 more year, but provides that loans cannot be made to any industry excepting those industries that are now established. The obvious purpose of that is to prevent the R. F. C. from lending money to new industries.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman from Wisconsin is not talking upon his motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, may I have a ruling to determine whether I was in order in proceeding the way I did proceed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may discuss the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, this bill, in my opinion, carries a very bad provision and should be amended as I suggested; that is, to prevent loans being made to business establishments not now in existence. I do not offer this merely as a gesture in favor of the paper industry I referred to sometime ago. Other business enterprises are in the same position.

We find that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is trying to rehabilitate businesses that are now in existence, and I cannot see where there is any justification to encourage new business enterprises and to make loans to people who want to go into business to compete with people who are now in need of help. May I say furthermore to the Members from the Southern States, who have the paper industry in their States, that they have a great deal of responsibility on their shoulders. If you want to have other interests get money from the Federal Government to organize paper mills to compete with the paper mills now in existence in your State, that is your responsibility. This is not only a matter of interest to the State of Wisconsin and to the State of New York but to other States as well, who may have the paper manufacturing and pulp industry in their States. I submit that not only the paper industry is interested in this matter but all business should be interested.

It is a question, in my opinion, of saving the presently organized business institutions, and I do not believe there is justification for changing the name of this act from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act to the New Construction Finance Corporation Act. I maintain that if the Federal Government is going to make funds available for the purpose of strengthening the present business structure to enable them to employ men, to enable them to keep their feet on the ground, and to enable them to stay in business, the money should not be diverted for the purpose of encouraging people to take the reverse position from that which the Government has taken and put other businesses in direct competition with business establishments now in existence.

I ask the Members from the South to note this particularly. You may have in the beginning taken this as a sectional fight between the North and the South, but that was the furthest from my purpose at that time. I made the remark earlier in the day that the paper industry of the North was entitled to some protection. I say that the paper industry of the South is also entitled to some protection, and we should not encourage at this particular time more competition in an industry that is now overcome and suffering.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. Chairman, I do not share the apprehensions of the gentleman from Wisconsin, who is my friend and who comes from an adjoining State; nor would I knowingly do anything to harm the gentleman or his State.

You will recall that the original act empowered the R. F. C. to lend only to those businesses that were in existence on or before the 1st day of January 1934. Some suggestion has been made to strike that date from the act and permit the R. F. C. to lend to businesses that may be organized after the 1st of January 1934, with the suggestion from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEEN] that there is a possibility of the R. F. C. permitting some sundry millions of dollars to be used for the development of pulp and paper mills in Georgia.

While I live above the Mason and Dixon's line, I am entirely in favor of this provision whereby this pioneering may be done in the South, and I will tell you why. Last year we imported $170,000,000 worth of pulp from other countries, including Finland, Sweden, Norway, and principally, Canada. There is a reason for this. In these countries they have spruce that has a small resinous content, and consequently it can be fabricated into pulp and paper with a minimum of difficulty. They have carried on some experiments at Savannah, Ga., and they find that slash pine, which will yield about 2 cords to the acre per year, will make the finest kind of paper. It can even be developed into rayon at a very cheap price.

Now, here is a singular thing about the experiments that have been conducted. They can convert Georgia slash pine into paper at a conversion cost of $19 a ton, whereas it costs $28 in Canada and almost $43 in the United States at the present time. This is the reason why more than 70 percent of all our pulp is imported from foreign countries at this time.

Here is an opportunity to save this business for our country. I do not mind confessing that I am very decidedly a nationalist and I believe that in proportion as we can pioneer, we carry out the basic purposes of this act to provide loans to industry and give employment to our people.

If we can develop a new industry in the South, ultimately, to take care of much of the land that has been worn out and eroded and can no longer be given over to the cultivation of cotton, I see no reason why we should not do it now as a part of a 10- or 15-year planning process whereby we will ultimately save them from difficulty and from a very acute and serious problem.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not the gentleman think it is rather inconsistent for the Government to have these various measures restricting industry and at the same time lend money to engage in industry in competition with an industry that is now suffering?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say to the gentleman that he confuses administrative and political policy with what ought to be considered as an economic policy. This matter of developing new industries is very essentially economic. If any restrictions are imposed upon existing paper mills whereby they find it difficult at the present time to get along, I would say they are administrative restrictions that should be lifted, but do not go to the fundamentals of this proposal.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I call attention to the fact that there is nothing in the language of this amendment that refers to the paper industry. That is a matter, of course, of some concern to me, but it is also a matter of concern to me that we are lending money to industries to compete with industries now having a difficult time standing up and doing business.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me say that this is entirely permissive legislation. This does not direct or make it mandatory that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should advance any money for this purpose. It merely provides that if it is good business, then it shall be done.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] to strike out the enacting clause.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 19, line 1, after the quotation marks, insert "now established."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 2, after the word "sale", insert "of farm equipment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 10 insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That the first paragraph of section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is amended by adding after the first sentence thereof the following: 'or where the major portion of the investment in such industrial or commercial business (to develop the point of production) has been made prior to January 1, 1934.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 19, line 16, after the word "exceed", strike out "$300,000,000" and insert "$500,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. In all cases where the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall hold any bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of any borrower under section 201 (a) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, whether heretofore or hereafter acquired, and such borrower shall be able and willing to substitute or cause to be substituted therefor any other bonds or other evidences of indebtedness, whether of the same or longer maturities or otherwise differing, which, in the judgment of said Reconstruction Finance Corporation, are more desirable than those so held, the said Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to accept such bonds or other evidences of indebtedness in exchange and substitution for such bonds or other evidences of indebtedness so held by it, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon with such borrower at the time of, or in contemplation of, such exchange and substitution.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 8, after the word "are" strike out the word "more" and insert the word "as."
After the word "desirable" strike out the word "than" and insert the word "as."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered in all seriousness. I shall speak of this from a practical standpoint. I assume the desire of the committee and of the House is that, where a borrower has collateral up as security and desires to substitute some other collateral therefor, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should have the privilege of accepting in lieu of that collateral, other collateral just as good. We should not require the Corporation to demand collateral of a greater value than that originally placed to secure the loan.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there will be any objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well. I would like, however, to call the attention of the House to this:

I had a practical experience with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in which I asked for a loan of $500,000, which would liquidate itself within 12 or 14 months, and for which I offered collateral of $1,600,000. This loan would have placed some 4,000 people on the pay roll, which would have paid them a minimum wage of 32½ cents an hour. I sat on the doorstep of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for some 8 or 9 days awaiting the acceptance of that application. The undertaking had to do with processing farm crops and was of a nature which required prompt action in order to give the farmers a chance to plant the crop before the time of planting expired or before the season was gone. The work had to be done then or not at all. The appraisals were made, and elaborate details were filed, and all requirements of the R. F. C. were complied with insofar as furnishing data was concerned, and when the loan was denied the Corporation did not extend the courtesy of stating why the loan was not granted. The only information I received was a very brief telegram stating "loan denied."

In behalf of private industry in this country, which desires fair treatment on the applications which it sends in, I hope something will be done in setting up administrative rules at the R. F. C. office so that when a legitimate loan is turned down the man who desires to borrow the money will have a reasonable statement from the R. F. C. as to why the loan is denied, because when loans are turned down as the one I referred to was turned down, and without any reason at all being given, it breaks down the confidence of the borrowing public in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is not fair treatment because in banking circles it is very difficult to negotiate a loan after you have been denied it by some financial institution, and particularly when you cannot give an answer as to why the loan was denied by the previous firm who was approached in respect to borrowing the money.

I hope the members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if they are listening, will bear that in mind.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. FORD of California. Did the gentleman go to a bank before he went to the R. F. C.?

Mr. CRAWFORD. We had the matter up with the banks, but they felt they should not make loans without having what might be termed "liquid collateral", as this loan could not have been paid before 12 to 14 months or until the crops had been grown, processed, and placed on the market. The banks felt they should keep their money invested in more liquid collateral or investments, such as Government bonds, instead of lending it to private industry in this manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans upon sufficient security to recognized and established corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the business of mining, milling, or smelting ores. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered also to make loans to corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the development of a quartz ledge, or vein, or other ore body, or placer deposit, containing gold or silver, or gold and silver, when, in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, there is sufficient reason to believe that, through the use of such loan in the development of a lodge, ledge, or vein, or mineral deposit, or placer gravel deposit, there will be developed a sufficient quantity of ore, or placer deposits of a sufficient value to pay a profit upon mining operations: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 shall be loaned to any corporation, individual, or partnership, for such development purposes: Provided further, That there shall not be allocated or made available for such development loans a sum in excess of $10,000,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a correction of a clerical error in the bill. In line 10, on page 21, the figures "$10,000" should be "$20,000", and I ask that that be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Page 21, line 3, after the word "gold", strike out the word "or", insert a comma, and after the word "silver" add the words "or tin."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate at this late hour to encroach upon the patience of the House, and I would not do it except that this is a very important amendment. The Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House has been investigating the tin situation for the last 6 months through a subcommittee authorized by the Congress. The fact is that we import $70,000,000 worth of tin each year. There is a world-wide tin monopoly which controls the price of tin. We are the largest consumers of tin in the world. We consume over 50 percent of all of the tin produced and consumed. It appears that there are many possible tin deposits throughout the United States, in most of the States of the Union, but particularly in Alabama, North and South Carolina, North and South Dakota, New Mexico, and California.

This amendment merely makes available $20,000 for development purposes. By making this $20,000 available we may discover sufficient tin to make it minable. We might thereby save 10 percent of $70,000,000 or more. There is no reason to believe that these tin deposits do not exist in the United States. I believe they do, in North and South Carolina and in Alabama, and in addition it is reported they are present in about 20 other States. I have not the time to mention all the States, but in view of the fact that the matter contained in this section was brought up in the Banking and Currency Committee—I don't know why as I was not there at the time—it seems to me that this is an opportune time to offer the amendment that I have, to include tin. I have spoken to the sponsor of the original amendment in the committee [Mr. SCRUGHAM] and he has agreed to accept my amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How much tin is produced in the United States?

Mr. FISH. That is just it, very little.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Less than 1 percent.

Mr. FISH. Just about 1 percent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Less than 1 percent.

Mr. FISH. Very well. Less than 1 percent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And 37 percent of all tin used here is reclaimed tin.

Mr. FISH. Certainly. The point is that we import $70,000,000 worth of tin. The point is that the Congress of the United States authorized an investigation of the situation for the purpose of national defense and to develop, if possible, a tin industry in the United States. It is essential to develop and encourage domestic production of tin and not be at the mercy of foreign nations. We are in a dangerous position without any minable tin. We are absolutely powerless without it. We have no means of getting it except from Great Britain, Holland, Bolivia, or China unless we discover sufficient quantities in our own country, and for that reason we should accept this amendment. There is only $20,000 involved. There is no partisanship in this, and I hope the amendment will prevail and that it will provide sufficient sums to promote the development of tin in the United States.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina) there were ayes 83 and noes 32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 21, line 3, after the word "silver", insert the words "and copper."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the great State of Michigan is one of the largest copper-producing States in the world. At the present time, in what we in Michigan call the "Northern Peninsula of Michigan", the mining industry is at its lowest ebb in several generations of mining, due to the fact that large ore deposits have been found in South Africa and other parts of the world, which I am told, can be mined much more cheaply than our copper in Michigan and that in many other of the copper-producing States of the United States.

It is only natural that we should include copper in this bill, because I am told that silver is a byproduct of copper. It would be rather inconsistent to include silver without including copper. What I am trying to do for my State, and what many of you from other copper-producing States of the United States want to do for your States, is to take these miners from the welfare rolls and put them back into the mines with a living wage. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will but give some encouragement to the mining companies which are trying to hold these experienced men together to do their mining for them, we will take probably 80 percent of the men, women, and children in the Northern Peninsula of Michigan and other States of the Union from the welfare rolls and we will give them employment in gainful occupation.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. What the gentleman says applies particularly to the district which I have the honor to represent, which produces two-thirds of the lead and zinc produced in the United States, and where 27 percent of our present population is on relief.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am glad to have the gentleman's comments.

Now, we want to do something to relieve unemployment. This is how we can do it in these particular districts of the United States.

I ask favorable consideration of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were ayes 38 and noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 20, line 24, after the word "smelting", insert the words "coal, minerals, and ore."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAY) there were—ayes 14, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 21, line 15, insert a new section, entitled "Section 12–A", as follows:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in addition to the foregoing powers, is authorized and empowered to make loans to any institution the principal business of which is that of lending money to taxpayers at an interest rate not exceeding 4 percent per annum, plus a service charge of not in excess of 2 percent, for the payment of real-estate taxes, water rates, or special assessments on real estate against the security of tax liens or any interest therein held by the taxing authority."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has said he did not especially object to this; that it could be administered. I am not going to offer any opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 20, line 24, after the word "ores" and the period, strike out the balance of the section.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this section permits the R. F. C. to grubstake all kinds of prospectors for gold and silver. It seems to me an absolutely ridiculous thing, and I have offered this amendment to strike out that part of the section. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the gentleman see in this section the implied necessity of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's embodying mining experts to accompany prospectors in order to make up their minds whether the lode, or ledge, or quartz is an ordinarily profitable prospect?

Mr. TABER. If they were going to exercise any prudence whatever, they would have to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 33, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 20, line 24, after the word "ores", insert "or mining and/or developing merchantable clays."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the Tennessee Valley Authority through its investigation has discovered in northeastern Mississippi, and possibly in adjoining States, a tremendous store of ceramic clays, from which pottery, china, and so forth are made. Practically all this material used in this country today comes from foreign countries. I would say 90 percent of it comes from foreign countries. Not only do we have the raw material there but also we have the electric energy necessary to develop it. In order to develop ceramic clays an enormous amount of cheap electrical energy is required. This we have, as I say, in abundance; and already enterprises are looking to this development which will mean a great deal not only to that section of the country but to the country as a whole.

I sincerely trust this amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we have gotten into a rather ridiculous situation. I believe in protecting a bill as well as it is possible to protect it, but we have reached the point now when we are tacking on every kind of amendment we can think of; and the Members, without paying very much attention, are voting first "yes" and then "no" without any real consideration of what is in the different amendments. We tackled on tin, and yet we just refused to tack on copper. Now we are asked to tack on ceramic clays. We have an opportunity to tack on this, that, and the other thing.

We tacked on an amendment to lend taxpayers money with which to pay their taxes. Why not tack on an amendment lending money to a lot of other people who cannot pay their bills and allow 1, 2, 3, or 4 percent interest?

It seems to me that the Membership ought to stop and consider what is being done to this bill, and in order to get rid of what has been added to it we might just as well strike out the whole section without doing the bill the slightest harm. At the present time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation authorizes the lending of money for mining purposes. If we strike out the whole section, all we do is to leave things as they are and merely eliminate some of the amendments which have been attached today, which the committee had no chance to consider, and which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation officials had no chance to discuss with the committee and tell whether or not they were in favor.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. I notice in section 14, the first sentence, it is provided that loans shall be made on sufficient security. When you come to the second sentence providing loans for prospecting, there is no mention of security, and it says the loans should be made upon the judgment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as to the possibility of finding ore. I believe that both provisions ought to have a requirement for security, if they are to stand.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Membership of the House merely in the interest of orderly legislation. Let us strike the whole section out and leave the question of loans for mining interests in status quo. I think this exhibition of offering amendment after amendment that the committee never has had a chance to consider and that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has never been questioned on is an exhibition of futility, perhaps induced by the lateness of the hour and the fact that there are few Members here, and those Members are tired. I say again that I believe in the interest of passing the proper kind of bill and in the interest of protecting orderly legislation, we should strike out section 14 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOLLISTER) there were—ayes 48, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 13. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to use as general funds all receipts arising from the sale or retirement of any of the stock, notes, bonds, or other securities acquired by it pursuant to any provision of law.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: Page 21, line 20, after the word "law" insert a new section to read as follows:

"SECTION 15. No part of any of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall be loaned to any railroad, insurance company, mortgage or loan association, bank, or any business institution, in which any member or employee of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has any financial interest or connection of any kind, either directly or indirectly."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take the time of the House to explain the amendment. It speaks for itself and merely states that any individual who is an officer or an employee of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation cannot borrow money under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law. The amendment speaks for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 34, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment, as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALDWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1175) to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEAGALL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, as I am attending the sessions of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which is holding hearings this week, I desire to briefly state for the RECORD my reasons for favoring this legislation.

I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] that in the past 2 years, since 1932, we have succeeded in changing the character of the R. F. C., which was originally designed to aid only banks, railroads, and insurance corporations. In fact, it was claimed that R. F. C. stood for "Recovery for Charley", meaning for Charley Dawes, on account of the loan of $92,000,000 which he received for his big bank in Chicago during the last national administration. We have changed the functions and scope of the institution to make it one of real service to all the people.

The distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], has called attention to the fact that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has authorized loans of $1,045,000,000 for the relief of depositors in closed banks and that in the last 6 months it has loaned $252,000,000 and distributed $241,000,000 for relief of depositors. This is relief which I joined with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] in fighting for in the last Congress, and our efforts were partly successful to that extent, which has proved a blessing to many citizens in my district in southwest Washington.

LOANS TO PRIVATE INDUSTRY

However, in my opinion, the liberalized provision for direct loans to private industry is the most important in the bill. In the bill which we passed last year we authorized loans upon "adequate security", and as a result the Corporation has not been able to make very many loans, having loaned out only about $34,000,000 of the maximum authorization of $300,000,000. This situation which, in my opinion, is due to no fault of Hon. Jesse Jones and his associates has seriously impeded business recovery. This requirement has now been modified to authorize loans upon such security as in the judgment of the Board will "reasonably" assure repayment of loans. This will render it possible for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to adopt a more liberal loaning policy and thereby provide worthy industrial firms with the financial assistance necessary to carry on and expand their operations. This result is needed more than any other one thing in our country today. We can never have any permanent recovery in business in the United States on a basis of giving citizens "a few hours of weekly work cutting grass, raking leaves, or picking up papers in the public parks", to quote the words of President Franklin D. Roosevelt in his message of January 4, 1935.

We must provide normal employment at decent wages in the industries and factories in every community in order to restore consumer purchasing power throughout the Nation. In order to bring this about we must finance the pay rolls of many worthy industrial enterprises, which did not and cannot secure funds from the private banking institutions which have practically ceased to make loans to their customers. I have a number of industrial firms in my district which have been successfully managed in the past by experienced owners who thoroughly understand the business in which they are engaged, who stand ready and willing to give remunerative employment to many of their former employees but who are not able to do so for lack of funds. I sincerely hope that the amendment which we have made in the law today will make it possible for these employers of labor to obtain loans to carry on their operations. I hope that the liberalization in the law will give an impetus to industrial employment in every congressional district in the country, which will afford our only avenue of egress from this depression.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill as we have amended it in the Committee on Banking and Currency should become the law. Nobody here questions that the work of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be extended for the 2 years provided in the bill. Nobody anywhere questions that this work should be continued—nobody, at least, who knows what the Corporation has done and knows how much more and how much better it will be enabled to do under the added provisions carried by this bill. My associates on the committee and many others outside the committee know that I have not been and am not now an unqualified endorser of all that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has done; it may be I shall not care to be an underwriter of everything that hereafter the Corporation may do. But I have not been an unfriendly critic. It has been and it will remain my desire that all the possible good shall attend the Corporation's efforts.

It has been made clear that some of the things many of us have desired which were not done were made difficult and in instances impossible from the manner in which the Corporation was hedged about by the laws under which it operated. We have undertaken in amendments to this bill to remove some of these trammels. We have undertaken in these amendments to give the Finance Corporation authority that is broader in certain directions in which its movements have been restricted.

In section 5 (c) the committee has brought to you an amendment that to my mind will result in one of the most signal and wide-spread benefits the Corporation will ever have to its credit. We have attempted to open the way by which some millions of owners of real-estate mortgage bonds can recover a substantial portion of the billions in money they have invested in securities of that type. Unless the way be found to make possible that these investors shall be able before a great while to realize, their investments will come very near to total loss. Already, as we know, devious processes are active in dubious hands over the country to acquire these bonds at a small fraction of their true value. Even in the face of the tremendous collapse of the enterprises upon which these securities were based, 5 or even 10 cents on the dollar is at once an absurd and pitiful shaving of value from these securities in the only market they can have for the present. If this provision, in which we have made for a reestablishment, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of a normal mortgage market, be availed of and given operation, we shall be able to save to some of these millions of investors some billions of their investments.

The plight of the greater number of the owners of these mortgage bonds is most unfortunate. They were not of the wealthy classes to whom an investment in these securities did not mean the staking of all they had on a single venture. They were people who for the most part had put their eggs in one basket when they purchased these bonds. There are thousands of these people in my own district. They are people whose means were limited and who were seeking good investment of the modest substance they possessed at the time.

In large numbers they were school teachers, mostly women no longer young, widows owning small estates, retired farmers of moderate resources, and others who in about the same degree were in like circumstances. The greater part of what they had went into these investments. The investments looked good at the time. By all reasonable, if not ultra-conservative, standards of that day the securities appeared to be sound and the investments safe. The collapse of values upon such a scale and to such a depth as actually happened was not foreseen. It could not have been foreseen by these investors, and it certainly was not apprehended by those who headed the enterprises upon which these investments were made.

Still underlying these investments is potential value. A large portion of the value thought to exist when the enterprises were advanced and when the investments were made is still there. Sooner or later it will be recovered by those who may happen to own the bonds at the time recovery is made. The country is not always to remain in its present condition. If we can do something to effect a reestablishment of the normal mortgage market, much will be done to restore the values underlying these investments. It will enable these distressed investors to recover a large part of the money they have put into the securities for which today, if they can sell at all, they are unable to obtain more than 5 or 10 cents on every dollar. If we assist to bring this about through the measures we are now considering, we shall raise from a condition of helplessness and distress a great army of people who will otherwise be kept for the remainder of their lives naked to the storms of adversity which now beat upon them.

This help we propose will not merely aid those who have been afflicted by losses and are unable to help themselves. It will have positive consequences in the general revival we are striving to bring about. Business will feel its impulse, and all will share in the good made possible by this act. I will have the candor to say to you, however, that first ones in my concern for the benefit that I believe will flow from this act are those who have been stripped by the collapse of the mortgage market and the disappearance of value from their investments. I know the class of people who for the most part have been the victims and are now the sufferers from these conditions. They had been the industrious, the hard-working, the prudent, the thrifty. In the day of their vigor and opportunity they had sought to take hostage against the sunset period of their lives and to lay by something for the inevitable time when they could no longer work and earn and store up. Throughout their capable days they were laboring and saving to secure themselves against forced dependency when the shadows of the closing scene would begin to fall across their paths. Into these investments went their modest substance. They thought it safe. They believed it promised well. None had misgivings. They wanted security for their little hoards. They believed they had found it. And who was there, in that confident time, who did not believe it? They deserve consideration, and we should grant it in the practical way we now submit to your judgment.

This is not a proposal to spend money that will never come back. It is based on exactly the same presumption running all through the R. F. C. loans that the money will be repaid, just as an immense volume of such loans already has been repaid. If we do this thing, we shall rekindle hope in the bosoms of millions who now despair. We shall effect a vast and wide-spread distribution of means to a class of people who but for this thing will be distressed and in need of relief from some source to the end of their days. It is in behalf of these that I speak.

To one other point of this bill I desire to direct your attention. It is the amendment that is purposed to strengthen and enlarge the provision we made in our last session to give help to the smaller industries. That provision has seemed not to work with the effect we had in mind and intended it should have. The Finance Corporation has made heavy loans to various industries operating on the larger scale. Little has gone to industries operating in narrower fields and in more modest volume.

Let us bear in mind that it is not the gigantic industrial enterprises, hugely capitalized and employing people by the tens of thousands, that make up the backbone of employment in this country. The larger industries, I grant you, must keep going to furnish employment and supply trade with commodities and to meet general demand for necessaries. But "Big Steel" and General Electric and Bethlehem and other great employers, immense as they are, do not provide work for and pay wages to the larger mass of those employed in our manufacturing industry.

Same facts procured from the Bureau of the Census sharply illumine this point. The figures are for 1929, our peak year in industrial activity, output, and employment. It is the latest year for which figures are available, and it is shown that in 1929 there were 208,241 manufacturing and printing and publishing establishments, none among them employing more than 500 wage earners, in which altogether 5,501,763 people were employed. In the same year 206 establishments, each with more than 2,500 on its pay rolls, employed a total of 1,015,254 wage earners. In other words, those establishments which employed only 500 or less had at work five times as many wage earners as those employing 2,500 and on up into the tens of thousands who were provided with work and wages by Steel, Electric, General Motors, Ford, and other mammoth enterprises. The larger enterprises in many instances entered the era of depression with cash reserves and other details of good financial position which enabled them to weather the storm. The smaller industries, with few exceptions, had no such advantage. Some of them have gone by the board. Others are still struggling. Among these are many which will be saved if help can be given. And if they can be saved and kept going by means to tide them over until the revival of business gives them support, it will mean employment and independence for millions of industrious and willing men and women in industry. Without the diversity given to our general industry by these smaller manufacturing enterprises, our times would have been much harder and our recovery far more difficult.

As it has been amended by the committee and reported here, I trust this bill may be passed by this House. I trust it will please the Senate to accept this result of our labors, which have been painstaking, conscientious, and purposed to effect the widest possible good directly to many people and, in its broader consequences, to all the country.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill comes before the House with the unanimous report of the Banking and Currency Committee.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has now been in existence for 3 years. It constituted really the first important piece of emergency legislation written to aid in bringing about a revival of industry in this country. The law was first enacted in the last year of Mr. Hoover's administration, with the life of 1 year, and since that time its life has been extended on two different occasions for 1 year at a time.

There has been more or less criticism of the workings of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation since it became a law. Charges have been made that it was only designed to help banks and big business and that it was not an important factor in bringing about better economic and industrial conditions in any way.

The general view as to the efficacy of the Reconstruction Act as a means of helping to bring about better times has changed, and it is submitted that the best-informed opinion today is to the effect that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has played an important part in our recovery program.

The Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has handled billions of Government money through loans to various agencies in an effort to put up the strongest fight possible against the forces of the depression.

To be exact, since the establishment of the R. F. C. in February 1932, during Mr. Hoover's administration, to January 1, 1935, loans have been authorized to the amount of $8,964,712,929, of which sum $784,266,128 was withdrawn and $6,848,073,233 was disbursed or loaned.

It thus appears that there are about two billions in loans authorized that have not been disbursed. This sum is made up of loans canceled or those which have not all been called for. Of the loans authorized from the beginning of the existence of the Corporation to the present date, about $2,780,000,000 were made during the Hoover administration and $6,171,000,000 during Mr. Roosevelt's administration.

One reason for the increase in loans under the Roosevelt administration was the authority granted by the Seventy-fourth Congress to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid in releasing depositors' money in closed banks by making loans on bank assets, and also the authority given to the Corporation to strengthen the capital structures of banks throughout the Nation by the purchase of preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures of these institutions.

The actual disbursements to closed banks amounted to $761,704,109, of which sum more than $300,000,000 has been repaid. The actual amount of money advanced for purchased stocks and capital notes to rehabilitate banking structures of this country amounts to about a billion dollars.

While it is true that the banks and railroads have been the biggest borrowers from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it is also true that thousands of other business institutions have received aid; in fact, something like 20,000 individual loans have been made by the Corporation.

Several hundred million dollars have been furnished by the Corporation for relief work under Executive orders, and it has about $800,000,000 on hand at the present time.

One gratifying feature of the report recently filed by Mr. Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Corporation, is the showing made on repayments of loans. Of the total sum loaned over $6,000,000,000—51 percent—has been repaid, and if we leave out of consideration the loans to banks, which are long-term loans, the total repayments made to date equal 61 percent of the sums loaned.

At the last session of Congress the original law was modified so as to permit loans to be made to industry, particularly to the smaller industries of the country. Both Federal Reserve banks and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were authorized to make these loans. At that time a survey of the country had been made, and it was reported that something like $600,000,000 could be used advantageously by the smaller industries of the country, and some of the larger ones also, to keep men employed and to put more men on the pay rolls.

The authority given in the last session of Congress to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve banks to make loans to industry has not worked out satisfactorily for some reason or other. Both institutions to date have loaned to industries only about $80,000,000.

It is stated that the failure of the Federal Reserve banks and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make more loans to industry is due entirely to the fact that the present law is too rigid in its requirement as to the securities necessary. The existing law declares that such loans shall be made on adequate security; that is, security which would make certain repayment of the loan. The purpose in writing this provision into the old law was to have these loaning institutions make loans to industry with the idea of keeping them running and employing men and women, and even if the Goverment did lose some of such loans, it might just as well lose them through such a method, as otherwise the same money might go out of the Treasury for relief purposes.

In the pending bill this provision of the old law has been amended so as to provide that the security shall be such as in the judgment of the Board will reasonably assure repayment. It is the opinion of the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Mr. Jones, that under the language just quoted, it will be possible for his Corporation to be more liberal in making loans to industry.

While the Corporation in the past has loaned considerable money to the railroads of this country, the Board is of the opinion that there will be but little ultimate loss to the Government, and this loss will result from the deplorable financial condition of a few of the 58 railroads which have been borrowers from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended in this bill, the Corporation will be privileged to extend further loans to railroads, which may help materially in the reorganization and consolidation of the roads. While the railroads have been loaned something like $400,000,000 to date, the security collateral that has been pledged for these loans is said to be worth in excess of $600,000,000.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is one of the recovery agencies which is no additional expense to the taxpayers of this country. The Corporation has its principal set-up in Washington, but it functions also through 32 other agencies scattered throughout the country. The operating expenses of the Corporation have been less than one-half of 1 percent on loans and investment authorized. During the period of its existence the Corporation has made clear above all operating expenses $65,000,000, which is certainly a very good showing.

It would seem that from the experience which the Corporation has had to date in using Government funds to aid what might be called practically the whole industrial and agricultural life of the country, that with the bill as now amended the Corporation will be able to function more beneficially, not so much in avoiding all losses of any small loans but rather in carrying out the fundamental purpose of the legislation, and that is to help business, railroads, banks, insurance companies, agriculture, and, in fact, all lines of business, to keep on functioning, so as to make it possible to put more of our unemployed to work.

GENERAL PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the World Court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, no Representative in the Congress of the United States wants to assume the role of a Senator, and certainly I do not desire to trespass upon territory reserved for legislators at the other end of the Capitol. However, it becomes the duty of every American citizen, both in and out of Congress, to lift his voice when the sovereignty of his country is threatened and its security is imperiled.

At this particular hour our Nation's safety is at stake. The future of our glorious Republic hangs in the balance. Today the welfare of our posterity will be determined. Either America will remain America, steering clear of the pitfalls of intrigue and the political machinations of European powers, refusing to adhere to the World Court, or else America will ignore the lessons of history, reject the traditions of our fathers, join the League of Nations through its Court, to become the easy prey of the combined jealousies of selfish European nations.

For many years I have consistently, continuously, conscientiously, and strenuously fought America's entrance into the World Court. I studied in Germany and England after the war. I have since traveled through the different countries of Europe—most of them for the third or fourth time. I think I know the feeling in those countries toward the United States of America. After spending our blood and treasure unselfishly on foreign soil to help our allies win the war we were indiscreet enough to advance them $11,000,000,000 in loans. These loans, with the single exception of the one to little Finland, have been flagrantly repudiated by our debtor nations. The only appreciation we have received from those we assisted has been the finger of scorn and the tongue of contempt. For our charity we have been paid in vituperation, and the only recompense for our generosity has been the insulting epithet of "Uncle Shylock."

Now, when the American people are in the throes of the most prolonged and devastating depression in our history, while we are still suffering hysteria, it is proposed by the same idealistic, imaginary, impractical, "brain-trust" professors, who continue confusion at home, to add chaos to our woes by pushing us, against our will, into the League of Nations via the World Court. God help us today to ignore them and their teachings and return to the advice of Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, and the other founders of this free Government—the first ever established among men.

In the past the Democrats have charged the Republicans with being narrow nationalists, dumb isolationists, provincial cranks, unsympathetic to the suffering of humanity, and unwilling to play our part in world affairs. If putting America first, though always considering the rights of others, if wanting to live in peace and amity with all nations, but ever cautious and careful to protect our own liberties and to defend our American institutions against dangers from without and weaknesses from within, if demanding only what is just—and no more—and at the same time being generous and helpful to others—if this be narrow nationalism and isolation, then all Republicans are guilty of the charge, and proud of it.

Modern inventions have made the world smaller, and new methods of rapid transportation have brought countries closer together. Today nations are largely interdependent. The economic health and political stability of one depends largely upon the economic health and political stability of another. There is an exchange of ideas as well as of goods. Because of our great wealth and power we must necessarily take interest in world affairs. No nation of any importance can or desires to live unto itself alone. But America does not want to become entangled in Old World politics or European alliances. Our fathers came to this new land of freedom to get away from such things. America will help Europe and any nation all she can, but she will do it by example, suggestions, and cooperation rather than by dictation, compulsion, and active participation. Though we are not isolated, the indisputable fact is that 3,000 miles of deep blue water are between America and Europe; and, personally, I find it very comforting to muse upon that fact. The inherited prejudices, the bitter jealousies, the entrenched interests, the historic hatreds existing between nations of the Old World are not our problems. Europe, and not America, must solve them. We have no business sticking our nose in where it does not belong unless we are particularly desirous of getting it smashed. Because of our remoteness and disinterestedness, Europe will listen to us more than if we became involved in her quarrels.

Though this international tribunal is referred to as the "World Court," it is, in reality, the League's Court; and by entering it, we enter the League of Nations through the back door. It is amazing that after the American people so overwhelmingly voted against our entrance into the League of Nations in 1920, the President would at this particular time, when we are faced with so many baffling and complex domestic problems, ask the Senate to sanction our becoming a member of this offspring of the League of Nations. It only goes to corroborate the fact that this administration still prefers to try experiments rather than follow experience. However, it is gratifying that there are so many patriotic and well-informed Democrats in the United States Senate who will never surrender the sovereignty or impair the safety of America by joining this Court, but will continue to uphold the Constitution and follow the advice of the Father of our Country, in his Farewell Address:

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. * * * The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. * * * Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our interests. * * * Why quit our own stand to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice? (Sept. 17, 1796.)

EMERGENCY FEED FOR LIVESTOCK IN THE NORTHWEST

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the relief situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, since reporting to this House the conditions in the Northwest, with respect to the feed situation—see speech under date of January 21—no material change has been made in the feed situation in North Dakota. The two impediments that prevent farmers from securing feed from the Government still are present and are blocking all efforts to get this mountain of feed—belonging to the Government—to the starving livestock.

I desire once more, Mr. Speaker, to call this important matter to the attention of this House. The two reasons why livestock is perishing in North Dakota now, and have been for 30 days, are:

The emergency crop and feed loan section, with L. J. Paulson, regional manager, office Minneapolis, Minn., and in charge of feed in North Dakota, demands that before any feed is furnished that the mortgagees must be consulted and nondisturbance agreements obtained from them. The purpose evidently is to prevent the mortgagees from foreclosing on the stock in the spring after the Government had fed the stock through the winter. In other words, the Government will not trust these mortgagees to do the right thing. The Government is about right on this conclusion, but let me call your attention to the fact that these nondisturbance agreements are not and never were necessary in North Dakota, where we have a moratorium that makes all foreclosures unlawful. They could not foreclose if they wanted to. The mortgagees are prevented in North Dakota from disturbing the livestock, hence these agreements in that State are unnecessary. In addition to that the Government has an equitable lien on any livestock fed, superior to any mortgage lien, which any equity court in the State would uphold. The Government is, therefore, perfectly safe in advancing the feed.

What is the result of the method now followed? If a mortgagee for any reason, pure meanness or otherwise, refuses to sign a nondisturbance agreement, the feed cannot be obtained; and the result is that the livestock dies in the very sight of great stacks of Government hay. I desire to submit a few actual cases of this kind.

One Arthur Scofield, Devils Lake, N. Dak., needed feed for his stock. He owed the Northern Investment Co., Devils Lake, a mortgage; and this company refused to sign a nondisturbance agreement unless Scofield would deliver to them some of the cattle to apply on his debt to them. When the agreement could not be obtained, L. J. Paulson wrote Scofield as follows:

We are obliged to inform you that your feed application, dated September 26, 1934, has been disapproved by the examiner in this office, and we are therefore returning your papers.

That ended the relief, and the cattle are starving. Scofield now says to me, on January 24, 1935:

If I can't get feed they (cattle) will be soon dropping off. I have a fine milch cow that don't give enough to feed her calf. With no stock hardly in the country, it seems to me a small bunch of milch cows would be worth saving. This is all our living, and it seems hard to force us to live on relief, which we will now have to do. Perhaps because I must drive 4 miles to work when it is 30 below zero and can't do it is the reason why I can't get feed.

ARTHUR SCOFIELD.

A letter from Mr. Nick Kohm, of Werner, N. Dak., states:

Now, Mr. BURDICK, is there any way we can get help? If there is a way, please be so kind and do it right away. All we have for our stock is thistles; and if we get nothing else, we are sure to lose all our stock.

In this case the reason why Mr. Kohm cannot get feed is that the First National Bank of Killdeer, a mortgagee, will not release unless Kohm will deliver over to the bank certain machinery upon which they have a mortgage. And the letter of the First National Bank on file here states:

I have also been informed that if you will make out an affidavit that the tractor, thresher, and manure spreader is not entirely necessary for you to farm that you will get your feed.

This is signed by the vice president of the First National Bank of Killdeer.

Mr. Kohm writes that this machinery is necessary if he is to continue in the farming business. He says in regard to the tractor that—

My horses are now nothing but skin and bones and I have no feed, and I will have nothing to put the land in with except the tractor. I asked the Minneapolis Moline Plow Co. to sign a nondisturbance agreement, but they will not do it, so we are sitting out here at 35° below zero without having enough feed for the stock, but the Government has enough feed out here but we can't get it. Now, please, Mr. BURDICK, if there is any way to help us, please do it right away.

The seed and feed loan division operating out of Minneapolis have demanded of S. S. Blocher, of York, N. Dak., that he give a mortgage on the 1935 crops for seed obtained in prior years. This Mr. Blocher refused to do, upon which the field agent of the Government said:

If you do not sign this mortgage, you might be refused further feed loans.

And Mr. Blocher writes to me to find out what to do. His livestock will starve, and he wants to know if he must surrender and comply with the demand of seed and feed loan division at Minneapolis. While the Farm Credit Administration has taken the stand here at Washington that it is not necessary to mortgage the 1935 crop for prior seed advances, yet the division office at Minneapolis, managed by L. J. Paulson, is still sandbagging the farmers into giving mortgages for prior advances, and this last one is a new scheme to coerce and browbeat the farmers into giving this mortgage for fear that feed for their starving livestock will be taken away. There has been so much trouble on this source from the Minneapolis office that the removal of L. J. Paulson as director of the feed and seed loan division seems to be the only way to end this trouble. I have been slow to form a conclusion as to who is responsible for this determined effort to sew up the 1935 crops with all prior advances, but the evidence is overwhelmingly here now, in my possession, that it is not the Farm Credit Administration at Washington, but that it is the responsibility of Mr. L. J. Paulson and no one else, and for that reason I publicly ask for his removal from the position.

The attitude of the Farm Credit Administration on sums to be advanced for feed over $25, and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration on sums up to $25, in demanding a nondisturbance agreement to be signed by the mortgagee—when they will not sign—is responsible for the starvation of cattle in the very sight of mountains of Government hay. Why cannot this Congress either interpret the old act or pass a new act giving these administrations directions which will prevent the starvation of stock? Why cannot this Congress consider House Joint Resolution 86, introduced by me on January 14, 1935, and now before the Committee on Rules? Why will this Congress refuse the prayers of our Chaplain, who so brilliantly each day calls attention to the words of the Master: "Love thy neighbor as thyself; do unto others as ye would they should do unto you"?

I have exhausted every means at my command to draw the attention of the Nation to starving livestock in the Northwest and the impediment in the administration which causes it.

When I complain to either the Federal Emergency Relief Administration or to the Farm Credit Administration, my complaint, with supporting affidavits, are forwarded back to the Federal relief administrator in North Dakota or to the feed and seed division in Minneapolis. On the average it takes 3 weeks for these complaints to make the rounds, and finally I am again advised that releases or nondisturbance agreements must be obtained from the mortgagees before the farmers can secure feed. In the meantime the livestock dies.

The mortgagees care nothing for humanity and the words of Christ; they want and take and are taking advantage of the farmer. By coercion, duress, and undue influence are attempting and actually are either forcing the farmer to give up his necessary farming equipment or force the starvation of the livestock. This Congress should speak up immediately and permit the feed to go out to the livestock and force these mortgagees to release their strangle hold on the farmers, and thus save the remaining livestock industry of the Nation.

Remember, too, that if the livestock or the farmer is permitted to perish because of the inactivity of this Congress, then the Government will be faced with the much greater obligation of supporting by charity the impoverished farmers where their only means of support has been taken away.

Shakespeare said:

> You take my house when you do take the props
> That doth sustain my house; you take my life
> When you do take the means whereby I live.

The Government has already gone to the expense of assembling hay, straw, oats, and corn in every center of the States affected in sufficient quantities to feed the remaining livestock. The farmers have consented to the stock-reduction program of the Department of Agriculture; but for the reasons already stated, the feed remains unused. My warning is that in the bright spring, if rains do come—as they surely will—millions of tons of feed will rot in the depots, while the familiar sight of feeding cattle on the summer grass of the Great Plains area will not be witnessed, and the bleached bones of livestock scattered across the prairies will be the mute testimony of the inhuman conduct of mortgagees permitted by a monumental blunder of the Government.

All I can do now is to hope that this Congress will act without further delay.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. BINDERUP, for today, on account of illness.

Mr. CROSBY, for the balance of the week, on account of illness.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENTS

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following appointments, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of title 34, United States Code, section 1081, the Chair appoints as members of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy the following Members of the House:

Mr. BULWINKLE, Mr. COLE of Maryland, Mr. TOLAN, Mr. REED of New York, and Mr. GUYER.

Pursuant to the provisions of the act of June 10, 1872 (17 Stat. L. 360), the Chair appoints as members of the board of directors of the Columbia Hospital for Women, the following Members of the House:

Mrs. NORTON and Mrs. KAHN.

Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 44, the Chair appoints as members of the Special Committee on Wild Life Conservation to fill existing vacancies thereon the following Members of the House:

Mr. PARSONS, Mr. HILDEBRANDT, Mr. RICHARDS, Mr. ANDRESEN, and Mr. ALLEN.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6:43 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 30, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

170. A letter from the Administrator of the Federal Housing Administration, transmitting the first annual report of the Administration for the period commencing with the approval of the act on June 27, 1934, and ending December 31, 1934 (H. Doc. 88); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

171. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting draft of a proposed bill for the relief of A. Cyril Crilley, assistant trade commissioner, and a special disbursing officer of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, in the matter of a certain expenditure; to the Committee on Claims.

---

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. SABATH: Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders Reorganizations. House Report 35. A preliminary report pursuant to House Resolution 412 (73d Cong.). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries. H. R. 4018. A bill to provide for the investigation, control, and eradication of marine organisms injurious to shellfish in the Atlantic and Gulf States; without amendment (Rept. No. 36). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.
